Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): I do not propose to detain the House for long, but I want to register my objection to the motion, which I find offensive. Opposition Members who vote in favour of it will have different reasons for doing so, but we must deal with the motion on the Order Paper. It is reasonable to recognise that 1688 was a short step on the path to accountability and the right to dislodge the Executive, but that is not what the motion says. The motion states that some sort of millennium was established and that our people have enjoyed constitutional freedoms under the law for 300 years. It is patently offensive to suppose, for example, that the people who lost limbs and lives in the factories during the industrial revolution enjoyed anything at all, especially when their average life expectation was less than 30 years in the huge developing industrial towns in the north, such as Bradford, Manchester and Leeds. The motion will be left behind after all the arguments have gone, and that fact is overlooked.

I do not know the mechanism by which the motion came to the House, but if any Labour Members were involved, the motion should have recognised the years of struggle and bloodshed undergone by ordinary people. The first Factory Act to control the bloodshed among the people who, according to the motion, were enjoying constitutional rights was not introduced until 1802. It was then applied by a venal, corrupt and ineffective magistracy, who owned most of the factories and therefore were not keen to apply the law. The people who looked to the magistrates for the constitutional rights did not receive much consolation.

I am concerned about what the motion says, because it omits any reference to the bloodshed in the factories and the rise of the trade union movement. I will not go into that in detail because my hon. Friends have dealt with it powerfully, but trade unions were developed to protect ordinary men and women, and their families, against the outrages that were visited upon them. The workers and their organisation had no constitutional privileges or rights to enjoy.

It is folly for any hon. Member to talk about constitutional freedoms being enjoyed for 300 years, when in the post-war period we have had the threat of nuclear weapons. What sort of constitutional right have ordinary people over the Prime Minister if, for example, she decides to use Polaris when she receives information from United States-controlled radar installations—and we know how reliable they are—that the Soviet Union is promoting an attack upon us?

The right hon. Lady is organising the building of £11 billion-worth of Trident nuclear weapons. What constitutional rights does the citizenry enjoy to control the Prime Minister in the use of those weapons? The answer is, none at all.

We cannot isolate the motion from the realities. I am not here to get involved in the niceties of Parliament and to rubberstamp motions emerging from some committee. The reality is that our nation is retaining means of mass extermination on a scale that, by some fortunate stroke, has hitherto never been experienced, and is building at a cost of many billions of pounds nuclear weapons which could exterminate even more effectively and efficiently than Polaris.

The whole question of rights over those new weapons of mass extermination is ignored in the motion. It is on that basis that I shall vote against it.

7.50 pm

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): I should like first to apologise to you, Mr. Speaker, and to colleagues of all parties for not having heard all the contributions to the debate. No disrespect was intended. My speech will be brief and I intend to refer only to my amendment, which I wish had been selected.

When I first became a Member of this place, I had no thoughts of tabling amendments mentioning a written constitution and a Bill of Rights. However, my experience of this place—brief though its is—has changed my mind fundamentally on some key constitutional issues. I believe that Parliament, as currently constituted, no longer acts as the main constitutional brake on the Government. We seriously need to consider a major constitutional settlement that would entrench the rights of individual people and define the institutions in our constitution that could defend those rights effectively.

We are meant to be celebrating the 300th anniversary of the Bill of Rights. There are many ways of celebrating. One would be to pickle that Bill of Rights, to put it into aspic and say, "It is a marvellous thing. We should have a drink and a bit of a sing-song." That would be a celebration. However, the people who brought forward that Bill of Rights would expect us to celebrate it in a far more serious way and to review where we have gone in those 300 years and say where we should like to go in the next 300. I fear that if we entrust our civil liberties and the defence of our rights to this Chamber, in 300 years' time we may not be celebrating even those few rights that are enshrined in the 1688-89 settlement.

I therefore put forward some proposals in my amendment. Those proposals do not bear particularly on my constituency. Like many of my hon. Friends, I could repeat the history of the democratic struggle that has taken place in my constituency and area. There are three unmarked graves in a church close to our shire hall in Nottingham. If those three unmarked graves were in a country fighting for its democratic rights in this day and age, they would be shrines. In fact, they are the unmarked, uncelebrated graves of three individuals who were plucked out of a crowd in 1830 and hanged on the steps of the shire hall in Nottingham. They were the victims. They were people who were merely trying to get the right to vote. I could quote many other examples from the Labour history, the trade union struggle and the struggle for the fight to vote in my city, not least the burning down of the famous Nottingham castle. However, that would not get us very far in discussing what I proposed in my amendment.

I suggested first a Bill of Rights to entrench the individual liberties of all citizens, regardless of decisions made in this Chamber. They should be entrenched by a referendum and amended only by a referendum so that, whatever the political complexion of this Chamber, there would always be a marker against which any individual would know his or her rights against our Executive and legislature.

Secondly, I suggested a written constitution so that at any point anyone in our society would know the institutional relationship between the various parts of our constitution, and so that people could make up their own minds about what we were doing and whether we were doing it properly in this Chamber of the House of Commons.

Mr. Winnick: My hon. Friend has referred to a written constitution. He will know that I am critical of certain aspects of that, hence my remarks about three quarters of an hour ago. Why should we believe that a written constitution would give our citizens greater freedom? Would it not take away from this House and give to the courts powers which we should not give away—all the more so, bearing in mind the position with the EEC, which was referred to earlier? Why cannot this Parliament control the Government? Previous Parliaments have done so. Surely it is a question of majority.

Mr. Allen: The courts have that power now, but the citizen has no guide or marker by which to measure any judgments. The citizen cannot say, "This is my inalienable tangible right which I will test against the judgment of any member of the judiciary." If my hon. Friend believes that this place has acted as a defence for the rights of individuals, trade unionists and people who would wish information to be more widely available in our society, he is living in dreamland.

My final point is that this place should ensure that it, rather than any other part of our constitution, becomes the decision-making chamber. That is why I suggest in my amendment the abolition of the House of Lords. That was and remains the policy of my party and should feature in any serious constitutional settlement 300 years after the previous one.

Mr. David Alton (Liverpool, Mossley Hill): I wish to speak only briefly, but want to place on record the reasons why I shall vote against the Humble Address. I shall do so because it is deeply insensitive to the House to pass an address which commemorates in an almost celebratory way an event which, in 1688, led to enormous harm and distress to many people living in these islands. With a family from the west of Ireland, and having seen for myself the ravaged homes, hamlets and small villages which were depopulated as a result of what happened in the period after 1688, I find it difficult to celebrate the tercentenary of those so-called historic events, because for those families they were tragic events. The trouble with motions such as this is that they stir up old memories and hatred. For that reason, the motion is deeply offensive to many of Her Majesty's loyal Catholic subjects. I am surprised that the Government have shown such insensitivity.

I also believe that there is a danger of becoming prisoners of our own history, especially when it is history as selective as that incorporated in the motion. It is absurd to table such a motion without any reference to the events which a number of other hon. Members have touched on.

The period in the aftermath of the war with the French and after the battle of Peterloo is infinitely far more important for our constitutional rights than the battle of Waterloo or 1688. The battle of Peterloo took place on the fields of St. Peter's, outside Manchester, where the reformers demanded suffrage. For me, the Chartist movement, the emancipation of Catholics and Jews, and the anti-slavery movement which was led by William Wilberforce and other Members of this House are the events that we should be celebrating, rather than choosing selective parts of our history as in the Humble Address.

The House will not be surprised that I have another reason for resisting the Humble Address. I personally find it difficult that the greatest right of all—the right to life —is not enshrined in this great celebration of the tercentenary of the events of 1688. Indeed, it is impossible in this House even to bring about a vote on the question of the right to life. In 1948 the United Nations stated that everyone should have the right to life, yet hon. Members are not allowed a vote on that subject because Parliament has become so enfeebled that it will not provide the time necessary to arrive at a conclusion on that question. In these circumstances, there is, therefore, no way that I would be able to support what I regard as a sham.

There is a third reason why I shall vote against the Humble Address. It is because of the way that we run our democracy in this country. It is fraudulent and often corrupt and phoney. Governments can be elected with just one third of the votes and yet receive two thirds of the seats in the House. That we can have a system of government that is so centralist and secretive and so often rides roughshod over the wishes of the people whom we seek to serve is the antithesis of democracy.

While I agree with what the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) said about our system of government being one of which we can be proud, it was E. M. Forster, in his book "Two Cheers for Democracy", who said that only love, the beloved republic, deserves three cheers. Certainly that is true. Democracy, as we experience it in this country today, is highly inadequate. We need a new constitutional settlement which looks again at many of the questions raised during the debate. A proper Bill of Rights, freedom of information legislation, a Select Committee system that is able to hold the Executive accountable, a proper and fair electoral system, a decentralised form of government—those are the developments that we should be looking forward to, instead of simply looking back to a period that does this country no great credit, and is a period of which we should be deeply ashamed.

For those reasons, I certainly cannot support the Humble Address.

Resolved,

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, as follows:

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, in Parliament assembled, having in mind the acceptance by Their Majesties King William and Queen Mary of the Declaration of Rights presented to them on 13th February 1689, and recalling also the Bill of Rights passed by the Parliament of England and the Claim of Right made by the Estates of Scotland for vindicating and asserting the ancient rights and liberties of the people of the two Kingdoms, beg leave to express to Your Majesty our great pleasure in celebrating the tercentenary of these historic events of 1688 and 1689 that established those constitutional freedoms under the law which Your Majesty's Parliament and people have continued to enjoy for three hundred years.

Resolved,

That the said Address be presented to Her Majesty by the whole House.—[Mr. Wakeham.]

Ordered,

That such Members of this House as are of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, do humbly know Her Majesty's Pleasure when She will be attended by this House with the said Address and whether Her Majesty will be Graciously pleased to permit the invited representatives of overseas Parliaments of the Commonwealth to accompany this House in attending Her Majesty.—[Mr. Wakeham.]

8.12 pm

Mr. Michael Mates (Hampshire, East): It cannot often fall to the lot of one Back Bencher to have the good fortune to open two debates in the House in as many months. I am sure that most of my hon. Friends will agree when I say how glad I am that, as I rise for the second time, I do so in an air of considerably less controversy than the last time I found myself opening a debate in this House.

I am grateful to the Liaison Committee for recommending this estimate for debate today and I am extremely grateful to my Committee for the hard work it put in to the report that we published a short while ago and that is relevant to the debate. I must say, having said how grateful I am to it, that I am wondering where its numbers are now. They were due to be here, but perhaps they have heard the sound of my voice for too long in Committee to want to listen to it again. I am also grateful to the Select Committee on Transport, which is chaired by the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall), for its excellent report on the overall state of the merchant fleet. Our report looked only at the defence implications of the decline that has been taking place in that fleet.

"I told you so" is never an edifying remark to make, but where the defence role of merchant shipping is concerned, there must be many people who are qualified to make it, not least our friend and former colleague Sir Edward du Cann. He spoke out on this matter for many years in this House and warned of the consequences of the decline that was taking place. As long ago as 1980, when I was first appointed to the Select Committee on Defence, we voiced our concern about the strategic importance of the British and NATO merchant fleet and the implications of their decline. In the 1983 Parliament, the Defence Committee again and again highlighted the importance of merchant shipping to our defence capability and warned of the possible effect of the crisis then facing our merchant fleet. The Defence Committee's fourth report of this Session appears on the Order Paper today and in it we bring the story up to date. The House will see that we find no reason to come to conclusions any more optimistic than those of our predecessors.

I can be brief in introducing this debate because our views are set out in the report, but I shall pick out some of its themes. First, the fulfilling of the defence requirement for merchant shipping must be set against a background of the continuing decline in the British merchant fleet. As we note in paragraph 13 of our report, the previous Defence Committee took evidence on this subject in 1985 and it put to Ministers the prediction made by the General Council of British Shipping for the following two years. In reply we were told that that prediction was too pessimistic and that the methodology was wrong. However, the decline has continued at pretty much the rate forecast by the General Council of British Shipping. There may be a temporary remission now as the Department of Transport has claimed, but the trend is still downward.

Second—I am happy to say this—although there is little actual shortfall in ships in the categories required by the Ministry of Defence—security considerations prevented us from going into great detail in our report—the squeeze on those assets is inexorable. In paragraphs 40 to 47 we identified the categories in which there are particular or potential problems. They include fishing vessels for mine counter-measures, product tankers, dry cargo freighters, which are being replaced by container ships and which are much less useful and less flexible for carrying military equipment, and, with the advent of the Channel tunnel, roll-on/roll-off ferries.

Third, we are extremely worried that, in a time of tension or war, the military demand on available merchant shipping for the transatlantic reinforcement of Europe, for the reinforcement of Europe from the United Kingdom and for the direct support of the Royal Navy will leave few assets for the task of economic shipping. That would be vital in a period of tension or war and the Merchant Navy would be required to bring in the supplies to keep this country going and our people alive.

Elsewhere in our report we draw attention to potential manning problems. The availability of British personnel to man ships used for British defence purposes is most important. However, not only is the number of British seafarers declining steadily, but the numbers joining the Merchant Navy are lower than ever before. We examined that matter in paragraphs 54 to 60 of our report and we find that trend extremely worrying. We also point out that other NATO countries would have difficulties in finding the ships that they would have to provide and we expressed our surprise that NATO has not taken more vigorous action about such trends before now.

Although many of our conclusions relate to the needs during a period of tension or war, there is a regular requirement for shipping for use in exercises. I do not believe that I am the only person who was disappointed that, for the major tri-service exercise, Purple Warrior, which took place in late 1987, the Ministry of Defence had to charter Danish vessels, ally in NATO though Denmark is. As we say in the report, it would surely have been of greater benefit to our long-term national security if British shipping earmarked for requisition in conflict had been chartered for that major exercise, even if the cost had been slightly greater.

Since the Defence Select Committee in the last Parliament began looking in detail at the defence requirements for merchant shipping there has been some recognition within the Government of the practical problems of providing the right shipping in the right place at the right time should the worst happen and we were faced with a major crisis or hostilities. I am not sure how far that realism has progressed. In the course of our inquiry we asked the Department of Transport what would happen if a foreign owner of a United Kingdom registered vessel trading outside NATO waters refused to make his ship available. Somewhat to our surprise witnesses told us that they envisaged that the Royal Navy could be called on for assistance—but I think that by that stage the Royal Navy would have a few other tasks on is plate.

It is not our task as a Defence Committee to make comments or recommendations on ways of reversing the decline in the merchant fleet. However, what worries us is that there appear to be aspects of Government policy that lack drive and, above all, co-ordination. That is why we repeat in paragraph 73 the recommendation of our predecessors that these things should be co-ordinated and directed by the highest level of Government. Our views can be summed up in the words of paragraph 66 of the report and I can do no better than to end my remarks by quoting it:

> "The ready availability of adequate merchant shipping resources represents a very significant element in the make-up of deterrence. The lack of such resources represents a grave deficiency in our ability to deter. The availability of merchant shipping for defence purposes is governed by three key factors —the number of UK flagged ships, their accessibility when they are needed and the availability of a pool of British seafarers to man them."

We believe there are grounds for concern on all three counts, and in asking the Government to examine closely what we have said I hope that these concerns will be addressed, because, although there is no crisis yet, the trend is the most worrying aspect of all. The last thing I want is to return to the House this time next year and say that there are areas in which we simply cannot do the task.

Mr. John McWilliam (Blaydon): I am grateful to the hon. Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) for his speech. I also thank him, as a member of his Committee, for his humour, forbearance and integrity as we went through these matters.

This is yet another unanimous report from our Select Committee. That is important because it means that we are interested in the facts, rather than what some of us might wish—or others might not—to be the case. Robert Burns said:

> "Facts are chiels that winna ding."

Roughly translated, that means that one cannot ignore the facts when they exist.

One of our problems was getting at the facts. Paragraph 8 of the report, dealing with statistics for the merchant fleet, shows the problems that arise because of different statistical bases and different ways of including or excluding vessels. For example, I fail to see the relevance of including dredgers in ships available to us in times of war. Perhaps we shall need to dredge out a harbour, but presumably we keep our harbours well dredged out now so as to get near them.

What are the facts? The Select Committee on Transport was told that there were 410 United Kingdom registered merchant ships of more than 500 gross registered tonnes. But we were given the figure of 906. That poses an immediate problem.

What about the sort of ships that we want, and the roles we expect them to play? First, there is transatlantic reinforcement from Europe. We have a 30-day commitment to such reinforcement, and I shall return to that issue. Then there is reinforcement of continental Europe from the United Kingdom. Most of the American forward-base supplies are in this country and must be moved from here to continental Europe. Next comes direct support of the Royal Navy. There are few ships equipped to do that—there are some ro-ros and other bits and pieces that could be used, but some of them are not up to the standards that we would expect, for various reasons. There is also the category of economic shipping. In a crisis, this country would still have to exist.

We tried to deal with all these problems, but our considerations were not helped by two things. One was the lack of an agreed criterion of which ships to count; the other, I am sorry to say, was the problem of calculations about attrition. We have tried to discover whether we can have a support convoy system of the sort that we should have for reinforcement across the Atlantic. According to the MOD, we will not. It is calculated that somehow or other all Warsaw pact hunter-killer attack submarines will be bottled up to the north of Iceland, Scotland and Norway. That is a difficult argument to sustain, given that they are not all there anyway. In any sudden period of tension there is no reason why they should suddenly all head for home and then be bottled up. The logical conclusion is that that will not happen. So the sort of attrition figures that we are dealing with were quite different from those that the MOD seems to be considering.

We are worried about what is happening, because the numbers do not add up. It seems that categories of shipping such as stern trawlers, deep-sea trawlers and oil-rig supply vessels can be used fairly quickly in emergency roles. But we are worried because we do not have the right number of vessels. The number of bulk carriers that we have seems to keep falling. In the report, we make the point that the slowdown in that fall appears to be more of a remission than a cure of the trend. I come from Tyneside and I can say that there is no sign of the sort of vessels that we need being built, or of the sort of facilities that we need to build them being maintained. We must keep that clearly in mind when we are considering this report.

It gives me no great pleasure to talk about this subject. I was educated at Leith academy, which was established in 1452 for the education of the sons of mariners, and it taught the skills of mathematics and navigation. It fed candidates for deck officers, cadets, and candidates for marine radar, radio and electronic officers to the nautical college. My school is still there but Leith nautical college is not, and the manpower that we need is not being trained. We are dangerously short of the skilled seamen and officers that we need to man our ships in the sort of situation that we are talking about.

Our merchant marine has served us well through two world wars. In both wars, the convoy system was said to be unnecessary but suddenly it was necessary. If there was any major conflagration in central Europe it would be necessary again. The same mistakes have been made again and again and we should learn from our history. We are told that everything is all right and that somehow or other we will have the ships. But somehow or other is not good enough.

I repeat the famous words by Robert Burns:

> "Facts are chiels that winna ding."

The facts are there, and it is up to the Minister to assure us that the Government are taking active steps to ensure that we will have the capability to sustain on a conventional basis any future war in central Europe. If the Government cannot say that, then they are admitting something that they have not admitted before, that they have given up any idea of a conventional war being sustainable in western Europe and would have to move very early to the nuclear alternative.

I have two daughters who I hope will raise their own families. I hope that my daughters' children will have families and I find that nuclear alternative deeply disturbing. Because of our inactivity, the nuclear threshold has obviously come down. I want to hear from the Minister what he proposes to do to raise the nuclear threshold so that I can be confident that my children and the children of other hon. Members can look forward to the future. On the basis of the information in front of us, I have no such confidence, and I look to the Minister for reassurance.

8.33 pm

Mr. Ian Bruce (Dorset, South): I asked a question in the House the other day and declared an interest because my brother works in a nuclear power station. After all the trouble I have taken to try to get into The Daily Telegraph I suddenly found myself in the Commons sketch column. I shall declare an interest at the beginning of this speech because for five days prior to arriving here on Monday I was the guest of Her Majesty's Navy bouncing up and down in the north Atlantic. I enjoyed some very good food and got to know a little more about the Navy.

One of the great advantages of those five days was that I had to eat my meals with the officers and ratings and during our off-duty hours we spent much time talking about all the aspects of present day naval warfare. One of the most gripping things we learnt about was the worry of the Navy that our merchant fleet may not be up to the job if there is a war.

We have a standing Navy and it is an expensive asset for us to maintain. It is essential that it be maintained but there is a certain amount of the chicken and egg argument about it. The Navy has a clear role to protect merchant shipping, but what is its role if we have no merchant shipping to protect? Our Navy cannot do its job unless it has merchant vessels to call on. The Falklands war clearly demonstrated that the flexibility of being able to call upon our merchant fleet was essential for prosecuting that war.

As we see security in Europe becoming stronger and the threat of a land war reducing, we have to take into account the fact that we might have to use our naval resources and our Merchant Navy in a peacekeeping role in areas where we would not expect to use it. Our Merchant Navy would be essential. The excellent report gives clear figures about the reinforcement of our NATO commitment and about getting American forces to Europe. Many people who know about the vast amount of money spent by the Americans on their forces forget that 90 per cent. or perhaps more of the manpower available to fight a land war in Europe comes from European nations. Everything else that the Americans would have to bring into such a war would have to come by air or by sea. We would be in an extremely difficult position if we did not have merchant vessels available to do that.

Merchant vessels have military roles. We saw that in the Falklands war because one of our aircraft carriers had been a container ship and it worked very well. Most of the systems that are now being supplied to the Navy are in boxes. That applies to missile, radar and communication systems which are often designed to use a container that will fit on a ship and give it the flexibility to play its role in a specific aspect of our defence.

For many years the merchant service has provided our basic manpower. The hon. Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) spoke about the role of the merchant shipping fleet in training the manpower that we need. The town of Weymouth is in my constituency and contains an enormous number of people with merchant shipping experience. Over the years many of them have been made redundant and have had to find other careers, other ways of earning a living. Their children are no longer being sent to naval colleges and that resource of merchant shipping experience will not last much longer.

We have to start to think again about where we go from here. Our merchant fleet is depleted and we must proceed to a healthier position. We seem to have abandoned the idea that the United Kingdom will ever again be a great shipbuilding nation. Many products of Britain demonstrate that with the right economic climate and improved productivity we can start to compete with other nations. I would never say that we should close the door on any industry and would welcome a regime under which shipbuilding could start to grow again. Employment is important and shipping in all its forms can have a valuable effect on our economy.

On the Front Bench there are two excellent Ministers from the Department of Transport and the Ministry of Defence, but it is deficient in that there is no one on it from the Treasury. Tiny little non-states in most parts of the world have provided tax regimes to persuade our ship owners to re-register their ships. Surely it cannot be beyond the wit of the Treasury to work out a scheme by which we can bring those merchant vessels back under our own flag. It is noticeable that the decline has stopped temporarily. Perhaps that is because the Armilla patrol is doing a successful job of protecting British ships in the Gulf and it therefore becomes a plus factor to have a ship with a British flag on it. The Navy depends on a merchant fleet to support it, and that merchant fleet appreciates having the best Navy, man for man, in the world. We should be asking the Chancellor of the Exchequer to think seriously, before the next Budget, about what he can do to bring vessels back under our flag.

The cost of light dues and of using United Kingdom ports needs to be considered. Opposition Members, on their packed Benches, may not like me saying this, but I believe that the national dock labour scheme prevents us from being as economic as we should be in our ports. I do not want to attack the ports. I want more people to be employed in Weymouth port, instead of the dozen or so who are currently employed there. We want to see more people employed in the ports and I want to see the removal of, or a great change in, the national dock labour scheme.

I have touched on a number of subjects in a random way, but I believe that there is a future for our merchant fleet. We must always take into account the fact that our merchant fleet is part of the defence of the realm. We are willing to pay a high price for the defence of the realm and we cannot do that job without proper merchant shipping.

Mrs. Ray Michie (Argyll and Bute): I am glad to have the opportunity to contribute to the debate. I wish to commend the Chairman and his Committee on the production of the report.

The Government are now highly vulnerable, not only because of the rundown of the merchant fleet and the decline of the shipbuilding industry, but also because recent criticism from the Select Committee on Defence and others relating to the fragile size and preparedness of the Royal Navy surplus fleet means that the cumulative effect has worrying strategic implications. It is extraordinary that a Conservative Government should have neglected a defence issue of this nature. There is not much point in having a seamless robe of deterrence if the conventional end, like the merchant fleet aspect, begins to look increasingly threadbare.

A number of Select Committee reports chronicle the worsening situation. We know from the last war that the role of the merchant fleet has been and is vital in transporting essential materials, such as food and supplies, to our country. Now, as part of Britain's role in the NATO defence plan, it would carry divisions of the United States army to Europe. Both those operations would have to take place at the same time and it is difficult to imagine how that double task could be achieved, given the drastic decline in United Kingdom flagged vessels.

One of the dangers with the decline of the fleet is that it weakens the potential to deter. Not only do we need a good many merchant vessels and a good many trained seafarers to sustain the country, but, just as important, we need to convince a potential enemy that we can sustain a conventional war of any length. As has been said, it is now highly doubtful that the United Kingdom could mount a Falklands-style operation again. The Conservative Government take great pride in their strong stand on deterrence in nuclear matters, yet they appear at best slipshod in naval deterrence. The Soviet Union does not need to be able to read semaphore to observe the United Kingdom merchant fleet weakening fast. The Government appear content to shrug their shoulders indifferently. That is simply not good enough.

There is also a shortfall in special categories of shipping, for example, fishing vessels for mine countermeasures. The decline in the fishing fleet has resulted in a shortage of large stern trawlers available for that purpose. I believe that there are now only about five such vessels. Even the decline of the fishing fleet has a knock-on effect on our defence capabilities. I have a particular interest in that because, in my constituency, we have an excellent fishing fleet and we build fishing vessels.

The far-flung nature of the Merchant Navy means that a numerical sufficiency of ships is not necessarily the practical and accessible number of ships. The scope for double-counting the availability of a dwindling fleet is considerable. The demands on merchant shipping for transatlantic and economic shipping, as well as for defence purposes, would lead to impossible competition for the same resources. How can we easily get back ships, many of which would need refitting, from the other side of the world and make them available for defence purposes?

[Mrs. Ray Michie]

The same applies to the availability of men to man ships in an emergency. The report warns of a continuing decline in the recruitment of new cadets and trainees. Trained seafarers are vital because foreign crews cannot be a substitute for United Kingdom personnel in a time of strife. It would be simply impossible to train large numbers of United Kingdom seamen to man requisitioned ships, if they could be obtained, to deal with an emergency.

Hon. Members have talked about a shortage of skills, but that is not universal throughout the United Kingdom. I know very well that there is not a shortage of skills and knowledge and that there is an honourable tradition of seafaring in the Merchant Navy in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland. During the last election, I came across many men who had been laid off and lost their jobs in the Merchant Navy. It was with great sadness that they came to me and said, "What are the Government doing to our once proud merchant fleet?"

The number of United Kingdom flagged ships has declined rapidly, leaving a smaller and smaller pool on which to call in times of emergency. It is a sad story. There has been a decline from over 1,600 ships of 50 million deadweight tonnes in 1975 to no more than 645 ships of less than 17 million deadweight tonnes owned by British companies at the end of March this year.

There is no point in the Government waving the flag over national defence when there are now so few ships sailing with the flag at their masthead. Virtually nothing has been done to encourage investment in shipping. The need for a proper fleet would give our shipbuilding industry a much-needed boost.

Although the Government's help for training and repatriation of crews and the concession on income tax for seafarers serving on ships trading largely outside the United Kingdom are welcome, it is all too little and could be too late.

The Government should consider, in conjunction with the Department of Transport, the need for a Merchant Navy strategic reserve contract under which owners would receive substantial compensation and a crew-related allowance payable in respect of each British seafarer employed by United Kingdom owners regardless of flag. Such measures are needed if the fleet is not to shrivel into insignificance, or at least to a level where it is impossible to provide the essential requirements.

The real question is whether it matters to Britain that there should be a significant British presence in the world's merchant shipping fleets of the next decade. If the answer is yes, it lies within the Government's influence. The Government's failure to act could lead to Britain's failure in time of war.

8.50 pm

The Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Ian Stewart): The House is grateful to the Select Committee on Defence for the valuable report that we are debating this evening. I should like to add my appreciation on behalf of the Government for the work that has gone into producing such a useful document.

The report rightly draws attention to anxiety over the consequences of the decline in the size of the British merchant fleet in recent years. That, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) has said, has also been the subject of a recent report of the Select Committee on Transport.

The Government will give detailed written responses shortly to both reports. I do not want to anticipate the details of those, but rather to cover in general terms some of the main issues that those reports raised, particularly concentrating on that which is covered by the title of the Defence Select Committee's report—the defence requirement for merchant shipping.

My hon. Friend said that he recognised that there is no crisis yet. The Government recognise the importance of the subject and we are determined to ensure that there will not be a crisis.

Before I go any further, let me respond on one point to the hon. Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam). He suggested that there are no plans for a system to protect transatlantic reinforcement and resupply as necessary. I should make it clear that there are well-developed plans for naval control of shipping which are regularly exercised and they include the use of convoys when required.

Mr. McWilliam: I am particularly grateful to the Minister for making that point because that was not the point made by the Ministry of Defence spokesmen to the Select Committee when they were specifically asked about that very question. If the hon. Gentleman is now saying that there are plans for convoy systems, suitable escorts and the kind of anti-submarine measures that need to be taken, I am sure that the House will be grateful, but so far that evidence has not been given to us.

Mr. Stewart: I am glad to have been able to reassure the hon. Gentleman. Although one cannot go into details in such matters, the plans that I have described are in place.

The Royal Navy and the Merchant Navy have a long history of working together and that is a two-way process. The Navy has an honourable tradition of maintaining the freedom of our ships to trade around the world while our merchant ships have invariably played a vital role in supplementing and supporting the Royal Navy in times of war. I want to say a quick word on the first part of that two-way process following the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce).

Since 1980, the Armilla ships have accompanied a great number of British ships through the Strait of Hormuz and in the Gulf. The House may be interested in the latest figures. In 1987 there were 405 movements of British shipping in that area accompanied by Royal Navy ships. In 1988 so far there have been over 350 movements, so we are already nearly up to the total of the whole of last year.

During that time British warships have accompanied about twice as many merchant ships as those of all other Western countries with navies in the Gulf put together. That is a record of which we can be proud. I should like to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation, having visited them on occasions, of the devoted and skilful service of our sailors in that difficult and dangerous task.

Let me now deal with the availability of merchant shipping for defence needs. That has two clear dimensions —first, the direct requirements of the United Kingdom and, secondly, the collective NATO responsibilities which, generally speaking, is the transatlantic dimension of the question.

In crisis or war, merchant shipping has four main roles, which I shall list, not in order of importance—first, to support the reinforcement of Europe from the United Kingdom; secondly, to support the operations of the Royal Navy; thirdly, together with our NATO allies to assist in the transatlantic reinforcement of Europe by the United States; and, fourthly, to resupply the civil economy of the European countries.

I emphasise first the direct needs of the United Kingdom, because the Ministry of Defence is primarily concerned with the first two of those tasks in that context. We identify the military requirements and the Department of Transport takes the lead in identifying and making available civil shipping to meet those requirements. The other two requirements are collective NATO tasks across the Atlantic.

I refute what the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) said about there being insufficient ships in the British merchant fleet or that the Government were not concerned with that. The opposite is the case. Of course, the decline of the British merchant fleet has been a matter of anxiety to us all. But let me stress at the outset that at no time has the supply of ships fallen below that needed to meet British national defence needs. In general, for the reinforcement of Europe from the United Kingdom and the support of the operations of the Royal Navy, we have a comfortable margin of vessels available from the United Kingdom and dependent territories. However, I accept that the margin is tight in some categories of vessels.

For example, we are closely monitoring the position of cross-Channel ferries. I agree with the Select Committee that cross-Channel ferries will continue to be important for reinforcement planning. But I remind the House that our NATO partners have large, modern roll-on/roll-off fleets which will be able to give assistance and we would not have to rely solely on our own resources.

It was suggested that there was something wrong in having a continental ferry or two involved in the Purple Warrior exercise rather than our own. The reason for that was that our ferries were all busily occupied, but that was not the case with all the continental ones.

Mr. Martin O'Neill (Clackmannan): I was interested in the Minister's comment concerning exercise Purple Warrior and the reasons why British ships were not used. Does he deny that one of the other reasons was that British ferry companies' charges were too high?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, because the reason was that British ship operators in that category were not interested in offering their ships at an economic price. They were already engaged on satisfactory tasks of another kind, whereas there was a surplus among some continental countries, which we then drew upon.

Mr. O'Neill: The price was too dear.

Mr. Stewart: No, I refute the hon. Member's remark. If he thinks that we should pay whatever rate is necessary for British ships that are fully occupied, against the availability of foreign ships from NATO countries, I fundamentally disagree. That would not be in our interests.

I turn to the subject of fishing vessels, of which there are now relatively few suitable for mine counter-measures. We expect to be able to use North sea support vessels, whose adaptation for that purpose is feasible, and of which adequate numbers are available. Transatlantic reinforcement and civil resupply is a matter of some concern to us. It is a problem that affects the NATO Alliance in general and is not specifically British. The number of product tankers and large bulk cargo ships is particularly tight. NATO is currently examining ways of increasing the availability of vessels for transatlantic reinforcement, particularly in the early stages.

The report notes that at a time of war NATO nations would pool vessels of more than 1,600 gross registered tonnes for civil resupply of food and raw materials. In many cases, other countries have not assessed their wartime needs. However, resulting from a British initiative, NATO has now embarked on a study of the supply and demand for civil resupply, and I am glad that it has done so. That study is designed to establish the extent, if any, of the shortage of civil resupply vessels, and I hope that it will be completed by the end of next year.

In addition to NATO's specific study on that subject, it also has a planning board for ocean shipping that keeps regularly under review assets available for Atlantic reinforcement and for fuel supplies to Europe on a continuing basis. I do not for one moment wish to belittle the problems posed by the merchant fleet's decline. We all want to see an industry that is prosperous and that can meet our needs in an emergency or in war. However, I wish to stress three points. First, the phenomenon is a general Western one, and the problems posed by it are NATO-wide and are not confined to this country. Secondly, although we must not minimise the problem, we must not exaggerate it. There are signs that we have been experiencing not a secular, long-term trend of decline but the reverse slope of a considerable build-up of tonnages that occurred a decade or more ago, which created unmanageable overcapacity in the industry in recent years.

Recently, there have been encouraging signs in regard to the British-owned fleet. One key event for the shipping industry in 1987 was, in the words of the director general of the General Council of British Shipping,

> "The stabilisation of the size of the British-owned fleet of trading vessels after many years of decline."

Within the overall figures, there has been a marked shift between registers, but in the short-term at least there are other indications that the United Kingdom-owned fleet will continue at roughly the same level, although not necessarily on the same registers. The British fleet is now slimmer, but I have no doubt that it is also more efficient. Recently, certain United Kingdom companies have been showing their confidence by placing orders for new ships to be registered in the United Kingdom, or elsewhere in the British registry system. In 1987, new orders by tonnage were higher than in 1986, and they rose again sharply in the first quarter of 1988. There has also been secondhand buying since the turn of the year.

Perhaps the most encouraging sign of all is the movement in freight rates over the past two years. At the bottom of the cycle two years ago, at the end of the first half of 1986, the composite index stood at 85. By the end of 1986 it had risen to 95, and after the first half of 1987 it stood at 131. By the end of last year the index had increased to 176, which was no less than twice the level it had been 18 months previously. The figures now available for the first quarter of 1988 show that the index has risen to 234, which is more than 30 per cent. up again on last year's figures.

[Mr. Stewart]

I strongly reject the suggestion that the Government have not given, or are not giving, enough priority to these issues. Let me pick up a point made in paragraph 73 of the report. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made it clear in an answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) a week or so ago that she personally has been examining regularly the implications of the decline of the British merchant fleet.

We cannot simply encourage shipowners to invest in or retain uneconomic tonnage; that would only aggravate the problem. But we have done many other things. We are negotiating agreements with "flag of convenience" states to minimise any legal difficulties in obtaining use of British-owned vessels on their registers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport announced this very afternoon that we have signed a memorandum of understanding with the Bahamas under which the Bahamas agree to allow British ships to be made available to Her Majesty's Government in the event of crisis and war, and that is an important step. We have also negotiated comprehensive agreements for access to smaller ships such as coasters owned by our NATO allies, which might be needed at short notice.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor, far from being unmindful of this matter, announced in the Budget that, in the case of ship chartering, the business expansion scheme limit on the finance that can be raised by a company in any one year will be increased from £500,000 to £5 million. We now propose that that higher limit should be extended to companies operating their own ships.

In addition, we have developed comprehensive war risk insurance arrangements for ships on both British and foreign registers. Such arrangements would encourage neutral states in particular to trade with the United Kingdom and other NATO allies under the threat of war or in time of hostilities. All those measures should help with the availability of vessels.

Mr. Terence Higgins (Worthing): Will my hon. Friend comment on the extent of subsidies provided by other EEC countries? As those countries are constantly complaining in other contexts about the evils of subsidies, why can we not take positive and definite action to speed matters up? The delay is not tolerable.

Mr. Stewart: I am fully aware of the point that my right hon. Friend has made. I have to say, in the presence of my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport, that this is a matter for his Department rather than mine, but if unfair competition can be demonstrated we shall want to pursue it.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith (Wealden): As the Minister for Public Transport is present, perhaps he will tell us later, if he cannot do so now, what, if any, representations have been made on the point raised by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins).

Mr. Stewart: My hon. Friend tells me that we must have specific facts on which to base our judgments, and detailed information is difficult to come by. I have no doubt, however, that my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport would more than welcome any further information that would enable the matter to be followed up.

The question of crews and manpower has already been raised. As the Committee's report acknowledges, we have taken useful measures in the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 to assist with the cost of training and repatriation. We are also setting up a Merchant Navy reserve with a potential membership of up to 5,000, which we hope will come into being next year.

Since the Defence Committee published its report we have announced an important change in the foreign earnings deduction for tax purposes, which should help both seafarers and shipowners. It will come up next week when the Finance Bill goes on Report. We broadly estimate that it would exempt another 7,000 deep seafarers from tax, making 11,000 exempt in all. It would be equivalent to up to 15 per cent. of crew costs, which should help to ease pressures on shipping companies' operating costs, making it more competitive for them to operate ships from the United Kingdom and to employ United Kingdom crews.

Let us not forget that, despite the decline in recent years, there are about 35,000 British seafarers—more than half the size of the sea-going and land-based manpower of the Royal Navy.

The message is clear. The Government take seriously the implications for defence of the decline that has taken place in the merchant fleet, but there is no cause for despondency. As a result of the measures that we have already taken, the industry is in better shape than it has been for some time. Our national defence requirements certainly can be met. We are in the lead in addressing the problems in the context of the wider NATO Alliance.

I welcome the report. If I have any general criticism of it, I think that the Committee underestimates the potential impact of the many measures that we have already taken, once they are fully in operation. In addition, it is clear that since the Committee took its evidence and prepared its report, there have been further accumulating signs to suggest that the shipping industry is beginning to pull out of the trough of the mid-1980s.

In paragraph 14 of the report, the Committee states:

> "we suggest it would be premature to regard the arrest in the decline as anything other than a temporary remission."

With the new information that is now available, especially the remarkable figures on freight rates that I have quoted, there are grounds for believing that that may be too pessimistic an assessment.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East asked us to look closely at the problems described in his report. I can assure him that we have done, and we shall continue to do so. But I also hope that the measures already taken will serve to reassure him of the Government's commitment to ensure that the concerns that he and others have expressed are not realised.

9.11 pm

Mr. Martin O'Neill (Clackmannan): It is an unhappy coincidence that we are debating a report on the merchant fleet's contribution to our national defences on a day when many of the ships are co-operating with the Royal Navy and the Fleet Air Arm in a humanitarian exercise in the North sea. That merely serves to underline the close co-operation between our merchant marine and all the services that we have at our disposal in peace and in war.

The Chairman of the Select Committee, in his characteristically helpful manner to the Government, glided over some of the more critical elements in the Committee's report. Certainly he did not quote some of the paragraphs containing criticisms that might be more difficult for the Minister to wriggle out of.

Nevertheless, I wish to pay tribute to the hon. Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) and his colleagues for producing yet another frank, useful, constructively critical report on the defence of this country under the stewardship of the Minister and his colleagues. We owe them a debt for the manner in which they addressed the problem, which enables us to consider matters systematically this evening.

It is broadly agreed that the purposes of a merchant fleet in respect of defence are fourfold: the transatlantic reinforcement of Europe, the reinforcement of continental Europe from the United Kingdom, the direct support of the Royal Navy and economic shipping—the civil traffic which brings fuel and supplies to the United Kingdom. Some of those involve the use of the same craft, so we have to be very careful to avoid the overlap of competing claims on our resources.

The report, in setting out those tasks and analysing the effectiveness of our capability to meet them, has served to underline what many of us have spoken about in defence debates and service debates generally during the past few years. The Chairman of the Select Committee paid tribute to one of his former colleagues, a former Chairman of the 1922 Committee, who repeatedly came back to these matters in his capacity as chairman of the all-party maritime group.

It is no consolation to read in 1988 a re-run of what we said in 1983 or 1985. Paragraph 70 sums up concisely what many of us feel when it states:

> "The optimism of the ... official evidence to our predecessors has been demonstrated to have been unjustified; in fact, the 'worst case' forecasts about the likely size of the UK merchant fleet in the late 1980s have been realised."

The report outlines the confusion both in the Ministry of Defence and between the MOD and the Department of Transport about how many ships we have available. The much-criticised fiddling of unemployment statistics seems nothing compared with the mess that the Government have got themselves into on counting ships. I do not know whether it is because of the movement of ships or because people get seasick when they think about them, but they certainly seem incapable of finding a basis for comparison. Within the confusion there may be some method in the madness.

In February 1988 the Transport Select Committee was told that there were 410 ships, but by May the figure had decreased to 402—hardly bearing out the assertion that the decline had been arrested. In May 1988, the MOD told the Committee that the number was not 410 or 402, but 906. However, when we look at this more carefully—the forensic skills of the Committee must be praised—we find that the reason for the difference is that different criteria were used. The Department of Transport had included only the trading elements, while the Ministry of Defence had included United Kingdom-registered non-trading craft in excess of 500 gross registered tonnes.

Until 1986 the weight threshold was 1,000 gross registered tonnes, but in 1987 and 1988 the threshold was not 1,000, nor even 500, but 300 gross registered tonnes. The Minister did not touch on the reasons for the confusion and I hope that when he has had more time to think up a reply to the Committee we shall receive an adequate response, not only about fiddling the figures, but about the clear attempt to distort the statistics and to fool the Committee—an exercise in which the Government and their officials have singularly failed.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Naturally we shall produce the explanation which the hon. Gentleman seeks. But if figures are requested by a Committee, they are given in the context in which they are asked. There is no difference between the figures understood by the Ministry of Defence and the Department of Transport. A problem arises from the disaggregation of figures into small groups because the Ministry of Defence looks not only at the total number of ships, but at the number of ships in a particular category to deal with a particular task. The information that the hon. Gentleman seeks about the reconciliation of these figures will be available.

Mr. O'Neill: I am grateful to the Minister, but if we were to look at each category, we would end up with the same story—one of decline and confusion. I shall not delay the House. Suffice it to say that it is nothing short of criminal for the Government to seek to inflate figures by including craft which are either inappropriate for defence purposes or are already committed to naval use, such as the 38 royal fleet auxiliary craft. Little wonder that there is a note of desperation in paragraph 31 of the report, which says that there is a > "need for clear understanding and a consistent approach in the use of statistics."

That is what the Committee said. The confusion over the use of shipping is even more serious when we realise that transatlantic and economic shipping, both of which are critical, require the same product tankers.

Paragraph 38 of the report states:

> "it must be apparent that once the UK had fulfilled its commitment to provide transatlantic shipping, the number of UK-flagged vessels available for civil resupply would be minimal."

The report identifies other areas of concern with which hon. Members have dealt, such as the dire shortage of large stern trawlers for mine counter-measures and the problems caused by the fact that all available craft are accounted for by the Armilla patrol. The Minister has the support of all hon. Members when he pays tribute to the effective role that the Armilla patrol plays in accompanying ships in very dangerous waters. I use the word accompanying, which the Minister used, I am pleased to note, but which has slipped out of the Prime Minister's vocabulary. The conditions for the men are very uncomfortable and trying and the Opposition are happy to join the Minister in paying tribute to them.

The Minister should have told us what he believed to be the significance of the Committee's suggestion about the possibility of entering into some understanding with the Norwegian navy to see whether training and practice facilities could be established for existing support craft in the North sea. As I have said, they are playing a sterling role in tragic circumstances. I hope that the Minister will address that problem because it seems, sadly, that the Armilla patrol will be in the Gulf for some considerable time. It would be a dereliction of duty by the Government if they did not explore other opportunities to provide our merchant sailors with proper training in mine counter-measures as soon as possible, not least because if something happened while the Armilla patrol continued in the Gulf, we would have no mine counter-measure facilities available to us in the short term.

[Mr. O'Neill]

The number of product tankers of between 2,000 and 60,000 deadweight tonnes declined by 55 per cent. from 1984 to 1986. Most seriously for the actions that we have in mind, when we study the report and consider the work to be done by product tankers of around 20,000 dead weight tonnes we find that that is where the decline has been greatest. Those tankers were most valuable at the time of the Falklands. That is the critical size of craft about which we have most cause for anxiety and I hope that the Government will address that problem.

We can be more hopeful about cruisers. Shell, one of the main owners of cruisers, has retained all-British crews, although BP has crews with some non-British nationals. The question of the dry cargo freights is very serious. We have the critical problem of transporting large and heavy military equipment, which does not fit easily into containers and the modular arrangements that are part and parcel of container ships. We may need more craft to transport the equipment that has to be brought across the Atlantic, and it will take some time for those craft to be adapted for that purpose.

The Minister spoke about cross-Channel ferries and said that we would have access to a number of foreign ferries; that may be so. He should have spoken about the fears expressed about the decline in the number of craft that will result from the completion of the Channel tunnel. Although we have access to craft in the Channel and in Europe, where our allies are close by, there is the vexed problem of the location of many craft throughout the world. The hon. Member for Hampshire, East referred to that problem.

About 35 per cent. of United Kingdom mainland registered shipping is beneficially owned abroad. When asked how these ships would be brought back, one of the Minister's hapless officials—I choose my words carefully —who is a deputy secretary, said:

> "It would depend on where the ship was, but no doubt the Royal Navy would be called upon to assist."

I can imagine the Royal Navy being rather busy doing other things at that time, especially if its ships were in inconvenient locations in other parts of the world. That does not seem to have been at the forefront of that official's mind when answering questions. I hope that when the Minister gets around to reading the report—which, God forbid, the same official may produce—he will look at that comment and ensure that we are given a better answer.

We shall leave aside the images of the British Navy commandeering ships in foreign ports and acting in a way that some Governments would consider near-piracy. The most serious issue is probably the location of our crews. In the last Defence Question Time but one, the Secretary of State for Defence admitted in answer to my question that this was probably the single most pressing problem. Estimates have shown that in recent years there has been a 50 per cent. drop in the number of officers and a 42 per cent. drop in the number of ratings. More serious is the information that the number of cadets decreased from 5,197 in 1981 to 727 in 1986 and that last year only 180 people joined the service for training. Unless there is a dramatic reversal in the medium and long term, there will be insufficient numbers to man a much reduced fleet. The Defence Committee makes that point. The facts are incontrovertible.

I welcome the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act and the target of 350 cadets per annum. The support to be given for that training is to be applauded, but we shall have to ensure that it is enough. We must take account of the point made in paragraph 56 of the Committee's report that, as long as a career in the Merchant Navy is seen as unattractive, there is little likelihood of an increase in numbers. It is not enough to provide more money; there has to be a major selling job. Some parts of the country have long Merchant Navy traditions, and the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) paid tribute to her constituents. Many people joined the Merchant Navy because there was little else for them to do in their part of the world. We all know that unemployment has traditionally been the best recruiting sergeant. In the 1990s, as the dip in the birth rate in the 1970s and early 1980s is reflected, there will be a demand for youth labour. There may not be the present level of youth unemployment. It will be incumbent on ship owners to provide much more attractive conditions in terms not only of the image of the Merchant Navy but of the profession's career structure.

Many British ships are crewed by non-British nationals —people from the far east, including Hong Kong, and from Comecon countries. Those men may not, to say the least, be depended upon in a time of conflict. It is dangerous to assume that those men will go to sea and wish to fight on our behalf. I would like to think that they will, but that is not a calculation that we can necessarily make. After 1997, people from Hong Kong will no longer be citizens of the British Commonwealth. That matter must be dealt with seriously and carefully and I do not believe that the Merchant Shipping Act and the changes in taxation will necessarily solve it.

We can see from paragraph 62 of the report that it came as a surprise to the Committee

> "that it has taken so long for the Atlantic Alliance, and in particular the United Kingdom with its long maritime tradition, to recognise a grave and worsening defect in strategic capability."

The Government's proposals are not so radically different from those that Ministers and officials offered the Committee. I say that not because I wish to carp and criticise, but because I believe that the Government would be deluding themselves if they considered that their proposals would make that much difference. The Committee said:

> "they offer only marginal prospects for improving the situation."

The Minister's additional proposals do not go anywhere near as far to deal with the problem.

The Committee has attacked the optimism that has been described as demonstrably unjustified. It also noted that the worst case scenarios have been realised. The measure of the Committee's despair was shown by the fact that, in extremis, it turned to the Prime Minister to take charge. However, the fox has been shot on this occasion, because we have been told that the Prime Minister has been keeping an eye on it and that it has been one of her major concerns. She can barely sleep at night because of her anxieties about the Merchant Navy. We believe that the Prime Minister's anxiety might be of some additional assistance. If it is, so much the better.

The requirements are clearly set out by the Committee —and, with respect, they are not for the Prime Minister or her Ministers of State—and they concern the availability of merchant shipping for defence purposes, which is governed by three factors—first, the number of flagged ships; secondly, their accessibility when they are needed; and, thirdly, the availability of a pool of seafarers to man them. Those three factors require us to look at the ownership of our merchant fleet, to find ways of returning ships to the British flag, and to increase the size and capacity of our fleet. We must find better tax and social security regimes to encourage young people to go to sea. All those things must be carried out quickly or the next time we discuss such a report we will be discussing not our merchant fleet but an obituary on it.

9.32 pm

Miss Ann Widdecombe (Maidstone): I am grateful for the opportunity to speak in the debate, but as other hon. Members wish to speak I will try to be brief.

I too congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) and all the members of the Defence Select Committee on their report. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Minister and the Government on their measures to counteract the decline of the merchant fleet. Although my remarks will be somewhat critical of what is happening, they in no way diminish either my gratitude for those measures or my respect for the deep thought that has gone into them.

The fundamental point to remember is that the British merchant fleet must play two roles. It can be called upon to play a wartime role, but during the long intervals of peace in between it essentially plays a merchant and economic role. Therefore, it must be subject to economic forces. The decline that has occurred during the 1980s is not because the Government have allowed that decline, or for any other Government inspired reasons. Rather it is because economic factors have led to a contraction in merchant shipping in general. Those factors include the move towards containerisation, the wages and taxes prevalent in the United Kingdom, and the fall in oil imports.

Such factors, or other economic factors, will always influence the size of the merchant fleet. That is why I do not wholly share the optimism expressed by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces. Although I am perfectly happy to say, "Yes, the terrible decline, not just of the 1980s generally, but especially of the past three years during which there has been another substantial decline, may well have been arrested," and I am even quite happy to say, "We may see the shipping industry improve somewhat," that does not mean that we shall not enter a future period of adverse economic factors. If that happens, we are moving from too weak a base to sustain that base. That is my principal worry.

Concern has been expressed this evening about the differences in the figures that have been supplied. Going back even a few months and looking at the Government's own defence estimates, there is enough evidence to provide a terrible warning. It is said that if it is necessary to requisition vessels from the merchant fleets across NATO, 1,642 available vessels will be required. We are told that all those would be needed. A reserve is not built in to the strength of the available fleet. I repeat that all of them would be needed.

We are too dependent on the good will of those operating foreign registers and on the geographical dispersal of all those ships at the time they are needed for us to have any room for manoeuvre. A slight improvement in the size of the merchant fleet will not mean a major improvement in the base from which we operate because we should already have slightly more ships than we can foresee needing, and not simply an adequate number of ships.

The decline is well known and the statistics do not need detailed rehearsal. However, it is worth noting that in the past five years stern trawlers, fishing trawlers, cargo vessels, liners, roll-on/roll-off ferries and tugs have all shown a substantial decline. A slight arrestment of that decline will not supply us with a good base for the future.

Furthermore, we were told at the time of the defence estimates that there was an estimated deficiency of 2,000 to 3,000 officers and 2,000 to 3,000 ratings should we have to call up all those ships at a time of emergency. Although I congratulate the Government on their efforts to increase the number of cadets recruited into the Merchant Navy, that deficiency nevertheless exists.

It is not enough to say that the fleet may be smaller but that it is more efficient, because this is one area in which numbers are crucial. We must have a certain number of ships to call on in an emergency and one may have to have them in given locations. It is not enough simply to have an efficient fleet; there must be enough ships, men and equipment to call upon and to call up fast, efficiently and with complete certainty. I am not convinced that we have that base or that the measures that have been taken so far —although I welcome them—are such as to enhance it for the foreseeable future. They certainly will not do so in the medium term.

We need to address ourselves to the somewhat unfair competition that we face and to address much more closely the question of subsidies and what other countries are doing. I echo the regret expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) that there is not a representative of the Treasury present because the role of the Treasury is crucial.

No matter what the difficulty of trying to combine an economic and efficient force with the uneconomic factors against it, we must accept that we must do so even if it means an element of subsidy. I would welcome some further elucidation from my hon. Friend the Minister of State and our right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport about what we are planning to do in the next five years, not to maintain our base, but substantially to enhance it so that in a few years' time we do not see in the defence estimates the age-old statement, "We will need all these ships"; we should see, "We shall need most of these ships."

9.40 pm

Mr. Julian Brazier (Canterbury): My hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe), in her very eloquent speech, set out the difficulties in the market place which have led to the shortages of shipping. I must reinforce what she says, having worked, most recently last summer, for a shipyard which specialised in ship repair. The situation in the shipping markets is desperate, and unfortunately, in the United Kingdom, for a number of reasons, it is likely to get worse in some areas.

To mention just one reason that came up earlier in the debate, it is absurd not to recognise that the Channel tunnel will inevitably lead to a very significant decline in the number of ferries. I do not say that against the Channel tunnel; the decision has been made on that. We are looking at a world shipping market with grotesque oversupply in some categories of ships, in which almost every country in the world is now subsidising its merchant navy.

The Soviet Union is very conscious of the importance not just of merchant shipping but of every category of supposedly civil vessels. All of them are centrally planned and co-ordinated: their fighting navy, their merchant vessels, their ubiquitous fishing fleets and, indeed, the research vessels which nominally belong to various Soviet universities. To mention just one category of supposedly civil ship, they are producing large numbers of ice-strengthened dry-cargo ships for use along their northern coastline. Many of those ships are built outside the Soviet Union, in, for example, Finland. In all cases they have strengthened hoists so that they can carry heavy weapons on their decks. In many cases the larger ones are nuclear driven and some are even fitted to carry hovercraft for transporting goods to shore. I need hardly say that their secondary role in war would be all too obvious.

The same applies with civil aviation, and the debate is supposed to be about civil aviation as well as shipping. Many Aeroflot aircraft are designed to have a secondary war role. They have strengthened floors so that heavy equipment can be put into them and they are convertible, in some cases, for use for parachuting, the Soviet Union having eight airborne divisions.

Two basic aspects have come up time and again in the debate—two reasons why we should be concerned about the Merchant Navy and the civil aviation fleet. One is direct support for the fleets and the RAF in time of war, and the other is the wider economic needs of the nation.

On the direct support side, I put it to my hon. Friend the Minister that there is enormous scope for cost-effective use of civil assets in a secondary military role. With the Atlantic Conveyor we see a small example of the sort of thinking that could be used here. This extends, however, far beyond the larger merchant vessels. There are many other examples of civil assets that could be used in a secondary military role with a very small amount of money spent up front: a lot of our civil engineering equipment, for example, and many civil aircraft.

Eighteen months before the Falklands war we were given an opportunity to fit some TriStars being sold to British Airways with equipment that would have made them available in a secondary role for air-to-air refuelling. The cost of doing it in advance would have been very modest, but the idea was turned down.

More important than that are the economic needs of the nation, which have been mentioned time and again in the debate. I cannot stress sufficiently that the Soviets recognise this. They are subsidising their cargo vessels, which can compete against us very effectively because they are subsidised. Almost every country in the free world is subsidising its merchant navy to some extent.

My hon. Friend the Minister stressed the problems with subsidies within the EC. In fact, of course, the EC's fleet, as a proportion of total world shipping, is falling. Outside the EEC large subsidies are provided. Two years ago I visited the largest shipyard in Venezuela and it provides enormous subsidies for its merchant fleet.

As an enthusiastic supporter of Adam Smith, I wish to God that there was a way in which we could maintain our merchant fleet without looking for artificial subsidies and supports of one sort or another. But our merchant fleet will be squeezed out if we are unwilling to subsidise it. I do not wish to pooh-pooh or thrust aside the steps that the Government have taken. The measures in the Merchant Shipping Bill are welcome, especially the late amendment on cabotage. I hope that the powers in that Bill will be used by the Secretary of State for Transport. Of course, it is sensible to have a merchant naval reserve and the enlargement of the business expansion scheme from £500,000 to £4 million is a welcome measure. They are modest measures, however, compared with what most other countries do.

A rollover relief which would enable our shipowners to re-equip would be extremely valuable. It would also enable our ships to become vastly more competitive. Sweden, for example, suffers from the problems of extremely expensive crews. By re-equipping its fleet with modern vessels, which can survive on small crews, the Swedish navy is becoming extremely competitive despite its high labour costs.

One of the difficulties that we face is that the cost of Third world crews is a great deal less than the cost of British crews. We cannot contend with some of the reasons for that, but, to be frank, a number of Third world ships, manned by Third world crews, have health and safety standards that would be unacceptable on a vessel using British seafarers. We could go some way to solving that problem by considering removing the national insurance contributions of British seafarers who spend a large proportion of the year at sea. The Select Committee on Defence and the Select Committee on Transport have published extremely effective reports and they highlight the serious problems that we face because of the potential shortage of vessels in a time of tension and war. That shortage could imperil our ability to keep ourselves going under the threat of war. The potential effect of that shortage would be to diminish the conventional stance of our armed forces. I do not believe that we will solve the matter by making it an MOD responsibility. Civil defence is not an MOD responsibility and for a long time it has been effectively organised by the Home Office. I welcome the increase in the civil defence budget.

The problems faced by our merchant fleet will be sorted out only when we have one Minister with clear responsibility for all aspects of shipping and, dare I say it, shipbuilding. That Minister should be in the Department of Transport and he should be responsible for monitoring the defence aspects of merchant shipping, as he would be the only man who would have authority to do something about it. He should be answerable to the House on that matter.

We need a proper co-ordinated policy that takes into account tax, employment and trade factors and a Minister who is answerable to the House for all those matters. We will then have a shipping policy that meets the needs of the nation and, God save us, our potential needs in war.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith (Wealden): It is probably rather rash of me to say anything at this late moment in the debate, which has been attended by so many hon. Members who are great experts on this matter. However, I do not want the moment to pass without congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) on his skilled chairmanship—and thanking the members of his Committee. I assure him that when I go abroad as chairman of the military committee of the NATO Assembly I find the reports that he and his Committee have produced immensely valuable, not only in a British, but in a NATO context—none more so than the report on this subject.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has a difficult task, not least because he must face up to the issue of scarce resources. Many military demands apart from those that are the subject of this debate are made on us. He is also faced with the ambiguity of NATO's defence policy, about which I have listened to a great many briefings. NATO does not speak with a voice that makes it easy for us to carry out a single-minded policy of reinforcing the forces that we already have. No one is quite sure whether we will reinforce before or after hostilities have started.

If I had more time I should use extracts from the report by the Select Committee on Defence—specifically from the excellent memorandum submitted by Mr. F. E. C. Gregory of the department of politics in the university of Southampton. To judge from some briefings, one might imagine that we were going to fight world war I all over again, with great convoys steaming across the Atlantic —or even world war II. Many people would dispute that. In the memorandum, Mr. Gregory quotes distinguished people such as one of our former Chiefs of the Defence Staff, Lord Carver:

"Unless reinforcements and supplies reach this side of the Atlantic before hostilities start then I have not much hope, whether they come by air or sea, that they will be very relevant to the situation."

Others, too, have made the point. As one United States army officer put it, the next war

"is going to be . . . a come as you are war."

This sort of ambiguity makes it extraordinarily difficult.

Mr. O'Neill indicated assent.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: I am glad to see the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) nodding his agreement.

Apart from the numbers of surface vessels of the Royal Navy, we should also consider that the effectiveness of our forces does not depend on numbers but on the extent to which such vessels provide effective modern weapons systems. My hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) made the interesting point that in the Falklands war we were able to clip on to our merchant ships—thereby making them extremely effective—container boxes that contained modern effective weapon systems. I discovered at first hand the other day, when visiting the Westland-Augusta project in Italy, that helicopters such as the EH101 could greatly increase the value that could be given to our ships by strengthening the Royal Navy's efforts to deal with anti-submarine warfare. We might concentrate our attention on that aspect rather than—as we too often do—on the numbers of merchant vessels that we have.

I hope that as these arguments are developed—we have not reached the end of them—we shall hear rather more about what the agreed strategy is and about how we can make our existing ships more effective by using more effective up-to-date weapons systems.

9.53 pm

Mr. Mates: This has been a useful debate and I congratulate all hon. Members who have taken part in it. It has been an extraordinary debate too, in that hon. Members from both sides of the House have spoken with one voice—a voice of concern. The House seems to be entirely unanimous about this and, to be fair, the Minister was by no means complacent.

It was apt for some hon. Members to remind us that perhaps deterrence starts with strategic nuclear weapons but finishes at the lowest level with conventional troops and civilian shipping, without which total deterrence looks less credible. It is back to the old phrase

"For want of a nail, the shoe was lost."

While this may not be a very romantic part of the whole of the Western Alliance's deterrent, it is nevertheless crucial.

The dilemma is evident and is mentioned not only in our report, which looks just at defence, but in the Department of Transport report as well. For economic reasons, some of which are understandable and some of which are less than attractive to contemplate, the fleet has been in a constant state of decline. That decline is not only in numbers and in deadweight tonnage, about which there can be no argument, but in the specific quality and type of ships that are most useful for defence purposes should we come to a period of crisis or tension that might lead to war.

My right hon. Friend the Minister has accused us in our report of being too pessimistic. In the report we say at some length that we do not think that the Government's optimism is justified. Those two remarks are there. We have been making these warning sounds for eight years, which is as long as the Select Committee on Defence in its present form has existed. It was one of the first subjects that we tackled because it seemed to us then to be an important element that was giving rise to concern. Successive Committees have come back to it no fewer than three times. If nothing else does, that shows, the House the consistency of our concern.

So far we have not been wrong. Our figures were brought out and we were told that we were wrong, especially three years ago, but the proof of the pudding this time round is that we were right and the Government were wrong. We were not working on the wrong figures. We had taken the right advice and the decline has proceeded, as we predicted. It gives me no comfort to say this, but I hope that it adds force to the fact that, whatever else we have done, we have produced a unanimous report right across all shades of opinion and have looked at this matter as carefully as possible.

If we have been too pessimistic no one would be more delighted than I to own up to that if, as I suspect, we return to this matter next year or the year after. If the Government have been too optimistic I hope that the Minister will have the good sense to realise that he cannot put this problem off. It is serious and we have to keep watching it and keep our finger on its pulse.

Inevitably, my right hon. Friend the Minister and his colleagues in the Ministry of Defence are looking at much more crucial and immediate matters such as the size of the surface fleet, for example. Had we been discussing the report on that he and I could have had a rather more rigorous debate. I think that this report takes us a good distance down that road.

The problems of the future procurement of aircraft, tanks and all the other things must gravely concern the Ministry of Defence because it does not have the funds to match the commitments put upon it. The Ministry has our sympathy about that. This matter is bound to be neglected, not least because, as my hon. Friend the Member for

[Mr. Mates]

Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) said, it is one of those things that falls between the stools of two Departments and therein always lies a danger. One Department is looking towards the other. The Department of Transport says that the merchant fleet is its business, but that it is not really interested in defence, only in the economic side. The Ministry of Defence says that the merchant fleet will be needed only if we go to war and that the Department of Transport is looking after it.

One of the more important recommendations that I hope will be taken up and considered across the board is co-ordination between Departments. We must ensure that this, above all, is monitored properly. If the Minister says that we have rung the alarm bells too loudly, I am prepared to be judged on that, but the most criminal thing of all would be to ignore the alarm bells until the fleet had declined to such an extent that it was too late to do anything credible about it and thereby damage the deterrence on which we have spent so much time and effort.

It being Ten o'clock, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER proceeded, pursuant to paragraph (5) of Standing Order No. 52 (Consideration of estimates) and the Order this day, to put forthwith the Questions necessary to dispose of the proceedings on Estimates, 1988-89 (Class I Vote 1, Class IX, Vote 1 and Class X, Vote 1).

Resolved,

That a sum, not exceeding £4,503,563,000, be granted to Her Majesty out of the Consolidated Fund to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March 1989 for expenditure by the Ministry of Defence on personnel costs etc. of the Armed Forces and their Reserves and Cadet Forces etc., personnel costs etc. of Defence Ministers and of certain civilian staff employed by the Ministry of Defence on movements; certain stores; supplies and services; plant and machinery; charter of ships; certain research; lands and buildings; sundry grants; payments abroad including contributions and subscriptions to international organisations and grants in aid.

Resolved,

That a sum, not exceeding £6,530,000, be granted to Her Majesty out of the Consolidated Fund to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March 1989 for expenditure by the Department of the Environment on other water supply, conservation and sewerage, local authority and other environmental services (including recreation), and town and country planning (including compensation).—[Mrs. Roe.]

10 pm

Mr. Michael Alison (Second Church Estates Commissioner, Representing Church Commissioners): I beg to move,

That the Church of England (Ecumenical Relations) Measure, passed by the General Synod of the Church of England, be presented to her Majesty for her Royal Assent in the form in which the said Measure was laid before Parliament.

In an increasing number of places throughout the country, the Church of England has been seeking closer relationships, since the 1920s, with the Protestant Free Churches in England and, since the late 1960s, with the Roman Catholic Church in England. Central to that co-operation have been shared acts of worship when clergy and ministers have preached and led prayers in one another's churches and congregations have joined in united services of worship.

Such co-operation increased rapidly in the 1960s and 1970s and today is widespread. There are more than 700 local councils of churches and almost 500 local ecumenical projects at present. The latter are places where local churches are often working together closely and where there is a considerable measure of shared worship. In many places, and in various ways, that shared worship has run ahead of the law. For example, section 15 of the Act of Uniformity 1662—to take the House back a little in this tercentenary year—requires everyone who preaches in the Church of England to have the bishop's licence. That provision has never been repealed. Therefore, technically, every time a Roman Catholic priest or Free Church minister preaches at a Church of England service, an offence is committed.

The Sharing of Church Buildings Act 1969 made it legally permissible for the first time for the Church of England and other churches to enter into binding agreements to share buildings. Although that Act allowed a measure of shared worship, that was not its primary aim. In 1980, the House of Bishops issued a code of practice on ecumenical relations to provide guidelines for ecumenical co-operation, particularly as regards the participation of Anglican clergy, non-Anglican clergy and lay people in each other's worship.

That code was an interim document. It was anticipated that the progress towards unity at a national level might soon make substantial changes in relationships between the Churches. However, sadly, those anticipated changes did not occur. For example, the proposal for a covenant between the Church of England and three of the Free Churches failed to win sufficient support in the General Synod of the Church of England in 1982, and thereafter lapsed.

Therefore, the House of Bishops established a working party under the chairmanship of the Right Reverend Cyril Bowles, lately Bishop of Derby,

"to discuss the Anglican involvement in local ecumenical development, and in particular, in Local Ecumenical Projects".

In 1984, the working party recommended that the time had come to change the law in order to make permissible a certain measure of shared worship while retaining certain safeguards.

The Measure before the House and the two canons that are proposed attempt to implement the recommendations of the Derby working party report. Therefore, the Church of England (Ecumenical Relations) Measure has been drafted in the form of an enabling provision and clauses 1 and 2 make it lawful for the General Synod to promulgate canons on ecumenical relations.

Two canons have been drafted and they are set out in the annex to the report of the Ecclesiastical Committee. One is of general application, draft canon B43, entitled "Of relations with other churches", and one deals specifically with local ecumenical projects, draft canon B44, entitled "Of local Ecumenical Projects".

It should be noted that the draft Measure gives legal authority for the Church of England, its ministers and lay people to collaborate with other churches, but there are at every point carefully drafted safeguards. For example, clause 3(a) provides that services of holy communion according to the use of the Church of England may be celebrated only by episcopally ordained priests. Clause 3(b) requires marriages according to the rites of the Church of England to be solemnised only by clerks in holy orders of the Church of England.

Clause 4 allows priests and deacons from the United Churches of south India, north India, Pakistan and Bangladesh—Churches which include former Anglicans —when visiting England for a limited period, to exercise their ministry both in the Church of England and in another church to which the measure applies. Up to now, those clergymen have had to opt either to minister in the Church of England or in the Free Church with which they are in communion.

Clause 5 gives power to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York jointly to designate the Churches to which the measure applies. It should be noted from subsection 2(c) that the measure and the proposed canons will apply only to churches which subscribe to the fundamental doctrine of the Holy Trinity and which administer the sacraments of baptism and holy communion.

Clause 6 sets out various definitions in the Measure. Clause 7 makes it possible for persons who do not hold a bishop's licence—for example, ministers of other Churches —to preach in a Church of England church, notwithstanding the provisions of the Act of Uniformity 1662, to which I referred earlier. Clause 8 contains a saving in respect of the place where Church of England marriages may be solemnised. Clause 9 is in common form.

The Measure and the canons do not go as far and as fast as ecumenical enthusiasts would like. However, they have received the overwhelming support of the diocesan synods and of the three houses of the General Synod.

At this time, when no national union schemes or proposals are before the Church of England, it is necessary to establish some rules for local Church of England churches to follow in their ecumenical relations. The draft measures enable such rules to be established.

10.8 pm

Mr. Frank Field (Birkenhead): I was going to say that after the introduction that we have heard from the Second Church Estates Commissioner, I would defy anybody to give a competent speech on this matter, but I see two Social and Liberal Democratic Members who are well known for their oratorical skills. Therefore, I should withdraw that challenge immediately because I know perfectly well that they will rise to the occasion.

I have only three small points to make and I do not possess the skills to weave them into a good debating point. Therefore, the best thing that I can do is to list them. First, as I listened to the Second Estates Commissioner I could not help thinking back to the essay written by Thomas Arnold well over 150 years ago. He thought that the Church was in such danger that it would do well to worry less about dogma and more about its comprehensiveness. Indeed, he thought that the test should be dropped, so that most citizens, apart from Roman Catholics, could become part of the then established Church. It says something about English society that 150 years later we have moved a small way towards the ideal that Arnold laid down for us. For that reason, I welcome the Measure.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): Was it not also Thomas Arnold who, as headmaster of Rugby school, said:

> My object will be, if possible, to form Christian men, for Christian boys I can scarcely hope to make."

Although that indicated Thomas Arnold's understanding of his pupils, did it not also give some evidence of his general outlook on life?

Mr. Field: It did, but to those hon. Members who understand how to give a coded message, I say that I accept the rebuke of my hon. Friend—as I shall call him tonight—the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), that in pointing to the eloquence of the Social and Liberal Democratic Members, I did not also point to him as somebody who can make a speech out of a point that did not exist at all. I look forward to hearing his contribution later.

My second point is that, in the Measure's preamble, it would have been possible for the Church to proceed by laying bishops' orders rather than seeking legislation. It is part of the Church of England's sickness that whenever there is an opportunity to ask for legislative changes, it does just that. That is all part of the politics of decline. Being a member of the Labour party and aware of the difficulties in which it finds itself, I recognise the symptoms when I see them in another body. One of the crosses I must carry is belonging to both organisations.

My final point is that, given the Synod's legislative programme, this is probably the last Measure that will come before the House and pass without a vote, as I hope it will tonight. There are stormy times ahead, and I look forward to participating in those events. Tonight I welcome this Measure, and I congratulate the Second Estates Commissioner on the eloquence with which he presented it to the House.

Mr. David Wilshire (Spelthorne): I take this opportunity—the first since my election to the House—to make a general comment about Church matters. I enter this area with some trepidation because I am not an Anglican, and it is that which makes me want to speak. I am saddened that the long-awaited coming together of various Christian denominations should need the House's formal approval. My general point for the record is that the sooner there is disestablishment, the better—because Christianity is something that can work happily without politicians intervening.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): Does the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) accept that there is a strongly held view in the Anglican Church that disestablishment would be good for that Church, as it is for all the other denominations?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. I remind the House that in debating this narrow Measure, it is not in order to discuss disestablishment. I realise that the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) is still on his preamble, which is allowed before he speaks to the Measure.

Mr. Wilshire: I am touched by your generosity, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I take your point, as I take that of the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) with whom I do not disagree.

I find it enormously encouraging—as I am sure all hon. Members present in the Chamber do—that this Measure is for our consideration tonight, because clearly the concept of Christian unity is alive and well, which is something we should welcome. I hope that all hon. Members of whatever denomination rejoice in the fact that the House is being asked to consider this Measure tonight. I too hope that it will win unanimous approval.

10.13 pm

Mr. David Alton (Liverpool, Mossley Hill): The hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) said that it was possible for politicians to make points where none existed, and we are all guilty of that from time to time. But it would be wrong for a Measure of this importance to go through the House without hon. Members from every party making brief contributions to say why they support it.

I welcome the Measure. It is almost paradoxical that just two hours after our debate on the tercentenary of 1688, in which we heard so much about the old prejudices, the old bigotry and even the old hatreds, the House is now putting behind it past injustice and persecution and the glorification of such events, and thinking instead of the future and considering how much progress we have already made towards the goal of Church unity and Christian reconciliation that so many hold dear.

Many who were present at Canterbury when Pope John Paul and Archbishop Runcie came together in that historic meeting were very touched to see the culmination of a process of which the late Archbishop Ramsey was the major initiator. It is worth recalling that fact, just a week after the memorial service that was held for him in Westminster abbey.

I come from a mixed marriage, with an Anglican father and a Catholic mother—and, in two and a half weeks' time, will consummate my own ecumenical act by marrying an Anglican, the daughter of a Church of England clergyman. The hon. Member for Birkenhead will be glad to know that she comes from the broad church that he describes—in the sense that I suppose she would regard herself as coming from the evangelical wing of the Anglican church, and her father from the Anglo-Catholic tradition.

Sometimes, however, such labels can be misleading. In the Roman Catholic Church, people are often surprised at the breadth of thinking exemplified by the renewal movement of charismatics and evangelicals. We are debating this Measure in a week when the Roman Catholic Church has seen its first schism in over a century caused by those who hanker after the Tridentine rite. That split is the result of feeling among some people that progress has been too fast. Many of us feel that it has been too slow.

I agree entirely with what the hon. Member for Birkenhead said about the difficult waters that lie ahead. It will be extremely difficult to bring every Christian towards the objective of Christian unity. While the hon. Gentleman reflected on the problems in his party, my hon. Friend the Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) and I reflected that we too knew something about the problems that a merger can create—vide the mess in the Liberal-SDP alliance. If anyone has any doubts about going for the lowest common denominator or easy merger options, let me say that I do not think that that is particularly to be commended. What is commendable is a respect for one another's traditions, and a recognition of the validity of each other's orders and rites of service.

Although my Church has moved a long way in the 40 years since my parents were married, I was surprised to learn that I required dispensation to marry someone of a different religion. I had to ask permission to be married to an Anglican. I find that offensive, and I hope that it will not be long before it is changed.

Mr. Harry Greenway: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman understands—if he does not, let me explain it to him—that the same is true in the other direction. When an Anglican is marrying a Roman Catholic he is required to sign over the children, which is very sad.

Mr. Alton: That is true, although I should point out that there have been changes in the past 40 years. Forty years ago, people were expected to sign a declaration that they would bring up their children in the Catholic faith, and a partner on the other side of the mixed marriage was expected solemnly to sign such an undertaking. I am glad that that is no longer the case. I must add that the form to which I have referred does not refer to a partner's denomination, but classifies an Anglican as a person from another religion.

Mr. Frank Field: In this case, as the hon. Gentleman is marrying an Anglican, surely he would not have to sign a declaration about bringing up the children in the Catholic faith, as the Anglican Church claims to be part of that faith.

Mr. Alton: That is the point that I am making. Yet the declaration has to be made nevertheless. The form of words has been slightly mellowed from what it was 40 years ago. I have to give an undertaking that I will do my best to ensure that any children are brought up in the Roman Catholic faith. I find that difficult at this time, and I do not understand why, given the great movement that there has been, Christians cannot decide what is best for their children and ensure that they have the best possible education and are brought up with an understanding of both our traditions.

I recall that the day after I was elected to the House, the late Airey Neave was assassinated in the precincts of the House of Commons. When I made my maiden speech a couple of days later, just before the House was dissolved for the general election, I referred to my city of Liverpool. I pointed out that when I was first elected to the council in 1972 the old Protestant party still sat on the council. There was still sectarianism in that city, which has such a bitter past. Perhaps Belfast, particularly, can learn from the reconciliation that has occurred over the years in Liverpool

In 1929, when the Catholic authorities tried to obtain planning permission to build its cathedral, the Protestant party on the council, in coalition with the Conservatives, turned down that application, after the revered Councillor Longbottom, the leader of the party, led a great campaign against the construction of the cathedral. The following year, the Labour party came to power and by just one vote it gave planning permission to build the cathedral, leading the Archbishop of Liverpool at that time, Archbishop Downing, to comment that it was better to win by a hair's breadth than to lose by a Longbottom.

The city of Liverpool, its Archbishop, Dereck Warlock, and its Bishop, David Sheppard, have put the old hatreds behind them. Yet, as recently as 1949, Archbishop Warlock's predecessor, Archbishop Beck, wrote to The Times to say that he could not say the Lord's Prayer with an Anglican. He also refused to give a joint blessing with the Anglican Bishop of Winchester on the grounds that the bishop did not have valid orders and was only a layman.

We have come a long way since then. We have come a long way since 1829 when, as a result of Daniel O'Connell's intervention in the County Clare by-election, he was able to force the Duke of Wellington's hand to give Catholics emancipation and allow them to sit in this place. However, there are still memories. Some of the churches in my constituency were built in the form of tithe barns so as not to give offence to the established Church. Yes, we have come a long way, but it seems slightly bizarre to me that a house of 650 hon. Members, all of them I am sure waiting outside in the Lobbies in case a Division is called, should be considering matters like this at all. Surely these matters are better resolved between Christians.

I have some sympathy with the remarks of the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) about disestablishment. It is ironic that we are debating this Measure in the week when the Church of England Synod has been talking about women priests, an issue which will cause great problems and impede reconciliation in future. We cannot dodge the possible side effect of that in terms of Christian unity. Nothing should be done to restrict the most important task of all for Christians—reconciliation.

The Measure is a useful step in that direction. One has only to look at Northern Ireland to see the scandal for Christianity when religion is used to set people at odds with one another. I pay particular tribute to the Rosstrevor community of the Church of Ireland, St. Columba house in Derry, which is run by a group of Catholics seeking reconciliation, and the Maranatha and Corrymeela groups and all those who are working in Northern Ireland trying to build bridges. It gives the lie to the atheist who points the finger and says, "See how these Christians love one another."

I am arguing for a fulsome response to Measures such as this from Catholics in the country. Respect for each other's orders and rites and a willingness to pray, worship and celebrate the eucharist together does not seem unreasonable.

We are considering a Measure allowing for joint services, including services of holy communion presided over by a minister of any other participating Church. The problem is that even if we pass this Measure, as Roman Catholics we are not allowed to participate. However much I welcome such a Measure, until my Church recognises, as it does for the Greek Orthodox Church, the right for Catholics to receive the eucharist inside the Anglican tradition, such motions are simply measures of good will and expressions of hope, rather than anything that will bind our Churches closer together.

We sometimes fool ourselves into believing that great strides have been made in accepting and respecting the beliefs of other Christian traditions. There is still hostility and suspicion. Ecumenism is sometimes only skin deep. I feel a growing sense of anger and frustration at the narrowness of vision and the obsession with Church positions which place strict limits on how far Christian laymen may go in terms of reconciliation. Arcane rules and restrictions on worship cause bewilderment, pain and hurt. It is Christianity at its worst.

These Measures are a movement in the right direction, but they are a long way short of reconciling two traditions which have so much to offer to each other. I hope that it will not be long before the right hon. Member for Selby (Mr. Alison) will introduce other Measures which will truly bring our Churches much closer together.

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): I associate myself with my hon. Friends, if I may so term them, on both sides of the House who welcome the Measure. The hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) referred to future controversies and no doubt we shall look forward to debating them. The hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) referred to earlier debates today on an anniversary of a subject of political and religious controversy. As you will know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, since you are a neighbour, my constituency has reason to recall from 300 and 303 years ago events such as the battle of Sedgemoor and Judge Jeffreys and the Bloody Assize—examples of political and religious intolerance and not, as an Opposition Member remarked earlier, myths. They were facts and realities.

This year we are celebrating another great anniversary —the defeat of the Spanish Armada. I believe that I am right in saying that today the university of Cambridge—not an institution with which I am closely acquainted or associated—gave honorary degrees to the King and Queen of Spain in respect of their great contributions to history and democracy in recent years. A particular college flew the Spanish royal standard today because it was established by King Philip and Queen Mary some 400 years ago. That shows how time can heal these great historical rifts which many of us were told in our schooldays were almost impossible to heal. This evening we must remember and recommend that lesson.

For those reasons I am pleased to speak briefly in this short debate and welcome the Measure.

10.27 pm

Mr. Michael J. Martin (Glasgow, Springburn): I apologise for not being present for the opening speeches, but I had an appointment outside the House and, unfortunately, I could not find a taxi.

[Mr. Michael J. Martin]

As a practising Catholic, I welcome the Measure. Like Liverpool, Glasgow inherited an Irish tradition from both sides of the divide—from Ulster and Eire. In my grandfather's time there was a great deal of bigotry. In my parents' time, some of that had died down. In my young days when a Catholic girl and a Protestant boy were going out with one another it caused anger and arguments in the families about which Church they would be married in.

I clearly remember an argument in the street between two future mothers-in-law. The son at the centre of the problem went up and said to them, "Perhaps we should discuss this out of the gaze of all the neighbours." He was told to go away and mind his own business as it had nothing to do with him. Fortunately, that was back in the 1950s. When my wife, who is a Protestant, and I were married both families were happy. I have an excellent relationship with my father-in-law and mother-in-law which meant that there was no bitterness at the wedding. That attitude exists in Glasgow at the moment. It has meant that our children have a different outlook on religion. They have more respect for other people's religions and for their parents, and that is a very good thing.

Nowadays, blatant discrimination has gone. People are not discriminated against in employment and promotion as they used to be, and companies no longer have a policy of employing only Protestants or only Catholics. Some small and, in my opinion, stupid things remain to be ironed out. When I first came to this place I heard debate about whether the heir to the throne should be entitled to marry a Catholic. I was asked to sign an early-day motion. I said, "I have an even bigger problem. There's a bowling club down the road from me, which is 150 years old and it has not had a Catholic member in all that time." These stupid things cause aggravation and small-minded people would allow them to continue.

Since I came to the House I have considered myself to have two parish churches—my parish church at home and the parish church here in Westminster, at which I have regularly attended services shared by hon. Members from all parties. That means that I now know the true meaning of the ecumenical movement. Even with all the differences of opinion that we have in this place—it is right and fitting that we do—every month or so we can meet as Christians and share in a common bond and belief which builds up our friendship.

That principle should be extended into the community as a whole. One thing that being a Member of this place has taught me is that people are willing to come together to try to break down barriers, and I am thankful for that.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That the Church of England (Ecumenical Relations) Measure, passed by the General Synod of the Church of England, be presented to Her Majesty for her Royal Assent in the form in which the said Measure was laid before Parliament.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS, &c.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 101(5) (Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments, &c.)

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

That the draft Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988, which were laid before this House on 14th June, be approved.

HIGHWAYS

That the draft Highways (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988, which were laid before this House on 17th June 1988, be approved.

HARBOURS, DOCKS PIERS AND FERRIES

That the draft Harbour Works (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988, which were laid before this House on 24th June 1988, be approved.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

That the Customs Duties (ECSC) (Amendment No. 1) Order 1988 (S.I., 1988, No. 1065), dated 16th June 1988, a copy of which was laid before this House on 17th June 1988, be approved.

RATING AND VALUATION

That the Docks and Harbours (Rateable Values) (Amendment) Order 1988, dated 31st May 1988, a copy of which was laid before this House on 10th June, be approved. —[Mr. Boscawen.]

Question agreed to.

WELSH GRAND COMMITTEE

Ordered,

That during the proceedings on the matter of the Effect of Government Legislation on the People of Wales the Welsh Grand Committee has leave to sit twice on the first day on which it shall meet, and that, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order No. 88 (Meetings of standing committees), the second such sitting shall not commence before Four o'clock nor continue after the Committee has considered the matter for two hours at the sitting.—[Mr. Boscawen.]

School Building (Cornwall)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Boscawen.]

10.33 pm

Mr. Robert Hicks (Cornwall, South-East): Through you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, may I thank Mr. Speaker for allowing me the opportunity to raise again so soon the important subject of Cornwall's school building requirements. As you, Sir, will know, I was to have raised this matter some three weeks ago, but unfortunately the day nominated for the debate does not exist in the annals of this House; it was Wednesday 15 June.

I thank my hon. Friend the Minister for his kind attendance this evening, and take this opportunity to thank him publicly for the support that he has given me over the years in respect of schools in Cornwall. He has certainly been as supportive as the restraints imposed by other Government Departments would allow him to be. From a so-called Tory wet to one who is not normally associated with my ilk in the party, that is praise indeed.

My principal reason for asking for the debate is to persuade the Department of Education and Science to recognise Cornwall's need for a meaningful capital allocation which allows the county to sustain a rolling programme of new school building—to accommodate rising numbers—and bring about a replacement and improvement programme for existing school stock. I appreciate the fact that my hon. Friend the Minister cannot give commitments about the level of future capital funding, but I want him to acknowledge publicly Cornwall's school building requirements over the next five years and assure me that his Department recognises our specific needs.

I wish to concentrate on the primary school sector, but should like first to draw attention to three other specific matters. The first concerns secondary schools, of which there are 33 in Cornwall. Nine, including Liskeard in my constituency, still occupy split sites. Clearly, that is not cost-effective. We are not making maximum use of our scarce financial and human resources. It is a waste of time and of valuable resources.

In 1973, I took a delegation to see Lord Belstead, who was then Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science. We emphasised the need for an integrated secondary school development at Liskeard. Alas, 15 years later, all the problems and frustrations associated with a split site at Liskeard still remain.

My second point is about post-16 education in the county. In recent years, there has been a tremendous expansion, albeit starting from a low base. Over the past six years, there has been significant further education provision in Saltash, the largest town in my constituency. So far, there has been a two-phase programme, with a capital injection of £1·5 million. There is enormous demand, which represents unfulfilled potential. We need developments and extensions of the progress that we have made. I remind my hon. Friend the Minister that the money for these much-needed projects must come out of the same capital allocation.

My third point relates to the new building regulations, which are to be introduced in 1991, governing school premises. Hitherto such regulations have applied only to new school buildings. After 1991, all schools should comply with the provisions in the regulations. Cornwall's estimate of the cost of implementing the new regulations to bring all existing schools up to standard is between £70 million and £80 million. That shows the scale of the financial requirements.

In 1988-89, Cornwall's capital allocation to the primary school sector was £6·4 million. All parties on the county council, all my parliamentary colleagues who represent Cornwall constituencies and I were pleased with and grateful for this allocation.

I am reminded that two years ago—I do not want the House to think that I spend all my time taking delegations to see Education Ministers—the late David Penhaligon and I went to see the then Secretary of State for Education and Science, Keith Joseph, to emphasise the needs and requirements of Cornwall. We took with us the chairman of the county council, the then chief education officer, and the former chairman of the education committee. I like to think that, on that occasion, the late David Penhaligon and I paved at least some ground and made some headway in emphasising the needs of Cornwall.

I do not wish to be ungracious, but there is a need for the £6·4 milllion not only to be sustained, but also to be improved on if the rolling programme, to which I have referred, is to be achieved.

In 1992, Cornwall's primary school population will exceed 40,000 which will be the highest number in its history. Furthermore, in 1987, the birth rate in Cornwall was the highest since the 1960s. That surely shows that movement into our county is responsible for the increased school population, and that there is also population growth within the county.

Our county chief education officer estimates that there are some 50 projects, of which 50 per cent. can be classified as major—in other words, projects involving more than £200,000-worth of work—that would merit urgent priority if there were sufficient funds. Most of those 50 projects would involve a substantial element of rebuild, replacement and improvement.

I will give two examples in my constituency—Pensilva and the St. Blazey-Biscovey area. Pensilva is a village that has grown significantly over the past decade or so. Five of its six classes have been housed in temporary accommodation since 1980. The old main building of the original school is in a bad state of repair. Cornwall is caught in a chicken and egg situation, because naturally it is reluctant to spend on upkeep and maintenance—although there is a very real need because the buildings are deteriorating—because it hopes that sooner rather than later funds will be available for a new primary school at Pensilva. It is an excellent school. The staff do a superb job in difficult circumstances, and the parents are very supportive.

Another typical example is in the St. Blazey-Biscovey area. The St. Blazey primary school is on a very restricted site, adjacent to a main road, and with very limited playing space, all of which is tarmacadam—indeed, it is the classic 19th-century Victorian school. In another part of the town, there is the Lodge Hill junior school. It is overcrowded. There is no hall or dining space. It also has a hard play area, and the nearest field for play and sport is 15 minutes away. The number of pupils is growing. None the less, it is a well run and happy environment, and all credit is due to the staff and pupils, who are well supported by an active parent-teachers association.

The problems were acknowledged in 1970. The then chief education officer wrote to the then chairman of school governers, "Something must be done," yet relatively little progress has been made. The irony is that we have a new site for a school. If it were built soon, we would realise the valuable assests of the two existing sites, and by building one school serving the St. Blaxey-Biscovey area we would satify the aspirations of two schools which are on the waiting list.

I can only describe the situation in Landrake as a saga. I have had the honour to be the local Member of Parliament for 18 years, and Landrake has featured in my regular mailing list and correspondence files since 1970, and I imagine it was on those of my predecessor. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will be able to say that we are making progress. It is a voluntary-aided school. St. Germans and Stoke Climsland are also in desperate need of a new primary school.

Many requirements arise as a result of the combination of a growing school population and the need to upgrade existing buildings. The problem is especially acute in the Plymouth travel-to-work area. In the three major towns in the easternmost part of my constituency—Saltash, Torpoint and Callington—there will be a need for new schools or major extensions to existing ones in the foreseeable future because of the growth in population.

In the surrounding villages, which we might call the growth villages of the Plymouth travel-to-work area, of Landrake, Stoke Climsland and St. Germans, there is tremendous pressure on existing primary schools. Cornwall has allocated all of them as sites for new primary schools, but unfortunately resources are not available.

The Cornwall education authority faces an almost impossible—some might say invidious—task each year when determining priorities. Naturally, every community believes that its school should be top of the list. I appreciate that the problems are magnified by the fact that, during the 1950s and 1960s, relatively little was spent by a somewhat mean Cornwall county council on improving and extending school buildings—hence the backlog today.

I have not mentioned the 70 primary schools which still have outside toilets. I hope that I have conveyed to my hon. Friend the Minister the need for expenditure, whether it be on new schools or on the remodelling of existing ones. A tremendous task lies before the Cornwall education committee. It is essential that the Department of Education and Science recognises our requirements and provides sufficient resources to enable a meaningful rolling programme to be established in Cornwall.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science (Mr. Bob Dunn): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Cornwall, South-East (Mr. Hicks) on his success in obtaining this Adjournment debate on Cornwall's school building requirements. From his excellent speech, his correspondence to me and the questions that he has put to me over the years I recognise that it is an issue which has stimulated a good deal of local interest, concern and discussion.

I begin by reminding the House that since, 1980, control of local education authority expenditure has been exercised through the block allocation system introduced by the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. Before that legislation, the Department of Education and Science produced lists of individual named projects to be started in a particular year.

My hon. Friend will be aware that allocations are not grants. They represent limits on the capital spending that local education authorities can undertake. They can finance projects from revenue or by borrowing. Such expenditure, including loan charges, is assisted by central Government through the rate support grant mechanism.

Again, the House will be aware that allocations are made for each of six services—education, housing, transport, social services, urban aid and other environmental services. The education allocation covers all sections of education and includes expenditure on furniture, equipment, plant and machinery, land and professional fees, as well as actual construction costs.

Local authorities are, of course, free to apply their allocations as they wish. They may move resources between services, and to a limited extent between years, but may not exceed the total of their allocations except by the application of a specific proportion—30 per cent. in 1988-89—of their accumulated capital receipts, and in a few other special circumstances.

At the same time as allocations are made to local education authorities, allocations are also made for governors' expenditure at aided and special agreement schools. These are also spending limits, but 85 per cent. of governors' expenditure is reimbursed through grant aid by the Department and, except for minor works, the Department lists those projects that can start in a particular year.

I assure my hon. Friend that the Government are well aware of the particular problems faced by Cornwall—in particular, that it retains a large number of schools housed in aging, pre-1903 buildings. Furthermore, we recognise that the school-age population in Cornwall is beginning generally to increase, especially in towns such as Liskeard and Saltash where large housing developments are planned. Consequently, there are likely to be an increasing number of "basic need" cases in the county, and these projects will, of course, be given the most careful consideration by the Department of Education and Science, along with other school improvement projects in the county, when the capital expenditure allocations for 1989-90 are decided on later this year.

I should also like to indulge myself by mentioning the level of allocations that Cornwall LEA has received in recent years, particularly in respect of "prescribed" expenditure on county and voluntary controlled schools. In 1988-89, for example, the notional schools element of the authority's prescribed allocation—at £6·274 million —is 18 per cent. higher than that of the previous year and represents 78 per cent. of its total plans, compared to a national average of 47 per cent. Furthermore, the national average was exceeded in both the two previous financial years—my hon. Friend was good enough to recognise that. In 1986-87 the authority secured 53 per cent. of its plans compared with 51 per cent. nationally and in 1987-88 it secured 77 per cent. of its plans, compared with a national average of 46 per cent.

I assure my hon. Friend that projects at aided schools will continue to be looked at sympathetically. I know that accommodation problems at the aided school at Landrake are giving rise to much concern locally. Statutory proposals relating to the school were, I understand, published on 10 June. Should those proposals be approved by my right hon. Friend in due course, the required building work would, of course, automatically receive an allocation, as the promoters would be under a duty to implement them.

My hon. Friend will, I hope, accept my assurances that I have listened carefully to what has been said tonight and that I have fully noted his concerns. The points that he has raised so well will be taken into account, along with any other representations that we may receive, before a decision is reached later this year upon the capital expenditure allocation to be provided for Cornwall in 1989-90.

I congratulate my hon. Friend on his speech and on his determination, at the second attempt, to secure this debate.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at five minutes to Eleven o'clock.

House of Commons

Friday 8 July 1988

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITIONS

Tail Docking

9.34 am

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): I beg to ask leave to present a petition in the name of Mrs. Trediwell of the voluntary Society for Animal Protection in Middlesex. It is addressed to the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Parliament assembled. The Humble Petition of the Society for Animal Protection sheweth that tail docking of dogs is routinely carried out because the result is thought by most official docked breed associations "to improve appearance". The Royal college of Veterinary Surgeons and the British Veterinary Associations have long argued that tail docking is an unnecessary and painful surgical mutilation, sometimes causing extreme suffering and serious complications. Moreover, there is no benefit to a dog having a docked tail.

I strongly support the petition and hope that Her Majesty's Government will be able to take action in this important matter.

Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House will amend the Protection of Animals Act 1911, to protect dogs against such unnecessary mutilation. And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, etc.

To lie upon the Table.

Swimming

9.36 am

Mr. Harry Greenway: I wish also to present a petition on behalf of the Amateur Swimming Association, which collected 30,000 signatures in a week. It was presented to me recently by the association and by Mr. Duncan Goodhew, an international swimmer who is well known in the House. It is addressed to

"the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Parliament assembled. The humble petition of members of swimming classes, affiliated to the Amateur Swimming Association sheweth, That swimming is the most popular active recreation in the country, That the Amateur Swimming Association has 1,690 affiliated clubs with a total of approximately 300,000 members, That approximately 250,000 children and adults are taught to swim in Britain each year by swimming clubs and their members, That the ability to swim contributes both to personal safety and the good health of individuals, That the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister for Sport are mindful that local authorities should not put out to tender the management of publicly owned swimming facilities, without safeguarding the interests of swimming clubs and their members, That without local authority control of charges and concessionary charges, opening hours and the programming of the pools for such uses as teaching and competitions, the survival of swimming clubs, the training of swimmers for state and Olympic competition and the teaching of swimming to both children and adults will be under very grave threat."

The Amateur Swimming Association is well aware of the welcome concessions made by the Minister with responsibility for sport in his statement last week. However, it is still concerned and it has my strong support.

"Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House will use its best endeavours to prevent the compulsory introduction of private management of publicly owned swimming facilities without safeguarding the interests of swimmers and swimming clubs.

And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray, etc."

To lie upon the Table.

Orders of the Day

Malicious Communications Bill

Lords amendment considered.

Clause 1

OFFENCE OF SENDING LETTERS ETC. WITH INTENT TO CAUSE DISTRESS OR ANXIETY

Lords amendment: No. 1, in page 2, line 2, leave out "level 3" and insert "level 4".

Read a Second time.

9.38 am

Mr. Greg Knight (Derby, North): I beg to move, as an amendment to the Lords amendment,

Leave out '" level 4"' and insert '"level 5"'.

I should like to congratulate my hon. Friend the hon. Member of Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) on getting his Bill through the other place largely in the form in which it was drafted. However, in my view the Bill can still be improved.

Hon. Members will probably be aware that the Bill provides for courts to impose a maximum fine of £400 on anyone found guilty of sending a malicious communication. The Lords amendment increases the fine to a maximum of £1,000, but my amendment seeks to give courts power to impose a maximum fine of £2,000. I hope that when my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood has heard what I have to say, he will be prepared to give some ground and move away from the present maximum of £400.

On Second Reading, my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office gave the reasons why he thought the maximum of £400 was correct:

> "People do not like this offence, and want to try to stamp it out, but we must get the penalty fixed at the right level. My hon. Friend"— that is, my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood——

> "suggests that it should be fixed at £400. In the trade that is a level 3 fine, and I think that it is probably about right". —[Official Report, 12 February 1988; Vol. 127, c. 635.]

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): What does a level 3 fine mean?

Mr. Knight: I accept that the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) is not a lawyer. [Interruption.]

Mr. Skinner: Did the hon. Gentleman hear his hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) say that if I was a lawyer I would make a fortune?

Mr. Knight: Knowing the cantankerous nature of the hon. Member for Bolsover and the way in which he is always ready to support a good fight, I have no doubt that if he were a lawyer he would make a fortune.

The scale of fines set down by Parliament for level 1 is £50, for level 2 it is £100 and for level 3—the level to which I referred when quoting my hon. Friend the Minister—it is £400. My amendment seeks to increase the fine to level 5, which is £2,000.

Mr. Skinner: Is there anything above that?

Mr. Knight: There is nothing above that that we could properly debate today.

What is my reason for suggesting this increase to £2,000? It is not a figure that I have plucked out of the air. I should like to refer the House to the Law Commission's report on poison pen letters, published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. The Law Commission set up for this purpose was composed of the following commissioners: the honourable Mr. Justice Ralph Gibson, who was its chairman, Mr. Trevor Aldridge, Mr. Brian Davenport QC, Professor Julian Farrand and Mrs. Brenda Hoggett. The commissioners were charged with examining the scope of the existing provisions of the criminal law for dealing with people who send poison pen letters and similar material. The review that they undertook arose out of the Law Commission's examination of the common law offence of criminal libel and was part of the programme of codification of the criminal law in England and Wales.

In quite a lengthy report, the Law Commission recommended the creation of a new statutory offence to penalise people who send or deliver poison pen letters and similar messages for the purpose of causing distress or anxiety. It concluded that the new offence should be triable only in a magistrates court. It submitted with its report a draft of what it said should be in a Malicious Communications Bill.

I am aware that my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood based his Bill largely on the Law Commission's report, but he departed from its recommendations in respect of the penalty that was recommended. Paragraph D on page 27 of the Law Commission's report says:

> "Our working paper proposed that the maximum penalty currently available in magistrates' courts should apply in this case, that is six months' imprisonment or a fine of £2,000"— for the benefit of the hon. Member for Bolsover, that is level 5—

> "or both. Only one commentator disagreed with our provisional proposal and suggested that three months' imprisonment might be more appropriate on the grounds that six months appeared excessive in comparison with the maximum penalty for making obscene telephone calls which is at present limited to a maximum fine of £400 (level 3), without the possibility of a sentence of imprisonment being imposed."

9.45 am

Clearly my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood believes that the maximum penalty should be £400 because it is in line with other similar provisions. What does the Law Commission say about this matter? Paragraph 4.48 of its report says:

> "We must first explain why we favour giving magistrates' courts the power to imprison a person convicted of sending a poison-pen letter. In the working paper we gave two reasons: first, we could conceive of circumstances in very serious cases in which a sentence of imprisonment might be the only suitable form of punishment; secondly, the availability of a number of different types of sentence in magistrates' courts depends upon the existence of the power to imprison in relation to the particular offence of which the defendant has been convicted."

A magistrates court cannot make a hospital order under section 37 of the Mental Health Act 1983 unless the defendant has been convicted of an offence that is punishable by imprisonment. As some of those who will send poison-pen letters are likely to be suffering from a condition of the mind that requires medical treatment or help, I took the view in Committee that it was desirable for powers of imprisonment to be available to magistrates.

Mr. Robin Corbett (Birmingham, Erdington): The last time that we debated this subject, it was rightly said that imprisonment was not appropriate. The hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) acknowledged that, as imprisonment is not attached to conviction in cases arising under the Bill, magistrates do not have powers under the Mental Health Act 1983, but there are many other routes by which they can advise that a convicted person should receive help and treatment.

Mr. Knight: The hon.Gentleman makes a fair point. He canvassed this matter in earlier debates on the subject, and I accept what he says. However, I can envisage occasions when the letter is so malicious and the effect on its recipient so dramatic that courts may decide, even in the absence of any medical condition, that a short period of imprisonment is appropriate.

I defend the Law Commissioner's view, which I share, that imprisonment should be available. That, however, is not the strict purpose of my amendment. I mentioned imprisonment to show the House that respected opinion that has considered this matter—the Law Commission—concluded that we should go further than my amendment. If my amendment is accepted, it will give courts power to impose fines up to £2,000. Those who have examined this subject in detail, who could colloquially be called experts, came to the view that there should be a maximum fine of £2,000 and the provision of imprisonment.

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): A few moments ago the hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) said that the courts should be able to send people to prison for repeated offences or for offences that suggest that they need treatment for a mental condition,. In those circumstances, why is the hon. Gentleman restricting the scope of his amendment to a fine of only £2,000? Why has he not followed the logic of his argument and ensured that, if necessary, the courts should be able to send someone to prison or for mental health treatment?

Mr. Knight: That is a fair question, but since I became a Member of Parliament in 1983, I have learnt that in this place one takes what one can get and that if one seeks to obtain an amendment that is strictly in line with one's views one may alienate a large number of hon. Members. My amendment is a compromise. It does not go as far as I should like, but it goes further than that provided by my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood. It also goes further than those in another place wanted it to go. However, it is a step in the right direction.

The Law Commission, having examined all the alternatives, said in paragraph 4.50 on page 28 of its report:

> "Accordingly, we recommend that the maximum penalty for the new offence should be six months' imprisonment or a fine of £2,000 . . . or both."

Having examined all the options, the Law Commission did not equivocate. It came down unreservedly in favour of both imprisonment and a fine of the order that I am urging the House to accept. As the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) has pointed out, my proposal is more modest than the Law Commission's recommendation.

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): I did not take part in the previous proceedings, and I am therefore a little confused about what my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) has said. Why has it taken so long to arrive at this position? Can he explain why my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) set a lower level of penalty during the early stages while at this fairly late stage my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North is suggesting a penalty that is in line with the Law Commission's recommendation? That is odd.

I should have thought that my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood would have arrived at that figure straight away. Why are we reaching it by such a roundabout route?

Mr. Knight: That is not strictly correct. The Bill was debated in Committee of the whole House and I urged my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood to move further up the scale than level 3. In reply, the Minister of State, Home Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) said:

> "The sending of a malicious communication certainly causes distress to the recipient, but we must not make the penalty out of proportion to the gravity of the offence and out of proportion to other offences already on the statute book. The penalty at level 3 is the same as that for broadly similar offences under the Telecommunications Act 1984 and Public Order Act 1986."

Both my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood and my hon. Friend the Minister of State declined to go further, despite my entreaties. They said that level 3 was in line with other measures on the statute book. As the other place took a similar view to that which I expressed in Committee, I am taking this opportunity to push my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood a little further. When he has listened to the arguments, I hope that he will agree to give some ground. If he is not prepared to go all the way and accept my amendment, I hope that he will at least agree to accept the Lords amendment.

Mr. Forth: It seems that my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood and my hon. Friend the Minister of State are isolated, because the other place appears to support my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight). I am sure that he will receive a great deal of support from hon. Members. I detect that the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) is attracted by his argument. The Minister of State's judgment is usually impeccable, but it can go astray occasionally. Both he and my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood are equating this offence with other offences, but my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North begs to differ. He thinks that the offence is different in its nature, quality and quantity. Is that the right interpretation of my hon. Friend's argument?

Mr. Knight: I agree with my hon. Friend's last statement, because my hon. Friend the Minister of State went on to say:

> "We must be consistent and keep the penalties for similar offences in line."—[Official Report, 22 April 1988; Vol. 131, c. 1155.]

I do not want to be unfair, however, to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Mr. Skinner: What is the hon. Gentleman dragging him in for?

Mr. Knight: I am dragging him in to absolve him of any blame, because in Committee it was the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon who put forward these arguments.

Mr. Corbett: Where is he?

Mr. Knight: My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department is here today. As he is a very reasonable man, I hope that he will accept some of my points and that the Government will agree that we should move up the scale.

Mr. Chris Butler (Warrington, South): Is there not an argument that higher penalties should apply to similar offences, such as malicious telephone calls, that can be deeply disturbing to those who receive them?

Mr. Knight: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. I do not accept the argument that, as the law provides for lower penalties for other offences, we should go along with them. If I understand him rightly, he is saying that we should consider increasing the penalties for other offences. If that is his point, I wholeheartedly agree with him.

The question for the House is, what is the right penalty. My hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood drafted his Bill with the best of intentions, but I think that he has got it wrong. The level is too low and we should increase it. I hope that the House will consider accepting the Lords amendment, even if it cannot accept my amendment.

Mr. Wigley: I, too, was not involved in the earlier stages of the Bill, but am I right in assuming that a letter or other article that conveys a message includes a tape-recorded message, in which case the offence, as the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) said, could be very deeply offensive and would justify a heavier punishment?

Mr. Knight: I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman is a lawyer, but he has correctly analysed the Bill. It includes tape recordings. It also includes obscene messages put on floppy disks. Such messages would not be read until they were inserted in the computer. The scope of the Bill is fairly wide-ranging and would include obscene messages sent in that way.

Mr. Skinner: I get what can loosely be described as obscene pen letters from Tiny Rowland. He sends them to me on behalf of Lonrho plc to encourage me to send them on to Harrods. I think that he sends them to other Members of Parliament. Would such letters be described as poison pen letters? They are sent by Tiny Rowland to Members of Parliament with a view to causing anxiety and distress at Harrods.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. We are discussing a narrow point, not the Bill in general.

Mr. Skinner: We have to reach a decision about the different levels of penalty. We are not messing around with £400. We are discussing levels 3 and 4, and we could reach level 5. I have to consider the poison pen letters that are sent from Tiny Rowland via me to Harrods. Is that point covered by the amendment moved by the hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight)? I want to know——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is supposed to be an intervention. If the hon. Gentleman wishes to address the House, perhaps he will try to catch my eye later, but interventions must be brief.

Mr. Skinner: I am after the lawyer's advice first. I want to know whether the letter from the Attorney-General that caused anxiety and distress to the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) during the Westland affair could be——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think that the hon. Gentleman has gone far enough—perhaps too far.

Mr. Skinner: I have certainly got him worried.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman has got me worried.

Mr. Skinner: It could be a worrying day.

10 am

Mr. Knight: I am quite prepared to give the hon. Gentleman advice outside the Chamber, but of course he will have to pay the usual fee.

Mr. Forth: The usual exorbitant fee.

Mr. Knight: Indeed—on level 5.

Perhaps Tiny Rowland believes that the hon. Member for Bolsover is running for leadership of the Labour party, and that is why he is sending him these missives. The Bill would cover all communications, including those to a Member of Parliament, so if the hon. Gentleman is distressed or caused anxiety by any letter that he receives, were the Bill to become law he could ensure that the sender was properly prosecuted.

Mr. Forth: If a Member of Parliament sends an offensive letter to a constituent will he be covered by parliamentary privilege, or will he be subject to the provisions of the Bill?

Mr. Knight: The Bill provides that when a letter is sent in the normal course of business that constitutes a defence. I suppose that a Member of Parliament could argue that if his letter was in the proper terms, he had not committed an offence. In my opinion, the defence would not be absolute. I can envisage circumstances in which a Member of Parliament could fall foul of the law.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): I am sorry to distress my hon. Friend, but the offence applies only to dunning letters, and I am not sure how often Members of Parliament send dunning letters to their constituents.

Mr. Knight: I suppose that if a Member of Parliament was also a lawyer who was owed some money, and he wrote on his House of Commons headed paper, that might be covered, but I agree that that is an arguable point.

I have read and reread the Law Commission's report and I can see that it was not hesitant in coming to its recommendation on the level of fine. It is not as if it concluded that it was an arguable case, and that there were weighty arguments in favour of level 3 or level 4. It came down unequivocally and unanimously in favour of level 5. With the greatest respect, I think that my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood has missed the point to some extent, because, if we agree to level 5, we are not saying that in every case there should be a fine of £2,000. We are saying that we are giving the courts power, if necessary, to impose the larger fine.

I will give an example that will be close to the heart of the hon. Member for Bolsover. It is an example vaguely analogous to the Geoffrey Collier case. A stockbroker who is a millionaire sends a malicious communication designed to cause anxiety and distress—perhaps to do with share dealings or some other business proposition that he wants to force through. He causes so much distress and depression to the recipient that the recipient suffers a complete breakdown in health. Are we to say that the fine of £2,000 is too much in that case?

The main purpose of criminal proceedings is punishment, and the courts of course will consider the person they have before them and find out what his income is. They will pitch the level of the fine to some extent according to that person's wealth. If the courts consider that that person should know better and should be setting an example, they will often decide to impose a very heavy fine. If the courts are dealing with someone very wealthy, who has sent a most obnoxious letter that has caused distress, and perhaps injured the health of the recipient, can we say that £400 is sufficient? I say that it is not.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): It is unfortunate that my hon. Friend chose a stockbroker as an example, because, generally, he would be involved in perfectly legitimate and honourable business practices. He would be careful how he writes to people, because his very business depends on good relations with his clients and the public. Will my hon. Friend comment on someone in a powerful position, such as the leader of a trade union, who may well write a letter to one of his members threatening that, if that person does not conform to certain practices, such as an unofficial strike——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Briefly, please.

Mrs. Gorman: —he may be sent a letter saying that he will lose his job. How does my hon. Friend react to that? What level of punishment does he consider appropriate in that case?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If hon. Members wish to make speeches, I wish that they would do it in the usual way—by seeking to catch the eye of the occupant of the Chair rather than by making long interventions.

Mr. Knight: I do not want my hon. Friend to think that I am mounting an attack on stockbrokers. I was merely giving an example of a case in which the courts might want to impose a far heavier fine than £400. As to the case that my hon. Friend mentioned, it would all depend on the wording of the letter and whether there was an unwarranted threat, which is what the Bill requires. It also requires that the information is false and that the sender knows or believes it to be false. The purpose of the communication should be to cause personal distress or anxiety. I can envisage a case of a trade union official exceeding his authority, being particularly offensive and causing distress, and that being covered by the Bill.

Mr. Corbett: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that such a letter would be written by a general secretary or another officer within the rules of the union, or at the instruction of the union's executive council? The letter would not be written in the context in which we have conducted this debate. The hon. Gentleman may take the view that it is unlikely that the Bill would cover such a letter. There may be other ways in which to deal with it.

Mr. Knight: I agree that such a case is unlikely. I believe that most trade union leaders and officials try to conform to the law. In the normal course of their business, if they sent a letter that is robust but no more, the Bill would not be relevant. My hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) spoke about a letter which was so offensive and over the top that it would probably be in breach of union rules, but of course there are rogue trade union officials, just as there are rogue stockbrokers. The point of my example, however, was simply to draw attention to the adequacy or otherwise of the proposed level of fine.

I hope that, having heard my examples, the whole House agrees that the proposed level of fine is inadequate. We should send a clear message to the courts that we regard the sending of malicious communications so seriously that we are prepared to empower them to impose very heavy fines when appropriate. Such fines, however, are not mandatory. I believe that level 5 is about right. If my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood cannot go with me all the way, I hope that he will reflect on the matter and perhaps agree to urge the House to accept the Lords amendment.

I am not particularly wedded to my amendment, but I tabled it so that I could urge my hon. Friend to go further than a £400 fine. After the interventions from hon. Members on both sides of the House expressing the apparently unanimous view that the Bill does not go far enough, I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood will consider the argument and agree that we should raise the fine from level 3.

Mr. Andy Stewart (Sherwood): There have already been lengthy discussions in this House and in another place about the penalty proposed in my Bill. Concern has been expressed about whether the penalty is sufficiently high to punish adequately or deter those who send malicious communications. In Committee in the House, I resisted an amendment from my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) to increase the fine to level 5 on the standard scale to a maximum of £2,000. My hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North has now tabled his amendment again. I still believe that a maximum fine of £2,000 is too high.

Sending a malicious communication can cause serious distress and it is right that such an offence should attract a level of penalty that properly reflects the gravity of the offence. However, £2,000 is the highest financial penalty that may normally be awarded by a magistrates' court. As such, it should apply to offences which may be dealt with by a magistrates court, in particular cases which may cause physical hurt or damage to a person or property or cases where a person stands to gain financially from an illegal act.

Sending a malicious communication is serious. We all recognise the misery that that can cause and agree that the action should be punished. That is the purpose of my Bill. However, it is not a requirement of the offence that distress or anxiety should actually be caused. For that reason, I do not believe that the offence falls into the most serious category of offences with which a magistrates court may have to deal. However, I recognise the concern expressed in the reasoned arguments of my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North and in another place about the adequacy of a fine of level 3 which I proposed in my Bill. I accept the need to respond to that concern.

When the Bill's sponsor in another place, Lord Campbell of Alloway, sought my views on the possibility of a higher penalty, I was happy on reflection, bearing in mind what my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North had argued here, to agree that a penalty at level 4—a maximum fine of £1,000—more accurately reflected the seriousness of the offence. The amendment tabled by Lord Campbell in another place was accepted without opposition. I hope that the House will also welcome it today. In view of that, I wonder whether my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North will consider withdrawing his amendment.

Ms. Jo Richardson (Barking): Like other hon. Members, I was not privileged to take part in earlier stages of the Bill. Nevertheless, I am very interested in what is happening and what might happen when the Bill becomes law, as I hope it will. I very much welcome the Bill and applaud the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) for introducing it.

We are now considering the narrow point of the penalties. Having thought about this for some time, I think that level 3 at £400, is about right. All the talk about levels reminds me of a department store. One arrives at level 3 and then goes up to level 4. When my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) referred to Harrods, I really felt that I was in a department store—[Interruption.] I hope that I may continue my speech without this dialogue taking place on the Benches before me.

All the discussion this morning has concerned malicious communications which might come from stockbrokers or very well-off people. From my constituency experience, I believe that the majority of malicious communications come from poorer people. I am not knocking or defending those people.

I do not want to stray into too many generalities, but I want to refer to some examples. Very often poison-pen letters and malicious communications arise from neighbourhood problems involving feelings of harassment. For example, a person in one house may feel harassed and pressured by someone living next door or in the flat above. I am sure that I need not remind hon. Members on both sides of the House about this. They need only look in their post-bags or go to their surgeries this evening to find cases where people complain bitterly that they have come to the end of their tether because of the problems caused by a neighbour. I can see hon. Members nodding in agreement.

10.15 am

We would hope that those problems would not normally result in a poison-pen letter of malicious communication, but it occasionally does. I have met constituents who are the persecuted and I have also met the persecutors. I have met people who have received malicious communications and poison-pen letters stemming from the difficulties and friction caused by neighbourhood problems.

We must watch out for another point when we are considering the level of fine. I do not want to see people driven to desperation by the problems that they face in their daily lives then subjected to a fine of £1,000 or £2,000.

Mr. Corbett: All hon. Members will recognise the description that my hon. Friend has given of what we will loosely describe as "neighbour" problems. My hon. Friend may be interested to know that Birmingham has established a pilot conciliation scheme with help from one of the universities to try to resolve the problems before they cause people to send abusive or poison-pen letters. Other local authorities might want to consider that scheme in due course.

Ms. Richardson: I am very grateful for that interesting point and I hope that we will consider it.

Many of the people to whom I am referring do not know where to go to make proper complaints. I need not remind hon. Members of the common phrase which constituents use in surgeries, "You are my last resort." My heart always sinks when I hear that. I feel that they have been to everyone else and are now coming to me and I probably have no solution either.

People are not always aware of the fact that the persecutor may have a problem. They may not be aware that a reference to the social services department may be the best course of action. Or, if council tenants are involved, reference to the housing deparment might be the answer.

I believe that the penalty may be over-severe for another category. Some single men and women may be lonely and in some cases unable to go out very often. Those people may spend their time at the window looking up and down the road at their neighbours. They may not invent situations about neighbours, but they might see a young woman going out, temporarily leaving her children in the house. The person watching may think, "How terrible." That person may send a letter which might be construed as a malicious communication. That may sound far-fetched in the rather glorified atmosphere of stockbrokerage that we have just been talking about. However, it is much more the reality than the high-flown kind of malicious communication referred to by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover in terms of his letters from Tiny Rowland.

Mr. Skinner: When Tiny Rowland writes to me, he is not sending me a malicious communication that would cause me anxiety and distress. I never read the letters thoroughly, but it seems to me that he is trying to cause anxiety and distress to the people who own Harrods, by suggesting that they do not really own it and that they got it by dodgy means. I am being used as the middle man in the exercise, and I know that other hon. Members get these letters in brown envelopes. Would that come within the general ambit of the Bill and, if so, would that alter my hon. Friend's view about the appropriate level of fine?

Then there is another consideration——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The first consideration was long enough.

Ms. Richardson: I have never had a communication from Tiny Rowland, or perhaps I have, but have thrown it away unopened. That is a slightly different scenario from the one that we are discussing.

I am worried about setting fine levels at £1,000 or £2,000 rather than £400, which was the level originally in the Bill. I am sure that the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) gave the matter a great deal of thought and took advice before fixing the fines at level 3, and did not merely pluck the figure out of the air. Even if the maximum is to be £1,000 or £2,000, there may be variations within those sums. We all know that different magistrates see cases in different ways, just as judges do. We know how the sentences given for rape vary. I am not straying from discussion of the Bill, Mr. Deputy Speaker; I am discussing the level of sentences. We are often outraged that a short sentence is given by one judge in a nasty case, whereas an appropriately long sentence is given in another case. There may be a similar unevenness in fines. The result will be that some poor old gentleman—not Tiny Rowland—or some poor old lady or young woman will be fined more than he or she can afford.

The hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) was asked why we did not go the whole hog. I assure the Minister that no pun is intended, incidentally.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Don't worry; I have heard it before.

Ms. Richardson: Am I not right in thinking that if a fine is not paid, a person has to go to prison?

Mr. Skinner: That was my other point. Has my hon. Friend considered the question of non-payment? We hear constantly that the prisons are full and that the number of prisoners is at an all-time record. The Prime Minister was elected on the basis of law and order, but the prisons are so full that prisoners are breaking out. The Prime Minister was going to set the people free, but the prisoners got out. If fines were set at level 5—£2,000—more people might be unable to pay. If they fell into contempt of court, they would be pushed into gaol and add to the numbers in prison. That is why I am still considering whether to support the original provision or the amendment. I wonder whether my hon. Friend can help me. In my case, the jury is still out.

Ms. Richardson: I have never been asked to help my hon. Friend before, because he always knows his own mind. It is a novel experience for me. He has made a serious point.

Mr. Greg Knight: Surely, the point is something of a red herring. If a defendant cannot meet a fine due to a change in circumstances, there is provision for the courts to review the weekly payment, and they invariably do so. Only if the defendant makes it quite clear to the court that he is not prepared to pay the fine or if his behaviour is so perverse that he is putting other things—such as his own entertainment—before the payment of the fine, is he sent to prison. Prison is not really a threat to a person who makes a reasonable effort to discharge the fine imposed by the court.

Ms. Richardson: The hon. Gentleman does not live in the kind of world that I live in. I am not talking about stockbrokers or the well off. It is stupid and wrong to write a poison pen letter and to be caught and fined. However, the guilty person might be a pensioner or be receiving income support. He might be paying back other debts, such as bills for gas and electricity. Such people find it difficult to pay fines, with the best will in the world, and they end up in prison.

All hon. Members acknowledge that our prisons are overcrowded. One has only to look at Holloway, for example, where many women are on remand, often for petty offences such as shop-lifting and non-payment of fines.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The hon. Lady mentioned Holloway. It is important to emphasise that Holloway is not overcrowded.

Ms. Richarson: It is true that I have not been to Holloway for a year or 14 months. When I spoke of it as being overcrowded, I did not mean that there were six persons to a cell. However, the constant complaint at Holloway, which often comes from the Prison Officers Association, is that there are too few prison officers to deal with the number of prisoners and there is a distinct feeling that many of the women who are there for non-payment of fines or similar offences should not be there at all. That point is linked to my argument. I mentioned Holloway because it is a London prison and I know something about it. There are other prisons which are overcrowded and, even if Holloway is not technically overcrowded at the moment, it could become overcrowded.

Mr. Corbett: My hon. Friend is making an interesting point. The prison statistics for England and Wales for 1986 show that fine defaulters accounted for 22 per cent. of receptions under sentence, and that was 1 per cent. more than in the previous year. About 1·3 million men were fined in 1986—I do not have the figure for women.

Ms. Richardson: My hon. Friend has reinforced my argument. I am worried about the level of fines that could be imposed. My hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover said that he was waiting for the jury. I have made up my mind that £400 is the right amount. For that reason, I was disappointed to hear the hon. Member for Sherwood support the Lords amendment, because it sets fines too high. We should keep to the level of fines proposed by the Bill, at least for the time being, and see how that works. If the fines do not do the job that they are intended to do, it would be possible to increase them at a later stage.

Mr. Skinner: When I say that my jury is still out, it is because I am considering tactics. We have three choices: £400, £1,000, as proposed in the other place, and £2,000, as proposed by the hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight). There are only two Lobbies in the House, the Aye Lobby and the No Lobby. I think that my hon. Friend is bordering on accepting the lower level of fine, just as I am. We may, however, finish up throwing out the baby with the bath water and having an even more censorious fine. We must consider not just our reasons for wanting the lower level but which way to vote to get the lowest possible level on offer.

Ms. Richardson: I do not know, although presumably I should, the fines imposed at levels 1 and 2.

Mr. Greg Knight: Level 1 is a fine of £50 and level 2 is a fine of £100.

10.30 am

Ms. Richardson: Those fines are too low. On the whole, £400 is right. My hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover has made a good point—we do not have three Lobbies. We shall probably end up deciding between a fine of £400, as originally in the Bill, and a fine of £1,000, unless the hon. Member for Derby, North pushes his amendment for a fine of £2,000. I have come to the conclusion—or talked or read myself to the conclusion—that the best idea is to stick to the £400 and see how we go. The measure is an innovation—one which we should all welcome and on which we should congratulate the hon. Member for Sherwood. We should not go over the top but should stick to the £400.

Mr. Skinner: As my hon. Friend has said, the level of fine has ebbed and flowed. When I am making up my mind, I have to consider which decision will least benefit the lawyers. I always do that whenever a vote is to be taken, especially when lawyers are involved. They have different levels as well. I want to know before I walk through the Lobby whether my decision will enable the lawyers to get a big fat bonus. Their level in this matter has not yet been disclosed. I hope that the Under-Secretary of State will explain. The hon. Gentleman may well be able to argue that the legal payments are not a consideration, but that point must weigh in my mind. I do not want to vote for a measure and then, a few years later, have someone say to me, "You walked through the Lobby, Skinner"—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is difficult to see how this point arises under the narrow amendment before the House.

Mr. Skinner: You are bound to say that, Sir, because you have a different job. You will not have to go through the Lobby. You will sit in the Chair and no one from Doncaster will come to see you in two or three years' time and ask, "What did you do, Harold, on the day in question when the House lined the pockets of the lawyers?" You will be able to dodge the column. My hon. Friend the Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) and I will have to listen to all the complaints at our surgeries. Before we decide, I want to know whether this measure will fill the pockets of the lawyers, because there are many in this place.

Ms. Richardson: I take my hon. Friend's point. I am not a lawyer and I am always dropping clangers in terms of what lawyers think should be done. Should we not also consider the need to keep the fine low? I do not know where we stand on, for example, legal aid. A poor person who is up for prosecution and who goes to a lawyer will want legal aid. Will he be entitled to it?

Mr. Forth: Will the hon. Lady consider the point that the levels which we are discussing are maxima and judges will have the discretion to award fines up to those levels? Therefore, the hon. Lady's point about income levels, which I understand, could be catered for. I am sure that the hon. Lady and the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) agree that we want to ensure that effective fines can be applied to the wealthy while allowing the use of discretion to take account of people on lower incomes. If we follow the hon. Lady's recommendation, we may lose out on penalising the wealthy.

Ms. Richardson: The hon. Gentleman was momentarily out of the Chamber when I talked about the maximum.

Mr. Skinner: The hon. Gentleman referred to "maxima".

Mr. Forth: It is Latin for the plural of maximum.

Ms. Richardson: If there is a maximum, magistrates and judges have to decide what to impose. Sometimes they go for the jugular and impose the heaviest sentence. I am concerned about having a fine of £1,000 or £2,000 because it may result in poor people being penalised. I acknowledge that they should not have committed these acts. It is dreadful for anyone to send a poison pen letter, but we must take the circumstances into account. Magistrates and judges may be so annoyed and incensed by the offence that they go for the maximum penalty. I should like a more modest sentence, at least at the beginning. That would be the best way to proceed before we go down this new road.

Mr. Butler: I am attracted by the idea of the availability of higher fines because they would be a deterrent. We are aiming for deterrents, rather than punishments, to stop the offence. The availability of higher fines would provide greater flexibility for magistrates in coping with the varying degrees of gravity of the offence. It would provide some headroom for inflation which, I am afraid, is still too high. Sometimes I wonder why we do not include in our legislation some power for the Secretaries of State to vary fines according to inflation. The availability of higher fines would be beneficial in dealing with persistent offenders. When these cases come before the courts, we shall find that there is a high number of such offenders.

In judging the level of fine to be applied to these offences, recognition should not be given to matters that blow up in the press. That is one reason why I am a little worried about the Criminal Justice Bill, which we have just passed, which allows reference to a higher court for sentences that seem too lenient. I fear that there may be trial in the press and reaction to that.

On Second Reading, I mentioned that I had worked at No. 10 and that Prime Ministers had received hate mail. I deliberately stressed the fact that Prime Ministers in the plural were affected, because Jim Callaghan and the present Prime Minister both received hate mail. From the way in which the incidents were sensationalised in the press, it seemed that such hate mail was peculiar to the present Prime Minister. My hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) also referred on Second Reading to the responsibility of the press in reporting these matters. There is nothing peculiar about the present Prime Minister receiving hate mail. It is something intrinsic in being a public figure. We all receive hate mail.

Mr. Skinner: I receive hate mail.

Mr. Butler: The hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) receives hate mail.

Mr. Skinner: In relation to hate mail, I was trying to explain that Tiny Rowland has been hoping to use me as a vehicle to express certain views in the House. He is attacking the owners of Harrods because he thinks that they managed to purchase Harrods by some dodgy methods. He has been sending hate mail—it has not caused me anxiety and distress—deliberately to try to cause anxiety and distress for his enemies among the other Tories who were running Harrods. It was really an argument between Tories. That is the top and bottom of it. Would mail causing a third person anxiety and distress be described as hate mail? It has not caused me any worry at all.

Mr. Butler: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. My understanding was that Tiny Rowland was a supporter of the SDP, rather than a Tory. I, too, have received mail from Tiny Rowland.

Mr. Skinner: The hon. Gentleman is not suggesting for a minute that the SDP, which is now regarded as the provisional army led by the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen), is anything other than a front for the Tory party which, as many people say to me, will eventually——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not see how this can possibly arise under this amendment.

Mr. Butler: The hon. Gentleman's point is probably dealt with by the libel laws. I have received such mail. I did not understand it and, to be quite frank, I thought that it was from somebody who was a little deranged. Many hon. Members present will have received hate mail. I suspect that the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock) also receives hate mail. It is a fact of public life. The right hon. Member for Islwyn is a nice chap, after all. He is a Welshman, so he must be a nice chap. My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) also received a large amount of hate mail from old retired colonels. We in public life should not be too sensitive to such matters. They should be weighed up and judged in the courts.

When I stood in the Brecon and Radnor by-election, I received some hate mail by postcard. At the time, I wondered whether it came from the dirty tricks department of a certain party that I shall not mention. but the point about this——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. What has this to do with the level of penalties, which is what we are considering?

Mr. Butler: I shall refer to that matter, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The fact that such communications were in the form of postcards magnified the degree of mens rea, as they were read by people other than myself. That fact should be taken into account by the courts when deciding fines. For those reasons, we should have a fine higher than £400.

10.45 am

Mrs. Audrey Wise (Preston): My hon. Friend the Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) spoke realistically about the Bill and the proposal on the level of penalties. I do not think that the Bill is about wealthy people. I do not say that the wealthy will not commit such crimes. I do not know many wealthy people, so I am not acquainted with their foibles. In general, I am prepared to believe that wealthy people are as likely as, or even more likely than, my associates and constituents to commit any crime. But in practice, wealthy people will not face such charges. If they do, they are unlikely to have to pay a fine, whether it be £400 or £2,000, because they employ their wealth in ways that make it much less likely that they will be found guilty. I support the £400 penalty not because I wish to be soft on wealthy people but because wealthy people are not likely to be fined.

The Bill is good. It should be a crime to send hate mail. I agree entirely with my hon. Friend the Member for Barking. It can be extremely distressing to receive such communications, and people should be protected. The Bill should be a disincentive to sending such mail and should demonstrate society's disapproval of such action. A £400 fine is adequate to do that. We would not be well advised to make the fine higher, because we would find ourselves on rather tricky ground. Although sending hate mail should be an offence, it does not involve the same seriousness as some other crimes from which we seek to protect people.

We would open the door to some invidious comparisons if, for instance, there were a £2,000 penalty for an offence under this Bill and a lighter penalty for a crime that most people think merits more severe treatment. We already have such problems. I am sure that I am not alone in collecting cuttings about idiosyncratic sentences imposed by judges and magistrates. Many such sentences are imposed for crimes against people or property. There is a bias. There are heavier sentences for crimes against property than those against people. I disapprove of that. Comparisons can and will be made. In our genuine zeal to make it an offence to send hate mail, we do not want to give the impression that we underrate the seriousness of other offences.

The perfectly valid point has been made that the proposed fine is a maximum and that magistrates will not be compelled to impose a maximum fine. Anything that allows too much unevenness in sentencing for any offence tends to bring the law into some disrepute. We might think that magistrates employ perfect logic, look at a wealthy person, and say, "I am slamming the top penalty on you," and look at the poor, elderly person who, because of circumstances in his or her life, was driven to commit the offence, and say, "I shall impose a small fine." But magistrates do not work like that. There is much more randomness in sentencing. On occasions, there is a tendency for some judges or magistrates to impose exemplary sentences. They look at the circumstances of the case and decide not only whether someone should be punished or discouraged but whether a whole class of people are to be more strongly discouraged. That always worries me.

The punishment should fit the crime and not allow people to ride their hobby horses. The person who imposes the penalty might have been a victim of such a crime. He may not have reported it, but it might have rankled with him. That can add to idiosyncratic imposition of sentences.

In a sense, this legislation is an experiment to see whether the incidence of such offences can be reduced. The purpose should be prevention rather than punishment. A person receiving such communications is not greatly protected by the fact that the person responsible is brought to court and punished. In fact, the distress may be cumulative if court proceedings result, and further problems could arise in the neighbourhood bringing more trouble for both parties in the future. In a sense, if cases come to court the legislation will have failed. The preventive nature of the legislation must be stressed at all times.

I believe that at this stage a fine of £400 is sufficient to make it clear that society and Parliament disapprove of the offence. Magistrates would not have such a problem in fixing appropriate sentences.

Mr. Skinner: I have listened carefully to my hon. Friend and it is clear that she wants the lowest possible level of fine. Her comments suggest that she is leaning towards an even lower level than £400. She is really saying that she does not want a serious fine at all. As she has spoken in that vein, would it not have been better to put down an amendment specifying an even lower level? I think that that is what is really running through my hon. Friend's mind.

Mrs. Wise: My hon. Friend is wrong. Had my thoughts been in that direction, I should not have hesitated to put down an amendment. There should be some flexibility. A simple £50 fine, for example, would not be a sufficient mark of disapproval. We must fix a penalty which shows that we seriously disapprove of the offence. For most people, £400 is still a substantial sum. If it were generally known that such offences could draw penalties of that amount, most people would regard that as a mark of serious disapproval and discouragement. My hon. Friend is therefore wrong, although I am glad that he has been listening carefully to my remarks. I wondered why he was so silent. Clearly, he was thinking hard about what I was saying.

Mr. Skinner: I was listening hard because my hon. Friend seemed to have failed to appreciate the attitude of rich people—those with the brass, such as Tiny Rowland whose letters have been causing anxiety and distress to people at Harrods. Let us consider the matter from the other end. Those rich people can afford to employ the best lawyers in the land, or at least the most expensive ones —I do not know whether they are any better, as to me they are all pretty much in the same bag.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are good ones and bad ones.

Mr. Skinner: Rich offenders might impress the magistrates by employing a lawyer called Sir Humphrey Jackson-hyphen-Smith or, to get down to brass tacks, someone called Napley—who costs £400 per hour—and the chances are that they would get away with it. My hon. Friend seems not to appreciate that £400 is chickenfeed for such people. They can take it off the ribs of the next batch of employees at their factory or wherever in a couple of minutes.

Mrs. Wise: With all due respect, my hon. Friend makes my point for me. Whatever the fine is, those people will not pay it because they can afford to spend a lot of money on their defence and will thus not be found guilty. For such people, the level of fine is irrelevant because they will employ expensive defence lawyers to avoid having a conviction on their record or reported in the newspapers. Whether the fine was £400, £1,000 or £2,000, they would take all possible steps not to be found guilty, whether or not they were actually guilty. As they would not be called on to pay the fine, it would not matter to them if it was £2,000, but it would matter a great deal to the people mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Barking. If a magistrate fails to apply the logic that we expect, a fine of that magnitude could be a disaster.

People should be punished for such offences—I make no bones about that—and I strongly disapprove of such activities. That is why I support the original intention of the Bill. Nevertheless, we do not want offenders to be driven to desperation. For ordinary people who may already be a bit unhinged, as they probably would be to have sent such letters in the first place, a fine of £2,000 could make them suicidal or drive them to commit other offences to get the money to pay the fine. A ridiculous spiral would be created.

Therefore, if the opportunity arises I shall vote in favour of a maximum fine of £400. That will give ample discretion to magistrates. I do not believe that there is any minimum laid down, so the magistrate would have full discretion to impose a fine up to the maximum of £400. I believe that that level is ample. It shows Parliament's disapproval and I believe that it would be a genuine discouragement to people contemplating such offences, assuming that they are acting rationally. If they are not rational, they will not be dissuaded, whatever the level of fine.

Finally, as with all crime, the biggest disincentive is the knowledge that the person may be found out. That is the most important factor. I congratulate the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) on bringing in the Bill. I should not like it to be spoilt or its emphasis unduly altered by the imposition of too heavy a penalty.

Mrs. Gorman: I support the good, common-sense points made by the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson). I, too, believe that in this instance justice should be tempered with mercy. The levels of fine originally laid down in the Bill probably make more sense than allowing magistrates to whack on very heavy fines on the ground that it is the rich we want to catch. It is unfortunate how often the nasty, envious side of human nature comes out when we discuss such matters, not least in some of the rather malicious remarks of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), who constantly pillories a gentleman in the City who cannot come to the House to defend himself but has to put up with such maliciousness and cannot take the hon. Gentleman to court for it.

There are many instances of malicious communications. Last week, I received quite a number of letters which most people would regard as offensive, mainly from people who could not get tickets for Wimbledon. I believe that the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) wrote such a letter to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. That communication, which travelled from this place by Her Majesty's letter post, asked my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to carry out certain acts in relation to me and my status in the Conservative party which I considered to be a threat. Although I think that the right hon. Gentleman was wrong and that his action was ungentlemanly, I should not like to see him taken to court and fined at level 4 or 5. If he had gone over the top, I would be happy for him to be fined at level 3, which about fits in with the amount of money that a Member of Parliament can afford.

Mr. Corbett: I assure the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) that my right hon. Friend meant no threat. I can think of no occasion on which he has behaved in other than a gentlemanly fashion. The fact of the matter is that he disagreed profoundly with the hon. Lady's comment.

Mrs. Gorman: In my understanding of what was said by the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook, from my reading of the Hansard report of last Friday's proceedings, he tore into me strongly and used what I consider to be false information in his allegations about me. However, we know that anything said in this Chamber is protected by privilege, and that is why the hon. Member for Bolsover gets away with saying so many unpleasant things about a certain gentleman in the City who cannot be here to defend himself.

Mr. Skinner: Whatever I say in the House, I am prepared to repeat outside it. Unlike some hon. Members, I do not make use of the privilege that is there for hon. Members to use. The letter I received from Tiny Rowland attacking Harrods has been printed in The Observer, because I believe that he just about owns that newspaper as well. The hon. Lady should not get upset about that. The letters that Tiny Rowland is sending out, causing anxiety and distress to Harrods, are being printed in newspapers week after week.

The hon. Lady should not assume that I am not prepared to repeat outside anything that I say in this Chamber. I do not know anything about the correspondence between my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) and the hon. Lady. I only know that recently she has been causing anxiety and distress to people trying to get into Wimbledon, but who cannot do so, because she supports the touts who sell tickets at 10 or 20 times over the odds. I am not sure whether that activity falls within the Bill's general ambit but it has caused distress to many people.

Mrs. Gorman: On a point of information, if the hon. Member for Bolsover wishes to enter into a debate about Wimbledon, perhaps we may have a private discussion about the level of the ticket mark-up. However, I shall not touch on that subject now, because Mr. Deputy Speaker would rule me out of order. He brings me to order, quite rightly, fairly often, when I ramble off the point. I hope that he will adopt the same attitude to the hon. Member for Bolsover, who frequently rambles off the point.

Mr. Greg Knight: Does my hon. Friend agree on reflection that she has destroyed her own case? She stated that a fine of £400 is sufficient, and she gave as an illustration a letter sent by the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley). However, because that right hon. Gentleman—to use the phrase of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner)—moonlights by writing columns for glossy magazines, he is a very wealthy man and a fine of £400 would be nothing to him.

Mrs. Gorman: I take my hon. Friend's point but I do not wish to be malicious towards the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook; he has his point of view and I have mine.

There may be occasions when people write letters that are construed to be of a malicious nature, when they really are only expressing concern. The hon. Member for Barking pointed out that many humble people spend much of their lives peeping through their curtains at what the neighbours are getting up to, and that they might see comings and goings at a house causing them to wonder whether children were being neglected. In some cases, they could be right. They may not write a letter to the parent but to the NSPCC. Although we may laugh at such people and question whether they have nothing better to do with their time, they are in many ways the eyes and ears of our streets. There has been a breakdown of our traditional housing, when we lived in rows of houses and could watch the street. After we tore down all those nice neighbourhoods and replaced them with ghastly tower blocks of flats, people could not watch the streets and we began to see the breakdown——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I fail to see how that has anything to do with the amendment. The hon. Lady should return to the subject of penalty levels.

Mrs. Gorman: I thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for your remarks.

People may write letters with good motivation, although their action may be construed as being malicious. Such reporting is sometimes very helpful and we should not discourage people from taking that action. If they err, a modest fine would be more appropriate. I should not like magistrates to be given the power to go over the top. We all of us make mistakes some time, be it the police or people peeking through windows. I would not want people to be put off entirely from keeping an eye on things.

The hon. Member for Barking spoke also about disputes between neighbours and the fines they involve. I have had the experience of living next door to someone who was driving me crazy. She was a breeder of scottie dogs, which seemed to multiply in the garden like mushrooms. Sometimes there would be as many as 40 puppies barking and yapping in the garden. Because they were not well fed, they pushed their dinner dishes round and round the concrete, making awful scraping noises and barking. That used to drive me to distraction.

Eventually, my husband was driven to the point of sitting down and writing a letter to the woman, saying, "The next time I am out in my garden digging the flower beds, if your dogs are out there driving me crazy, I shall spike one of them on my garden fork." He did not mean any harm. In normal circumstances, and given one dog at a time, he loves animals—but he could have been driven beyond the point of self-control. Had he been, and gone before a magistrate who was a dog lover to destruction —as some magistrates may be—he could have been fined an inordinate sum of money. I believe that we should retain a sense of proportion by keeping fines down to a relatively modest level, and give them a try on those lines.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I can see how the question of those adjacent dogs could be a matter of grave concern, especially as my hon. Friend's husband might be thinking of writing again in similar terms. In the context of fine levels, I draw my hon. Friend's attention to the statutory defence existing in subsection (2), which I feel sure her husband will wish to adopt if he is subsequently prosecuted for writing the kind of letter that is apparently commonplace for him to write.

Mrs. Gorman: I thank my hon. Friend for his learned and wise intervention and good advice. I may say that all that happened some years ago and that we subsequently moved. Nevertheless, it is a good idea to put before the House concrete examples of the circumstances in which our laws are meant to operate, so that we do not legislate in a vacuum. I support absolutely the points made by the hon. Member for Barking, whose common sense and practical experience of life so often contribute useful points to our debates.

Mr. Corbett: First, I congratulate the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) on the safe return of his Bill from the other place. I share his apprehension as the minutes tick by, and I do not intend to detain the House too long.

In considering the appropriate maximum fine for those convicted under the Bill, we should remember that the intent of the sender is at the heart of the legislation. The sender must want to cause distress and anxiety. Someone in Worcester wrote to me complaining that it was typical of the Tories to bring in a Bill to prevent those who oppose the Government's policies in robust terms from writing to Ministers and other Conservartive Members. Of course, I have already assured him—and no doubt the Bill's promoter will do the same—that such letters are outside the scope of the Bill. Let me say in passing, however, that I hope that supporters of the present Administration get lots of them.

In our last debate, the Minister explained why he felt that the Law Commission's recommendation about the level of fines should not be supported, and I very much agree with what he said then. It is important that, as well as attempting to set similar fines for similar offences, we should consider who are likely to be convicted, and there ability to pay. Diane Simpson, a leading graphologist who dealt with about 1,000 poison pen letters last year, says that writers of such letters come from all age groups and both sexes, which relates to what some of my hon. Friends have said. That does not help us much, although she adds that the famous are more likely to receive hate mail sent with malicious intent from strangers. That could apply to actresses, television presenters and so on. Other people, she says, receive such letters from so-called friends and colleagues.

All that Diane Simpson can tell us is that the profile of the typical poison pen writer has changed. She told The Times on 10 February this year:

> "Ten years ago, they were invariably women—often, I am sorry to say, some poor woman going through the menopause in a village somewhere."

Although she said that the writers came from all age groups and both sexes, like my hon. Friends I doubt that there is an equal spread over income groups. I suspect that the pressures and frustrations that lead some people to write those letters are felt much more strongly at the lower end of the income scale.

We have decided—rightly in my view—that prison is no answer for writers of poison pen letters, who are invaribly sad, often lonely and at odds with their world because of real or perceived hurt from others. But there is no point in pitching the fine at a level which, on conviction, is likely in many cases to ensure that the person ends up in gaol anyway through fine default. That is why I strongly oppose the suggestion that a £2,000 fine would be appropriate.

Mr. Greg Knight: May I put two points to the hon. Gentleman? First, should we not be careful not to place too much reliance on so-called statistical evidence? Because the law currently makes no provision for poison pen letters, any such evidence must relate only to reported cases. We do not know, for example, how many letters have been sent whose recipients have been caused anxiety and distress but have not reported the matter.

Secondly, as was pointed out earlier, the Bill does not require a minimum sentence from the courts. All that I have sought to do, and the other place has done, is to give the courts a wider range of discretion within which to pitch the penalty as they deem appropriate in individual cases.

Mr. Corbett: I understand exactly what the hon. Gentleman is saying. Because there has not been a specific offence before, the evidence that we have brought to our debates has had to be anecdotal and largely taken from our advice bureaux. I also take the point that the level at which the fine is set will be the maximum, and that there is no minimum. I shall come to that in a minute.

11.15 am

Like my hon. Friend the Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise), I am not a great believer in the theory of deterrence. I do not think that there is any real evidence that the length of sentence or level of fine deters, especially in cases of this kind. Evidence suggests that a person's judgment is more likely to be on the likelihood of being caught, which weighs more heavily on someone contemplating breaking the law. I doubt whether that would cross the minds of poison pen writers in any event.

Diane Simpson, the graphologist, offers some hope and support for the Bill. She said in an interview in The Times that it was often surprisingly easy to track down anonymous letter writers:

> "All anonymous letter writers have two things in common: the first being that they are all cowards; the second that they are would-be manipulators of other people's behaviour."

If, given an alarming reported rise in the incidence of poison pen letters, it is surprisingly easy to track many of them down, the level of fine on conviction is a matter of real interest. Too many people now go to gaol for non-payment of fines. We do not know, but I suspect that in many cases that is due not to unwillingness to pay but to inability to pay, whatever the court may do before the prison gates open to reduce, say, the rate at which a fine is paid off over a number of weeks.

Perversely, the fine will often bite hardest on the least well-off who are caught and convicted, almost irrespective of its level. Of course, a fine of £1,000 or £2,000 imposed on someone pushed into deception by poverty bites a good deal harder than a fine of 100 times that amount imposed on some city slicker who is caught with his hand in someone else's till. I am thinking especially of those convicted of fraud against the DHSS.

According to the prison statistics for England and Wales, fine defaulters accounted for some 22 per cent. of all receptions under sentence in 1986. The proportion of those aged between 17 and 20 who were sent to prison for non-payment of fines between 1976 and 1986 almost doubled, from 14 per cent. to 25 per cent., and over the same 10 years the proportion of those aged between 21 and 29 sent to prison rose from 37 per cent. to 45 per cent. In 1986, 1,100 females were sent to prison for non-payment of fines. It is fair to point out, however, that imprisonment for fine defaulters is not at the peak that it reached a few years ago.

Having turned our backs on imprisonment as an option for the magistrates, we should not, by setting the level of fine too high, make it more likely that people convicted under the Bill will find themselves in prison. I have said that I do not believe that a level 5 maximum fine of £2,000 would be appropriate. I am not sure that the level 4 maximum fine of £1,000 is appropriate. I acknowledge that part of the responsibility of magistrates is to inflict punishment, but by no means do I put a full stop after that word. Especially in these cases, punishing people by way of a fairly hefty fine in relation to their means and ability to pay, or by imprisonment, does not solve the underlying problems of people who feel that they have to write such letters. I hope that at the very least the House will not agree with the amendment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The House in general welcomes the Bill. I wish to extend to my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) the congratulations of the House on having introduced the Bill. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) for having provoked an unexpectedly spirited and interesting debate.

My general view is that the House should accept the Lords amendment, and should adopt a scale 4 penalty rather than a scale 5 penalty, and I commend that view to the House.

It may be of assistance to the House when determining the appropriate scale if I explain briefly the purpose of the Bill. The Bill is designed to deal with a serious problem which was identified and described in detail in the Law Commission report of 1985. I must remind the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson)—I shall refer to her speech later—that the Law Commission recommended a scale 5 penalty for the offence encompassed within the Bill. That is a mark of the seriousness which the Law Commission attached to the offences.

The offences deal with hate mail, but they also deal with another class of offence which has not been mentioned in the debate—that associated with racial persecution. The hon. Lady will be well aware that many members of the ethnic minorities have been the subject of campaigns. Those campaigns can take at least two forms: first, letters of a highly offensive kind through the letter box, and secondly such nasty things as dog shit through the letter box. That is a serious matter, especially if it is a concerted campaign. I must stress to those hon. Members who focused on the desirability of adhering to a scale 3 fine, that sometimes we are dealing with a particularly nasty offence with racial overtones, committed over a period, against which we should react fairly vigorously.

Ms. Richardson: The Minister is convincing me. He has made an excellent point in raising the question of racial violence via malicious letters. We could all point to examples of that. He also mentioned things other than letters going through the letter box. Would lighted objects coming through the letter box be covered by the offence of arson, or would they be considered malicious communication?

Mr. Hogg: The hon. Lady has in mind bits of paper, petrol, or rags which have been set alight and which cause fires. Those are covered by the ordinary laws which deal with arson or malicious damage. We are dealing exclusively with mail and other objects which are sent with the purposes set out in the Bill. For those purposes, the word "sent" is apt to include putting something through a letter box, and not necessarily posting it through the mail. The Bill deals exclusively with objects posted through the letter box with the intention set out in the Bill.

Mrs. Wise: I am in an odd position, because I, too, wish to thank the Minister for raising a matter which had not occurred to me—the possibility of such actions being part of a campaign, perhaps for racial reasons. I had not taken that into account. Clearly, with the broader knowledge to which the Minister has access, he is destroying part of the case that we made.

Mr. Hogg: That is unusually gracious of the hon. Lady. She has put me into some difficulty, as I was going to refer to her speech and I had it in mind to make some very unflattering comments about her. However, she has been so gracious that I will have to redesign my speech; otherwise, I shall be profoundly embarrassed.

Mr. Greg Knight: I wonder whether my hon. Friend can clarify a matter for the House. My hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) may have misled the House unwittingly when he said that he favoured a higher penalty, as he considered it an inflation-proofing measure. Will the Minister confirm that provisions already exist whereby the Government can increase fines by statutory instrument to take account of inflation?

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North is entirely correct. I was going to deal with that when referring to the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler). The fine attached to any scale can be raised by statutory instrument. That is how the Government can deal with the serious problem that my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South identifed.

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Hogg: The hon. Gentleman has not participated in the debate; nonetheless, I am feeling charitable.

Mr. Allen: I have listened carefully to much of the debate; I do not know whether the Minister regards that as participating. Perhaps I should have made a lengthy intervention, and perhaps later this morning I shall take the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman would not have been allowed to make a lengthy intervention, and I hope that he will not do so now.

Mr. Allen: By pure chance, this morning I received a letter from a constituent who has received unsolicited through his letter box something called, "Just Truth", which is, "A nationalist review of policy affecting British People", price 10p. It was the winter 1987 edition, so clearly it did not sell very well as it was shoved unsolicited through the letter boxes in my constituency. It includes references to the holocaust of 6 million Jews being an error of fact, it refers to the ethnic composition of police recruitment and training, and contains various other disparaging remarks. Would such an item be caught under the provisions of the Malicious Communications Bill? If so, what action would arise from that?

Mr. Hogg: The hon. Gentleman has drawn attention to the fact that he has been in the Chamber for most of the debate. Although the hon. Gentleman is eminently forgettable, wearing what he does today, he is also eminently visible. In fact, he has not been in the Chamber for the greater part of the debate. The debate has been going on for nearly two hours and the hon. Gentleman's presence has been extremely limited. Were it otherwise, we should have spotted him because he is dressed in such an obvious way.

Mr. Allen: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. With the greatest respect to the Chair, and to the Minister —with great respect to one, and less to the other—I have been here for the majority of the debate so far. I should like to place that on record and graciously to accept the Minister's comments regarding my attire.

11.30 am

Mr. Hogg: The hon. Gentleman is making the point I have already made, which is that he is eminently forgettable. I do not think that we can carry the matter much further. It is for the House to judge whether he has been present; I am confident that he has not.

The hon. Gentleman asked for my advice, and that is flattering. He asked whether the document would fall within the scope of the Bill. I cannot tell him the answer until I look at the document, but if he wants my professional advice, he can show it to me afterwards and I shall give it to him.

We have identified the fact—it is common ground—that the Bill is designed to deal with a serious problem, which can be concerted and can have a broad base. It is not sufficiently addressed by statute at present. Therefore, we can proceed on the basis that this is an important Bill designed to address a serious social mischief.

The question that arises is the level of fine—whether we should proceed on the basis of a scale 3: scale 4, or scale 5 fine. Several hon. Members have said that penalties must bear a relationship one with the other and that it would be wrong for our disapproval of one particular offence, such as that with which we are dealing, to drive us to put it into a scale of fine that is disproportionate to the scales of fines attached to other offences.

The offences with which we are dealing are dealt with summarily. The hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) asked whether there should be a penalty over and above scale 5. Generally speaking, the maximum penalty that can be awarded by a justice is a scale 5 penalty. There are exceptional cases in which justices can impose a more substantial financial penalty, but that is unusual. We could provide for a higher level of financial penalty only if we were to provide that this class of offence should be dealt with on indictment. For reasons that I hope the hon. Member for Caernarfon will accept, it is undesirable that this class of offence should be dealt with by a jury. It is pre-eminently the type of offence that should be dealt with by justices and, accordingly, we could not attach to it a penalty in excess of scale 5.

Mr. Wigley: What I had in mind was repeated offences. Can the Minister tell whether repeated offences, if they are seriously malicious or with racial undertones, such as those mentioned, can be taken further, perhaps under other legislation, to ensure that they are duly dealt with?

Mr. Hogg: The hon. Gentleman has raised an important point and I can give him only an off-the-cuff reply. There are other statutes that touch on such conduct. Criminal libel could be invoked in some circumstances. Moreover, some statutes dealing with race relations might be appropriate and some of the communications might fall foul of the Public Order Act 1986. That is an off-the-cuff reply, and I do not guarantee that it is correct. However, I am certain that other legislation could in some circumstances be applied to such offences.

My judgment is that scale 4 is correct. Scale 5 is attached to those classes of offence involving violence or serious danger to public health. Scale 5 is the maximum that a justice can award, and it would be wrong to put this offence into that class. As a matter of general principle, measuring offence against offence, I strongly recommend that scale 4 is appropriate and not scale 5.

The hon. Member for Barking voiced a number of anxieties and I entirely understand her concern. However, we are dealing only with maxima, not with mandatory sentences. The hon. Lady is understandably concerned about the risk of people being sent to prison in default of payment. The point she raised was responded to fully by my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North in an intervention. There are considerable statutory restrictions on the ability of a court to send someone to prison for non-payment of a fine. As a general rule, people will go to prison for non-payment of a fine only if the court has found as fact that they are able to pay and that the failure to pay is persistent and wilful. I have always taken the view that there is a need to have the penalty of imprisonment as a final sanction for those guilty of wilful or persistent non-payment of fines.

The hon. Member for Barking made a specific point about Holloway. I shall deal with that briefly, because you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, would pull me up short if I went on at any length. It is wrong to suppose that Holloway is overcrowded. The population is much the same as the certified normal accommodation. It is also wrong to suppose that Holloway is understaffed, because it is not. The hon. Lady is right to say that the courts must address a person's ability to pay when imposing a fine. I hope that the courts will make a careful inquiry into means when determining a persons's ability to pay a fine in the context of the Bill we are discussing, and in the context of other offences.

Ms. Richardson: I want to refer to my point about Holloway being understaffed. I appeal to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to let me make this point. Theoretically, Holloway is probably not understaffed, but my information from people at Holloway has always been that because Holloway contains so many remand prisoners, there are always many prison officers out of the prison taking people to hospital or court and that the staff remaining in the prison find themselves overstretched. Every governor I have ever seen at Holloway has said that more staff would be helpful for the atmosphere in the prison.

Mr. Hogg: I will be careful not to go too far down this road, because, Mr. Deputy Speaker, you would call me to order. The hon. Lady will appreciate that we are implementing Fresh Start throughout the country and it is in place in Holloway. In my opinion, Holloway is properly staffed and we are attempting to make the most efficient use of staffing. I am afraid that I do not agree with the hon. Lady's point on Holloway, but I am glad to say that I am able to agree that the ability to pay fines should be a factor of which the courts should take account when determining the level of fine to be imposed.

I am sorry that we do not currently have the pleasure of the presence of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). He has made a useful contribution to the debate, in that he has made many interventions, all of them entertaining, but has not made a speech. I regret that, because I would have liked to hear his considered view. I seem to recall that we had a hung jury. The hon. Member for Bolsover was not certain which way his mind should go, and I am still uncertain which way it has gone, except that he has gone.

The hon. Member for Bolsover was deeply concerned that the choice he might have to make might have resource implications, by which he meant that if we adopt a level 4 fine, it might mean more barristers being paid more money. That is a serious point for the House to address. If there is a higher scale of penalty, it is just possible that a defendant might be tempted to instruct counsel when otherwise he might not. Therefore, theoretically, there could be resource implications. Having given this matter extremely careful thought—I regret that the hon. Gentleman is not present to hear my response—my concluded view, for which in other circumstances I would charge a substantial fee, is that it is unlikely that increasing the scale from 3 to 4 would have significant resource implications for the Government or private individuals.

Government and Parliament can uprate penalties and fines to reflect changes in the value of money by statutory instrument, the primary legislation being the Criminal Justice Act 1982.

My hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South made an important point about public figures receiving hate mail and said that that should be a factor in the scale of penalty imposed. It is inevitable that public figures will receive hate mail. I have known my father for 40 years or so—[Interruption.] I thought that I had better leave a little margin for error. During that time, my father has received much hate mail. I have received a modest amount myself, which will not be surprising to anyone who knows me. Public figures must put up with hate mail; that is life. We do not have to put up with offensive letters about ourselves being sent to other people. That is a different point and is largely covered by the libel laws, although in certain circumstances it could fall foul of the Bill. I say to public figures who are worried about hate mail that the wastepaper basket is a splendid solution to the problem.

My hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) made, as I would expect of her, several idiosyncratic points. I found myself thinking of the statutory defence provided in clause 1(2) of the Bill. I originally had it in mind to refer her to that statutory defence in the context of the remarks that she made about the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley). It occurred to me that in urging my hon. Friend's dismissal—a wicked and wrong thing for him to do, which we would greatly deplore if it happened—the right hon. Gentleman could rely on the statutory defence in clause 1(2) that he was making > "a demand which he believed he had reasonable grounds for making; and that he believed that the use of the threat was a proper means of reinforcing the demand."

I expect that the right hon. Gentleman, who is a barrack-room lawyer if ever there were one, would invoke that provision.

To my surprise, I found that I might have to refer the statutory defence to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay in the context of her husband. If he continues to write such letters to her neighbour, he may be in danger of prosecution.

Mrs. Gorman: I should not like my hon. Friend to think that my husband put that letter through next door's letterbox. He was driven to the point of sitting down one evening and composing the letter. I thought that it would be of interest to bring it to my hon. Friend's attention so that he could understand the provocation to which some people are subject.

Mr. Hogg: I understand that point, but if her husband had it in mind not to put it through next door's letterbox but to fold it into a dart and throw it over the wall it would still be "sending" according to the provisions of the Bill. My hon. Friend's husband had better be careful. If not, there are many hon. and learned Members who will look after his interests, should it prove necessary.

I have made some notes about the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise), but I have reservations about uttering them following her very gracious speech. I have noted, for example, "extraordinary display of class prejudice", "unhelpful contribution" and "suitability to be chosen as deputy leader of the Labour party". I gather that she was a candidate for the deputy leadership at one stage. Those were the sort of remarks that I intended to make, but she has been so gracious that it would be jolly unfair to make them. I do not make them in any spirit of criticism.

I should tell the hon. Member for Preston that we are talking about maximum, not mandatory, sentences. It is for the court to decide the fine according to the level of culpability. It is desirable that there should be a maximum that permits a severe fine in cases where there is a high degree of criminal culpability. The hon. Lady will agree that if a concerted racial attack were made on a group of Indians in her constituency, a substantial fine would be appropriate. For that reason, perhaps she will accept that scale 3 might be too modest.

This has been an important debate. I feel that I have trespassed on your patience, Mr. Deputy Speaker, although I do not think that I have been significantly out of order. For the reasons that I have given, I strongly commend the House to accept the Lords amendment but not the amendment to it urged eloquently by my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North. If he were minded to withdraw his amendment, it might be a course of action acceptable to the House.

Mr. Greg Knight (Derby, North): The consensus that earlier settled on the House has been shaken, but I hope not shattered, by the lively debate that we have had.

I want to reply to some of the points that have been made. The hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) urged us to accept level 3. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister has put her mind at rest about many of the points that she made. As I said in an earlier intervention, the Bill provides not for minimum sentences but the level within which the courts operate. I hope, therefore, that the hon. Lady will accept the need to increase the level from £400.

I understand why the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) could not stay until the end of the debate. We are in the middle of the blood sports season and I assume that he has left to take part in the Socialist ritual of knife-throwing—usually in the back of their leader. Before he left he said that in some cases £400 would be chicken feed. I take that to be about as much support as I will receive from the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): It will be difficult for the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) to throw knives at his leader because he has departed for far-away parts and will be away for some time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) said that he wanted to reply to some of the points that have been made. I hope that he will stick to that.

Mr. Knight: My hon. Friend makes an interesting point.

The hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) said that the Bill should be a disincentive to crime. The hon. Lady and I agree on our aims but disagree on our conclusions. Following the points made by my hon. Friend the Minister, I hope that she has revised her views.

Mrs. Wise: In view of the points that have been made about sustained campaigns, whether they be connected with racial matters or not, I have changed my mind. I had been considering the Bill only in the context of individuals. I should not like people to start invoking conspiracy laws, as I disapprove of them. It is better to provide for a heavier penalty than I had first thought suitable.

Mr. Knight: In case some hon. Members have doubts about the wisdom of increasing fines, I refer them to a case that took place in 1982 against a man called Penketh. He heard a widow broadcast for a pen pal. He wrote to the widow and out of kindness she replied to him. He began to bombard her with letters but she decided that she did not want to hear from him further. He wrote to that lady's son's headmaster saying that he was the natural father of her child, which caused her much distress. He was arrested and charged with criminal libel. He was placed on probation but continued to contact and pester her. When the matter was reviewed on appeal he was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment. The courts may need in certain cases, so that the sentence is a proper deterrent, to impose a fairly heavy fine or imprisonment. I am grateful to the hon. Member for Preston for acknowledging that there are cases in which a £400 fine would be inadequate.

When my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) referred to dogs being spiked, I thought that she was waiting to speak in the later debate on the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Bill. I hope that her comments will not alienate the animal welfare voters in her constituency.

The hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) said that he was worried about defendants having to go to gaol because they were fine defaulters. That is why he argued that the penalty should still be £400. The courts do not have an unfettered right to send fine defaulters to gaol. If payment of a fine is in arrears, the matter is normally reviewed. Only when the offender persistently and wilfully refuses to pay the fine is he or she sent to prison. On reflection, I hope that the hon. Gentleman will agree that that point should not be a real cause for concern.

The hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) may by all means send to me the communication that his constituent has received. All I ask is that he does not put his jumper in the post because that would cause me distress and anxiety. My hon. Friend the Minister accepted that there could be cases in which a Member of Parliament would be able to plead the statutory defence. I am grateful to him for his acceptance of that point.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) said that he has approached this matter with an open mind and that he is willing to give ground and accept that we should move up to level 4. I was in the Chamber a few weeks ago when my hon. Friend the Minister replied to another debate and said that if he could reach agreement he liked to do so. In the same spirit, on reflection I am prepared to accept the little ground that has been given. If we cannot have level 5, level 4 is perhaps the next best thing. On that basis, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Lords amendment No. 1 agreed to.

Access to Medical Reports Bill

Lords amendments considered.

Clause 1

RIGHT OF ACCESS

Lords amendment: No. 1, in page 1, line 5, leave out "Subject to the provisions of this Act".

11.52 am

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): With this it will be convenient to discuss Lords amendments Nos. 2 to 22, 24, and 26 to 30.

Mr. Archy Kirkwood (Roxburgh and Berwickshire): I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

I had the privilege to sponsor this Bill and I am pleased that we have now arrived at the final stage of its passage through Parliament. At every stage it has grown a bit, like Topsy. As the parliamentary process continued, it seemed inexorably to grow larger and larger. The Bill had a formal Second Reading and a short Committee and Report stage. Then it went to the other place where it was considered briefly but nevertheless in detail. I take this opportunity to pay tribute to my noble Friend Lord Tordoff for his patience, application and procedural skill when piloting the Bill through the other place.

The purpose of the Bill is to allow individuals access to medical reports that are made about them by their general practitioners when they apply for insurance policies or jobs. The new statutory rights are not revolutionary but they are important and significant. The Bill will not increase the administrative or bureaucratic procedures that employers or insurance companies will have to face, but it will give important rights to individuals and will correct wrongs. The detailed work that I carried out when preparing for this measure suggested to me that serious inaccuracies find their way on to medical files, that they follow people from the cradle to the grave and that they can be prejudicial when they apply for insurance policies or jobs.

Before the Bill left the House for the other place the Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) was kind enough, if that is the right way to put it, to say that she would arrange for parliamentary counsel to check that there were no technical deficiencies in the drafting of the Bill. Daunting as they may seem, the amendments are largely the result of that scrutiny.

I am pleased to say that the overwhelming majority of the amendments are designed to improve the language and structure of the Bill. Changes to the substance of the Bill are limited. Amendments Nos. 1 to 4 are to clause 1. In the original Bill, clause 1 provided for a new right of access. Amendments Nos. 1 to 4 are purely drafting amendments. The bar on retrospective access is removed from clause 1 and is relocated elsewhere.

There are some changes to clause 2, the interpretation clause. Amendment No. 5 provides for a new term, "the applicant". That is a legal generic term covering the person or company who seeks the medical report—the employer or the insurance company. It enables the drafting of subsequent parts of the Bill to be that much tidier.

Amendment No. 6 is purely technical. Amendment No. 7 makes it clear that only medical reports produced by the doctor who is or who has been responsible for the patient's medical treatment are covered by the Bill. There was doubt about whether the Bill, as originally drafted, embraced other medical reports. I wish to make it clear that it does not. A report by an insurance company doctor who has never treated the individual and who is merely examining somebody on behalf of the insurer would not be covered. When the Bill was discussed here I said that it had always been my intention to make that clear distinction.

Amendment No. 8 widens the definition of "employment purposes." It gives a right of access to the self-employed who are providing their services under contract. That was always the intention of the Bill, as originally drafted, it did not make that clear.

Amendments Nos. 9 to 13 are technical in nature and merit no further discussion. Amendment No. 14 deals with an interesting and slightly arcane point that was identified in the other place. If a general practitioner, when preparing a report for an employer, believes that it is necessary to consult another doctor for a second opinion —for example, a consultant who is responsible for the patient's hospital care—I do not expect the general practitioner to have to write again to the patient informing him of his right of access because a second doctor is being consulted. As the Bill was originally drafted, the general practitioner might have had to do that so that he could be said to be beyond reproach. The amendment makes it clear that that is not the Bill's intention.

Lords amendments Nos. 15 to 18, redraft clauses 3 to 5 and 7, which are the guts of the Bill. They improve the structure of that part of the Bill and tighten up the language without making any substantial changes to the meaning. The employer or insurer will still have to obtain written consent before seeking a medical report and to inform the individual of his or her rights on access and correction.

If the patient expresses a wish to see the report, the doctor will be informed and must allow up to 21 days for the patient to make arrangements for access. The patient can ask for errors to be corrected, and, if the doctor does not agree, the patient is entitled to attach a statement of his or her views. After the person has seen the doctor's proposed report, the doctor has to obtain the person's consent to send it. That is a second consent contained in the Bill. The doctor would have to keep a copy of the report for at least six months after sending it and allow the individual access to it during that period.

Lords amendments Nos. 19 to 21 delete the redrafted clauses dealing with consent, notification of rights, access before the supply of a report and the giving of access. Clause 6 deals with important classes of exemption. Lords amendments Nos. 22 and 24 are purely technical and we shall discuss Nos. 23 and 25 later. Lords amendment No. 26 makes it clear that, even if a report is deemed to be exempt from access, the individual does not lose his or her right to withdraw consent for it to be sent.

Lords amendment No. 27 deletes clause 7 and the provisions on the retention of medical reports. It deletes a previously redrafted clause. Clause 8 deals with applications to a court to give people sanctions if the Bill is ignored. Lords amendment No. 28 rephrases clause 8. It improves it but only semantically and linguistically.

Lords amendment No. 29 makes it clear that notifications made under the Bill shall be made in writing and can be sent by post. There was originally some doubt about that. Lords amendment No. 30 reintroduces the power of retrospective access, which was taken out of the original clause 1.

I hope that I have satisfied the House that, although the amendments are quite lengthy and numerous, an enormous amount of careful examination has been given to the Bill by parliamentary counsel and officials, and I am grateful for their efforts. We are all tempted to throw brickbats at parliamentary counsel. In the past, I have taken them to task for doing violence to the English language and making ordinary language very complicated, but now, having been involved with two private Member's Bills, I am persuaded that there is no alternative. To make points absolutely legally clear, the language has to be superficially abstruse and arcane. I am indebted to the Under-Secretary of State for her assistance and for making available the services of parliamentary counsel and officials. I am also grateful for her extremely sympathetic attitude throughout our discussions.

I know that we are not supposed to recognise those who sit under the Gallery and work hard in high places forth of the House, but I would like also to pay a heartfelt tribute to the senior civil servant, Mr. Campion, for his advice and willingness to help, despite the many other pressures on his time. If the Civil Service has any sense of justice in terms of promotion I am sure that he will go far.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mrs. Edwina Currie): I congratulate the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on getting his Bill this far. I join him in recognising the efforts of Lord Tordoff in the other place.

It would be wise if I started by thanking the hon. Gentleman, on behalf of Mr. Campion, for his very kind remarks about him. Mr. Campion is the official who was very much involved in drafting this Bill and the Community Health Councils (Access to Information) Bill, which has now passed all its stages and awaits Royal Assent.

It has been an interesting experience for me during this parliamentary Session to find that, of the handful of private Members Bills that are likely to receive Royal Ass[illegible] my Department has been involved with two.

I am sure that Mr. Campion and his colleagues will take carefully the advice about going far. I understand that Mr. Campion is going to the Bahamas, where he will manage the Princess Margaret hospital. I am sure that we all wish him well and will look forward to seeing him in another incarnation at some future point. I join in the tribute to parliamentary counsel and other officials.

The House will realise that if we were to ask parliamentary counsel to go through every Bill that is laid on the Table, they would do nothing else. Therefore, the promise that I made when the Bill was debated on Report and Third Reading was that if it was the will of Parliament that the Bill should at some stage proceed to the statute book, I would request parliamentary counsel to ensure that the Bill achieved the hon. Gentleman's objectives and was in a form which would enable it to operate satisfactorily and not cause undue difficulty.

Ms. Jo Richardson (Barking): I have followed with great interest the hon. Lady's explanation about the massive rewriting of the Bill in the other place. I read in Hansard that she said that she would be a little reluctant to commit a great deal of officials' time until she saw whether the Bill would make progress. I cannot believe that she or others could have thought that the Bill would not make progress. It clearly was not blocked by the Government.

I should like to hear from the hon. Lady whether it would have been less wasteful of time for everyone—including the promoter of the Bill—if the work and the help that was offered subsequently, and that had to be put into effect in the other place, had been offered to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) right at the beginning. Removal of clauses and insertion of new clauses just confuses everyone.

Mrs. Currie: If it was possible to tell at the beginning, when there might be more than 100 private Member's Bills and, of course, Bills in the other place as well—which one was likely to be successful or to proceed further, that would be a sensible course of action. However, it is entirely a matter for the House, especially on Bills such as this, on which the Government are neutral, whether the Bill will make progress. In that sense, I think that it would be more appropriate for the hon. Lady to express appreciation, as I understand her party is not against the Bill, and as it fits in with everybody's efforts to improve the role of the consumer in the development and delivery of health.

This is a subject which, broadly, has all-party approval. I am also sure that parliamentary counsel did not spend an enormous amount of time on the Bill. Whatever the details of the drafting are, it was fairly clear from discussions in this House and in the other place exactly what the objectives are, which makes life easier for parliamentary counsel.

The difficulty of trying to legislate on issues such as this is revealed by the problems that we have had, but we remain convinced that people should have greater access to what is written about them in their records generally. The Bill as amended is consistent with the talks that are taking place with the medical profession to achieve that on a wider basis.

As I mentioned on Report and Third Reading, the discussions that we have had on the Bill and the all-party support for it have helped considerably. I believe that attitudes to access to medical records have shifted quite considerably during the past couple of years. That is in no small part due to the hon. Gentleman. We do not seek to oppose the Bill and we are content with the amendments.

The first batch contains 28 amendments. Although I do not want to disagree with the presentation made by the Bill's sponsors, it might help if I give some idea of what we are up to—[Interruption.] Rather, what we think that the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire is up to. We agree that what the amendments achieve does not affect the substance or objectives of the Bill. However, the amendments improve the Bill's overall structure so that the sponsors intentions may be presented in a more logical sequence. Some amendments have been made to the definitions section to deal with omissions and drafting infelicities.

The first batch of amendments amend clauses 1, 2, 6, 8 and 9. They omit clauses 3, 4, 5 and 7. For the sake of clarity, I am including amendments Nos. 23 and 25 which we will debate in more detail shortly. The amendments replace the omitted clauses so that the Bill is presented in a more structured and logical way. I must emphasise that the Government are completely neutral on the Bill. The Government would prefer not to legislate, especially as we prefer to do things on a voluntary basis whenever possible. The amendments demonstrate just how difficult it is to legislate properly. However, as the Bill is likely to reach the statute book, we have provided assistance and on that basis we feel that the amendments do exactly what they are proposed to do.

Amendments Nos. 1 to 4 affect clause 1. As originally drafted, the clause was considered by my Department to be defective in that it appeared to confer a widespread right of access to medical reports unless precluded by the subsequent provisions in the Bill. That may well have been the sponsors' original intention, but we felt that that was too wide for a Bill of this order to bear.

The amendments narrow the scope of clause 1 while preserving its effects. As we said earlier, the exclusion of reports prepared before the Bill is enacted will be transferred from clause 1 to clause 9. That is a normal parliamentary convention.

Amendments Nos. 5 to 13 affect clause 2. They are important as they help us to define the term "applicant"—the insurer or employer introduced in the new clauses. It will therefore make it much easier to interpret the legislaton in future. The amendments are also important because they will help to carry forward the sponsors' objectives to widen the definition of employment purposes and amend the definition of insurance purposes so that it focuses on the individual referred to in the various provisions in the Bill.

If the Bill is written in such a way that its exact wording carries out the sponsors' objectives, there are likely to be fewer objections to it in use. In other words, it is likely to be effective. I hope that improving the definitions will be non-controversial. However, the overall effect of amendments Nos. 5 to 13 is to focus the Bill more on the individual whose rights are the cornerstone of the Bill. The remainder of the group are minor consequential drafting amendments.

We believe that amendment No. 14 to clause 2 is quite important. It will overcome a possible ambiguity in the clause as drafted. The amendment makes clear that only reports prepared by a practitioner for employers or insurers are covered. Lord Prys-Davies made the point in Committee that the clause could apply to reports sought by a practitioner from another, which is not the intention of the Bill, as the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire explained. Therefore, it is wise to make it absolutely clear that transactions between doctors to enable a report to be prepared are not covered by this amendment. That is important and will help to reassure the medical profession.

Amendment No. 15 is also important. The new clause replaces a defective clause which will be removed later. It is at the heart of the Bill because it concerns

> "Consent to applications for medical reports for employment or insurance purposes."

The substitution of the new clause to replace clause 4 is primarily part of the need to draft the Bill in a more structured way. Clarification of the provisions has been made and the substance of the Bill remains unchanged. The new clause provides that in subsection (1) the applicant, whom we have now defined as the insurer or employer, must obtain the consent of the individual—whom we have defined as the person about whom the medical report is being prepared—to seek a medical report. As the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire said, the applicant must notify the individual that he has a right to withhold consent for the report to be obtained and that he has a right to access and to withhold consent and to amend and modify the report. Without the new clause drafted in the tight way recommended by parliamentary counsel, the Bill might have presented some difficulties. We feel that these are important technical drafting improvements. If the House is mindful to pass the Bill, we believe that they should be accepted.

Amendment No. 16 substitutes clause 5 with a rewritten clause. It is, again, the result of improved drafting and does not affect the Bill's objectives. The details of the time scales within which the applicant, medical practitioner and the individual must act are strengthened in terms of seeking, supplying and having access to a medical report.

The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire will remember that we had quite a long debate in Committee and on Report and discussions at the back of the Chair over this matter because there was some ambiguity about the time scales. We feel that amendment No. 16 is the appropriate way to proceed.

Under subsection (1) of the new clause an individual is entitled when giving consent for a medical report to state whether he wants access to it. If he does, the applicant —the insurer or employer—shall notify the doctor and the individual that he has done so. Under subsection (2) the practitioner shall not provide the report to the applicant unless the individual has had access to it or 21 days have elapsed since the application was made and the individual has not taken steps to gain access to it.

Subsection (3) of the new clause provides that the individual may give notice in writing to the practitioner that he wants access before the report is sent. In those circumstances,

> "the practitioner shall not supply the report unless . . . the individual has access or . . . 21 days . . . have elapsed" and the individual has not taken steps to make the necessary arrangements. We may argue long and hard about what that time period should be. However, it needs to be fairly short so that the report still has currency. However, it must be long enough for people to have reasonable time in which to make approaches and decisions on whether they want access. We believe that the amendment is a technical improvement on principles that are already established in the Bill.

Amendment No. 17 is another new clause. It deals with > "consent to supplying of report and correction of errors."

Again, this is a matter of drafting style and of a rather more structured approach. It provides in subsection (1) that an individual must give consent to a practitioner for a report to be sent to the applicant. Subsection (2) preserves the individual's right to amend the report or, if the practitioner is not prepared to make such amendments, to attach a statement to the report. Subsection (3) provides that such a request

> "shall be made in writing."

We had a long discussion at an earlier stage of the Bill about how the individual might show some dissent about what was being written. Having taken careful advice, we believe that the amendment would satisfy the sponsors' objectives. They are drafting improvements which we advise the House to accept.

Amendment No. 18 is another new clause, on retention of reports. It is intended to replace the provisions in clause 7 to make drafting improvements which spell out the obligations of medical practitioners in relation to the reports that they have supplied. Again, we are talking about time scales. They must retain the reports for six months and grant access with those rights to an individual by virtue of the Bill within that six-month period. They must make a copy available for inspection and supply a copy if the individual prefers that at a reasonable charge. Again, that seems very sensible. Amendments Nos. 19, 20 and 21 have the concomitant effect of leaving out clauses 3, 4 and 5, which we have replaced.

Amendments Nos. 22, 24 and 26 amend clause 6; we shall be discussing amendments Nos. 23 and 25 in a few moments. As the promoter of the Bill pointed out, they deal with exemptions. Their main purpose is to make minor drafting adjustments. Clause 6(5) has been rewritten to improve the drafting style and structure. In summary, it improves the drafting which provides that a practitioner may withhold information where serious harm may be caused to the individual or an identified third party. Even where such exemptions exist, the practitioner shall not forward a report without the individual's consent.

Amendment No. 27 would leave out clause 7 and amendment No. 28 deals with clause 8. My note simply says that they are intended to improve drafting style and will not change the substance of the clause, and I therefore cannot offer futher comment.

Amendment No. 29 would insert a new clause to clarify the notification provisions. It says that any notification

> "shall be given in writing; and . . . may be given by post."

I understand that provision that notification may be served by post was missing from the Bill. Whether it means that notifications will be missing if they are sent by post is probably a matter for another Minister and not for me, but it is important that the provision should be included.

Mr. Robin Corbett (Birmingham, Erdington): Malicious communications?

Mrs. Currie: I doubt whether it would be regarded as a malicious communication if it were written with the interests of the patient in mind. However, our earlier discussions may be relevant in some circumstances, which is why the Bill may be needed.

Amendment No. 30 moves from clause 1 to clause 9 the provision ensuring that the Bill does not apply retrospectively. It does not change the purpose of the Bill but simply reorders it.

Although we have a large number of amendments before us, many of them duplicate each other and many simply strengthen definitions and do not change the substance of the Bill. The overall result is a considerable improvement and all concerned are to be congratulated.

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): I congratulate the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on introducing the Bill. As one of the sponsors of the Bill, I am glad that it is making progress. It deals with one aspect of access to information—a large subject on which we need to make further progress. Much information that affects individuals is unnecessarily unavailable to them. Therefore, I heartily congratulate the hon. Gentleman on his progress with the Bill.

Like other hon. Members, I suspect, I have some difficulty in following the layout of the Bill now that substantial changes have been proposed in another place. That reflects on the way in which we deal with legislation that comes to us from the Lords with a substantial number of amendments. Would it not be more sensible to have a Bill as amended by the House of Lords, just as we consider a Bill as amended in Committee? That would make the Bill with the proposed changes easier to read. It would be less complicated than having to interpose the amendments in the original Bill as we do at the moment.

Mrs. Audrey Wise (Preston): That might be going too far and it might still be hard to compare the original Bill with the Bill as amended in the Lords. Would not one solution be to have an explanatory briefing such as we have in the Bill itself? I share the hon. Gentleman's difficulties.

Mr. Wigley: We have an explanatory memorandum at the beginning of the Bill, but it is completely irrelevant by the time that it has been rehashed in the House of Lords. In Committee, we have notes on clauses which Departments kindly supply and that is of considerable assistance to us in our work. In this case, we are discussing what is virtually a new Bill without the help of an explanatory memorandum or notes on clauses.

I would have liked to ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire one or two questions arising from the changes in the Bill, but I see that he is no longer here. I suppose that I should put them to the Minister, who hinted, when she dropped her guard a few moments ago, that much of the Bill is accepted by the Government even if it is not inspired by the Government. Perhaps she can clarify the way in which the Bill may work in practice. Not having served on the Committee, I have not had the opportunity to raise these points. First, we are avoiding retrospection. What, then, will be the position of an employer who has not taken steps as rigorous as he might otherwise have taken when employing a person, on the assumption that ongoing medical scrutiny of that person is possible? I assume that the Bill will apply to anyone now in employment who needs to have a medical. I think that the Minister sees my point, and I should be grateful for clarification.

I entirely accept the intention of the Bill to make information available, but am I correct in thinking that, even with the amendments, the Bill still provides that a report cannot be supplied without the individual's written consent? If the individual withholds that written consent —the phrase used in the explanatory memorandum for clause 5—the report cannot be given. What will be the position of an employee who is currently working for an employer if that employer starts to have misgivings about his suitability to continue to do a specific job? I worked for a time in the food industry, in which ill health could affect one's suitability for involvement at certain stages of food production. An employer at a food factory may feel that he needs a report. If the individual says that he will not give written consent, will the employer not be able to obtain the report? I imagine that that cannot be the implication, although that is what the explanatory memorandum to the original Bill suggests. I am not sure whether the description is correct or whether there has been a change. I am sorry to be raising an involved point, but I imagine that there must be some safeguards for the employer, too. If a medical report is a material factor because of the nature of the work that the employee is undertaking, the employer must surely have some way of getting the information without there being any form of embargo. If he does not, he may be forced into moving the employee, and from that could arise issues of access to information and the involvement of industrial tribunals. I imagine that this matter could be complex and I should be glad of assurances as to how the system will work.

Amendment No. 16 refers to a time lag of 21 days. I understand that the intention is that "supplying" will include provision of a report by post. Does one need proof of posting for those purposes? Should there be registered or recorded delivery post, or is it enough for the medical practitioner to say, "I put the report in the post" and for the 21 days to start clocking away from then?

From time to time constituents see hon. Members about difficulties in getting a job. We ask the constituent whether he minds if we have a word with his doctor. I take it that the Bill, in applying to employers or those involved in insurance, will not cut across our ability to ask the doctor questions.

Mr. Kirkwood indicated assent.

12.30 pm

Mr. Wigley: The hon. Gentleman is saying that it definitely will not restrict that ability. The Bill as originally drafted provides for the making of inquiries, albeit not by the employer. The revised wording is tighter, and I think that my understanding of the measure is correct.

We need to be certain about these matters before the Bill reaches the statute book. In asking questions, I am in no way diminishing the Bill's importance or trying to be obstructive. As I said, I agree with the direction in which we are moving. We need to be certain about these specific points.

Ms. Jo Richardson: I congratulate the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on introducing this worthy Bill. As I said in an intervention to the Minister, it is extraordinary that a Bill may start as a private Member's Bill but, when the Government get hold of it with their parliamentary draftspeople, it becomes entirely different. The Bill has been rewritten considerably.

The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire said that the amendments and new clauses were debated at some length in the House of Lords, but that did not happen. Lord Tordoff introduced 25 amendments and five new clauses in a speech that lasted all of nine minutes. It is a bit much to explain in only nine minutes why a Bill has been re-written and why clauses have been withdrawn and new clauses added. That is treating the House cavalierly. After those nine minutes, the House passed all the amendments and new clauses within half an hour and then on 23 June had five minutes on Third Reading. That is a superficial way of assisting Parliament in drawing up new guidelines for an important extension of freedom of information.

Mrs. Wise: To be fair to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), who is not here at present, he said that the other place had considered this matter briefly. Exactly how briefly was not clear. The hon. Gentleman said that the Bill had been considered a great deal by officials and draftsmen and in that context he talked about the detail. Does my hon. Friend agree that it is dangerous to have the Bill considered in detail by officials and then briefly by those with parliamentary responsibility and that we should ensure that there is closer parliamentary scrutiny?

Ms. Richardson: I agree with my hon. Friend. Some Bills are only a few lines long and have a simple point to make, which one can immediately grasp. As I am a London hon. Member and am regularly in the House on Fridays, I catch up with many private Members' Bills. Some are easy and some are more difficult to absorb. I have read this Bill with great care and have tried to understand and slot in the amendments. This morning, the Minister did her best to justify why what appeared to be perfectly good drafting in the original Bill had been replaced by what she tells us is better drafting. That is beyond me.

Mrs. Currie: I am sure that the hon. Lady realises that I am not the promoter of the Bill. Indeed, if I were, there would not be a Bill.

Mr. Corbett: The Minister is neutral.

Mrs. Currie: I am entirely neutral.

The Government's view is that we should not legislate in such matters. Therefore, the hon. Lady's comments about the necessity for explanatory memoranda and all the rest should be directed to the distinguished, important and highly motivated hon. Member who is sitting in front of her, the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

Ms. Richardson: With great respect, I was directing my remarks to the promoter of the Bill, and I hope that he will have an opportunity to say something. From her tone, I gathered that the Minister welcomed the Bill. She said that she had waited to see what progress it made before she committed some of her parliamentary draftsmen staff to it. I thought that she took up the matter rather enthusiastically.

Mr. Wigley: Does the hon. Lady recall that the Minister said:

> "the proposals that we have brought forward" and then corrected herself?

Ms. Richardson: Exactly. That leads me to conclude that we must be careful. I am not against the Government —whatever Government—giving the professional assistance that they have at their disposal. Back-Bench Members who bring forward Private Members' Bills do not have that professional assistance. The Government should face up to their responsibilities and say, "In effect, now that we have altered the Bill, it is a Government Bill." I advise its promoter that the Bill is virtually a Government Bill.

I shall make some comments about a few of the amendments, if I have them right, and there is no guarantee that I have understood them all. Amendments Nos. 1 and 2 seem to be a prime example of redrafting for no purpose at all. They simply substitute one set of words for another. For example, amendment No. 1 deletes the words

> "Subject to the provisions of this Act" and Amendment No. 2 inserts the words

> "in accordance with the provisions of this Act".

I cannot see the difference between the two. The Minister said that the new form is tighter, and more understandable. I despair when the public see us substituting words such as

> "in accordance with the provisions of this Bill"

for

> "subject to the provisions of this Bill".

They may think that we are being pedantic. When asked why the words had been changed, Lord Tordoff did not know the answer.

Ms. Diane Abbott (Hackney, North and Stoke Newington): Does my hon. Friend agree that another example of that is Amendment No. 13? It states:

> "leave out 'an' and insert 'the'."

Members of the public find such amendments inexplicable.

Ms. Richardson: I agree with my hon. Friend. I probably have that point among the notes that I have scribbled.

I am not trying to be unfair or introduce matters that I should not, but amendment No. 3 contains the word "individual". As a matter of interest, can the individual be a resident only of Great Britain, or can he or she be a resident of any part of the United Kingdom? I am trying to find out whether Northern Ireland is covered. [Interruption.] The Minister and her advisers are clearly trying to make up their minds. Clause 7(3) of the original Bill provided that it would extend to Northern Ireland, but that was taken out and does not appear in the present version. The Earl of Arran said that > "it is the intention to apply the Bill to Northern Ireland by Order in Council once it receives Royal Assent."—Official Report, House of Lords, 18 May 1988; c. 379.

If that is so, why could not the original provision remain in the Bill, where it would have the force of statute rather than the less binding force of a Government intention? What is the reason for the change? No explanation has been given. I see the Minister struggling and seeking advice, so I assume that she does not know either. In other contexts, the Government constantly remind us that Northern Ireland is as much a part of the United Kingdom as Nottinghamshire, so why at this stage in the game do they run away from legislating for Northern Ireland identically with other parts of the United Kingdom?

Amendment No. 8, which extends the provisions of the Bill to self-employed persons, is greatly to be welcomed. Can the promoter tell me whether people on restart and training programmes after previous unemployment will be regarded as trainees for the purposes of this legislation? An employer may wish to ask for a medical certificate in respect of a trainee. This may be covered elsewhere, but the position is not clear to me.

On amendment No. 15, the Minister gave no justification for the substitution of the new clause for the provisions in the original Bill. My comments on this show my great faith in the promoter, whose Bill I understood rather better than the version now before us. All that Lord Tordoff could say was that the drafting and structure had been improved, but he offered not a shred of evidence for that sweeping generalisation. Again, the House is being treated with a certain contempt, if that is not too harsh a word, in being expected to absorb legislation of this magnitude and gravity in this way. A thoroughly worthy and laudable Bill has been virtually rewritten in the House of Lords and very little time is available for the House of Commons to consider the new version and for the Minister to explain what is happening.

Amendment No. 22 relates to clause 6(1), which provides that a doctor may withhold some information in a medical report on certain grounds, one of which is that the information

> "would indicate the intentions of the practitioner in respect of the individual."

That phrase is incomprehensible and I cannot see its relevance. It is included not on its merits but as a piece of bureaucratic tidiness. Lord Tordoff also said:

> "The Government have asked for this exemption in order to keep in line with the Data Protection Act. That is another mystery which is slightly beyond me."—[Official Report, House of Lords, 7 June 1988; Vol. 497, c. 1310.]

One way or another, there are many mysteries in the Bill that Lord Tordoff did not clarify, because he did not understand them either. Certainly they have not been clarified in my mind.

Having said that, I do not wish in any way to alarm the Bill's promoter into thinking that I do not approve of it. It is very worthwhile legislation. Bit by bit, with this Bill and that of my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) which will also come before us with Lords amendments, we are making a little progress—considerably more than the present Government ever made or will ever make.

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): I only intended to look in for a few moments this morning, not meaning to get involved in any way in this legislation, which I have not followed. However, on reading the explanatory memorandum on clause 1, I wondered why we were discussing this legislation at all, as to my mind it will be almost meaningless. From my 25 years of experience in personnel, I know that the last thing an employer ever does is to call for a medical report from a would-be employee's general practitioner. He will go to somebody else. However, the explanatory memorandum states:

> "Only a medical report prepared by a medical practitioner who is or has been responsible for the individual's clinical care is subject to the Bill."

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Order. I remind the hon. Gentleman that, much as his comments may have been welcomed in the Second Reading debate, I shall be obliged if he will now speak to the amendments.

Mr. Holt: I appreciate your comment, Madam Deputy Speaker, and, without wishing to stretch the patience of the Chair, I spoke with the Bill's promoter before intervening and I believe that amendment 14 covers the area to which my general remarks relate.

If parliamentary time is to be allotted to improving access to medical records, which I wholeheartedly support, the narrow way in which that is to be introduced will do very little to enhance progress. If anything, it points to ways of stopping progress. I do not seek to do anything that will halt the progress of the Bill, but I hope that anyone who is enthusiastic about it will realise that there is really very little to be enthusiastic about. I trust that the Bill's promoter will not feel that I am being critical of him or of his Bill. He has done a jolly good job in bringing it to the House, but the House itself should have amended the Bill, and the Government should have made it clear that the Bill will cover the report of any medical practitioner.

Mr. Corbett: The hon. Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt) put his finger on an extremely important point. He may be looking for the Government's assistance with this Bill, but as the Minister herself confirmed, the Government are neutral to the point of not wanting to raise a finger. She said this morning that, had she had her way, the Bill would not be before us.

I had not appreciated that reports of the kind to which the hon. Member for Langbaurgh referred, from a medical practitioner other than the individual's own GP, will be excluded. The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) made that clear, as did the Minister earlier. The concern expressed by the hon. Member for Langbaurgh is particularly important in view of his experience in personnel. I must say that it was not my point, but I hear and respect what he says. If that is so —and we have been told twice this morning that it is so —employers or insurance companies have a way around the provisions staring them in the face, and in my view it is an extremely unwelcome loophole.

I hope that the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire will accept that I am not trying to hold up the Bill, which is a step forward on a long and bumpy road. Nevertheless, an employer or prospective employer, or an insurance company, could be encouraged deliberately to avoid consulting the individual's own doctor, safe and sure in the knowledge that that individual could not then ask to see and comment on the report. We may speculate on how often that is likely to happen, and whether it is good personnel or industrial relations practice, but it could happen, and I do not think that that is right. In such circumstances, the independent doctor would not normally have access to the individual's medical records as a guide to his medical history and background, which surely is not helpful to an independent doctor asked to carry out an examination and then make a report.

Mr. Wigley: Is not the likely pattern that an employee will be required, particularly when joining a company in which his medical condition is a sensitive issue, to give an assurance that he will always be willing to submit to the scrutiny of the company's medical officer—as is often the case at present? In such circumstances, the employee will have no access to the information that the medical officer may have or may be providing to the management about him, and the medical officer will certainly not go to the employee's GP so as not to trigger the provisions of the Bill. Should we not be careful of such a development?

Mr. Corbett: That is perfectly possible. Let us view a brighter aspect of the matter and suppose that an employee is being considered for promotion to some fairly important management post. Those responsible for the appointment may want an up-to-date report on his medical condition, which would be wholly understandable. It would be sensible for an independent doctor not just to examine the individual, but to discuss with him the conclusions he has reached. Although the Bill provides that that shall not happen, there is nothing to stop it from happening.

I do not want to nit-pick, but there are other problems——

Mr. Holt: Could we expand the example that the hon. Gentleman has given, in the practical world? Let us say that a man is going into senior management, and that as part of his new emolument package he is put into a private medical insurance scheme. Will the two doctors have to communicate with each other in writing, and will that written communication be made available to the person who is to be promoted? If not, the whole thing is meaningless.

Mr. Corbett: I am afraid that I cannot answer that question: it is best directed to the promoter of the Bill.

Clause 2, which deals with interpretation, says:

"'care' includes examination, investigation and diagnosis".

Can it be any one or two of those, or must it be all three? If it can be any one, two or three, could it not be argued that, because the definition must embrace an examination, an examination by an independent doctor called in by the insurance company or employer may be covered by the Bill?

Mr. Wigley: Perhaps I can assist the hon. Gentleman. Lords amendment No. 6 seeks to leave out "and" and insert "or", so that the Bill would read

"'care' includes examination, investigation or diagnosis".

Presumably, "care" means a clinical examination which could be undertaken by more than one doctor.

Mr. Corbett: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his intervention, which both helps and hinders. We have established that any one of those criteria could apply. That being the case, clearly a clinical examination must be carried out by an independent doctor, and that at least would bring it partially within the Bill.

The other aspect which I find worrying echoes the point made by the hon. Member for Langbaurgh. It does not involve far-fetched circumstances. Let us suppose that the independent doctor who has been called in is uncertain on a point, after his examination of the individual, either because he does not believe what he has been told about the individual's previous medical history or because his questioning did not provide him with the information that he was seeking to confirm a conclusion that he was reaching.

As the Bill stands, it seems that the independent doctor would be unable to consult the medical practitioner responsible for the clinical care of the individual. If the independent doctor wanted to consult the individual's GP, what would be the status of the report produced by the independent doctor? One could argue that if the independent doctor consults the individual's GP, technically and practically the GP has had a hand in preparing the report of the independent doctor in the sense that his observations or revelations of previous medical history would feature in that report.

Even if the independent doctor had been denied information, opinion or assistance to confirm or clarify his or her opinion, or if the individual's regular GP had had some part, however small, in preparing the report, that would seem to bring the report into the scope of the Bill.

I am not seeking to complicate the matter. This is an important point, which worries me, because it does no service to the individual, the independent doctor, the employer or the insurance company if the independent doctor's report is flawed or incomplete in that it is unable to tell a full and accurate story.

If that is so, what is the value of such a report unless it is confined to establishing what is the general state of health of the individual, to which the answer is bad, not so bad, good, very good or excellent? I am not absolutely sure how much value that would have in terms of prospective senior management. I should have thought that there are people knocking about who could do that without any medical qualification.

What is the value of that report? Surely it is in everybody's interest that the report should be as accurate as possible. Surely it is beyond belief to make a distinction between a report drawn up by an individual's regular GP and that of a company doctor called in for that purpose. I suspect, because of the time, that we shall have to let this one go if we want to give the Bill a fair wind to the statute book, as I am sure the whole House would wish to do. We keep nibbling at the edges of this subject and it is perfectly obvious from the comments that have been made today that it is something to which we will have to return, probably in the context of a full-blooded freedom of information Act. That is the only way to clear up this and many other issues.

Mr. Kirkwood: I am suitably chastened as I fully expected to be, bringing before the House this plethora of amendments. I understand the comments that have been made. There were constraints of time and I was not highly placed in the list of private Members' Bills. The pressure of time in the Department was also considerable. I accept that it is difficult for the House to cope with such a number of amendments which substantially change the wording of the Bill. However, the Under-Secretary of State and I, who are at one on this, have been trying to make the point that there is no major change of substance in the Bill. The issues in the Bill as we are suggesting it should be amended are not significantly different from those in the Bill during the earlier stages.

It is true that there was a formal Second Reading and that the Committee and Report stages were constrained. I fully accept that. However, that was the time when some of the issues should have been raised. The important points that have been made by hon. Members today were in the Bill then, although perhaps in different words.

We must bear in mind that the provenance of the Bill is simply to try to get round the fact that medical files kept by general practitioners are substantially inaccurate in many cases. That is what causes people to suffer the prejudice that the Bill seeks to redress. The Bill does not seek to be a freedom of information Act, which I would fully support, and it does not seek to address the question of independent medical reports. It simply attempts to give individuals an additional layer of protection against suffering prejudice because some mistake, subjective comment or other piece of information finds its way into medical files, which as I have said follow people from the cradle to the grave. Such information could cause people to suffer prejudice when applying for jobs or insurance policies.

The Bill has a limited objective and I accept that. Anybody who studies the information that has been made available to me by the freedom of information campaign and others about the extent to which individuals can suffer prejudice in such circumstances would be convinced of the need for this small change in the law. It simply seeks to ensure that any information made available specifically for the purpose of prospective employers or insurers will be accurate.

If that is the genesis of the idea behind the legislation, it is necessary only to focus on the information derived from the medical files. Therefore, independent examinations, for which prospective employers or insurers are entitled to ask, have a more limited function. In an independent report there is no danger that an error in the medical file will be translated into a report that will cause an individual to suffer prejudice. We have to keep the proposal in that context.

Mr. Wigley: The hon. Gentleman spoke of a "prospective" employer. I am sure that he will confirm that we are dealing with not just prospective employers but existing employers. That is my understanding of the wording in both the Bill and the amendment from the other place. Secondly, there is an amendment that changes the definition of "care" to specify, "examination, investigation or diagnosis." That is an important amendment which substitutes "or" for "and". In that context would not a doctor who is responsible for the clinical examination of an individual come within the scope of the Bill and would that not include a doctor working for a company? If it does, the Bill goes considerably wider—in many ways I would welcome that —but it will cause problems with the individual's ability to prevent the report being available to a company's management. It is an issue that we must address before passing it as law.

Mr. Kirkwood: Reports required during the course of someone's employment as well as when they apply for a job will be included in the Bill. That was certainly the Bill's original intention.

The change of the definition of the word "care" is specifically designed—I took advice on this matter—to exclude people conducting independent examinations. Reports should be made on the objective or clinical judgment of a general practitioner who has a patient in front of him, of whom he can ask questions, and examine and on whom he can carry out tests and do all the other things he needs to do to arrive at a conclusion. It is only necessary for the GP to state whether the person is suitable for the job in question. The general practitioner does not have to go into a deep psychological or mental history. He must certify only that the person is medically fit for the job.

I am trying to ensure that the patient does not suffer any prejudice because the medical file that the GP has been using is wrong. Medical files are transmitted from GP to GP.

Mr. Wigley: I am sorry to press the hon. Gentleman, but I am sure that hon. Members will agree that it is important to clarify this matter. In the Bill the definition of "a medical report" means a report.

"of an individual prepared by a medical practitioner who is or has been responsible for the clinical care of the individual" and that means the clinical examination of the individual. Doctors who work for companies or are used by companies may have been responsible for the clinical examination of an employee. Such a doctor may not be the GP of the employee. In those circumstances, a report prepared by that doctor for the company would be subject to the procedures of the Bill. If the employee says, "No, that report cannot be used" it would be a veto on its use.

Mr. Kirkwood: I understand what the hon. Gentleman is saying, but that is not the advice that I have been given. Independent examinations are outwith the scope of the Bill. I do not believe that it is necessary to include them. If that definition is inadequate, I apologise. I hope that assistance will come from another direction that is completely outwith my control.

The hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) made a further important point and I do not want to duck it. He said that employers may suffer inconvenience by being denied access to information. The information about which I am talking is that supplied by a patient to a general practitioner in confidence. The medical file follows the patient from cradle to grave. I do not believe that, because inconvenience may be suffered by an employer, individuals should have to allow information to be passed on if it cannot be cast-iron guaranteed as accurate and correct.

Mr. Wigley: In general, I agree with the hon. Gentleman. That is why I am a sponsor of the Bill.

Mr. Kirkwood: Why, then, does the hon. Gentleman not leave me alone?

Mr. Wigley: I am determined that any Bill that I sponsor can be defended by me when it leaves this place. A person with a contagious disease might be working in a food factory. The implications for the general public go beyond the rights of the individual. I want to be sure that we have struck the right balance.

Mr. Kirkwood: Individuals will have the right to see the report, or they will have the right to make a written statement if they cannot persuade the doctor that the report is inaccurate. They will also have the right to say that the report must not be sent. That would be the best way to deal with the case that the hon. Member for Caernarfon described. If an applicant, suffering from a contagious disease, worked in a food factory and denied the doctor the right to send a report based on his medical record, the employer would be able to ask for an independent medical examination, and that would reveal the contagious infection.

I am trying to protect the individual in as many ways as I can from being prejudiced by incorrect information on his medical file. The hon. Member for Caernarfon and I agree that the best policy would be to allow patients to have access to all their medical files. The Department is moving fast, although not fast enough for some of us, in that direction. I detected an encouraging warmth of tone, if no more than that, in the Minister's voice when she said that some progress is being made. If sufficient progress had already been made, there would be no need for the Bill, but we are not there yet.

We were given advice about what happens in Northern Ireland. It is an important point. If parliamentary draftsmen have to find their way through arcane procedures, those governing Northern Ireland are even more arcane to a simple-minded Scottish Member of Parliament such as I. I am told that Orders in Council are the appropriate way to deal with Northern Ireland legislation and that it would be without precedent to legislate for new statutory rights without going through the Order in Council procedure. I pass on that information for what it is worth. That is what I was told when I asked the question.

We considered at some length how the self-employed would be affected by the Bill. I understand that if a contract is in prospect between an employee and an employer the provisions of the Bill would apply, but a complicating factor is whether the prospective employer is a Department of State. We may have to return to that point when we discuss later amendments.

I am sensitive to the criticism that the House is being asked to consider an unsatisfactory Bill, but I am not the master of my own destiny. It is self-evident that the Bill is not perfect, but if the amendments were accepted, the possibility of ambiguous construction by the courts would be much less likely. I throw myself on the mercy of the House and ask it to accept the Lords amendment.

Mrs. Currie: If I may respond to the point that the Bill is different now because the Government have taken an interest in it, I would point out that in our view the Bill is important. The alternative to corrections by parliamentary draftsmen would be to allow deficiencies to appear in legislation approved by the House. The Government have a responsibility to help everybody to avoid legislative nonsense. That does not by itself make it a Government Bill. I consider that responsibility important. In my previous incarnation, much of the work I did involved making some kind of sense of and headway with legislation passed by a Labour Government. If they had taken as much care with all their legislation as the promoter of the Bill and his sponsors are taking with this piece of legislation, no doubt we would have had a much easier time.

I thought it might help if, for 10 seconds, I allowed a slight glimpse behind the dark curtain of Government processes and gave the House an idea of exactly why parliamentary counsel felt that some major redrafting was necessary. Parliamentary counsel were examining why we needed new clauses to replace clauses 3 to 5 and 7. They said:

> "I confess that we have found those clauses of the Bill somewhat unsatisfactory from a structural point of view: it does not strike us as being very easy to see how the story develops over the clauses. In particular, the opening words of clause 5(1) are somewhat divorced from what has gone on before. And clause 5(1)(a)(ii) is intimately connected with the provision tucked away in clause 7."

The hon. Gentleman did not spot that when he wrote his Bill, and neither did I when I discussed it with him on Report and Third Reading. I suppose we should both offer the House an explanation and an apology. It is, on my side, offered with a full heart and great contrition.

I must apologise if I confused the Opposition earlier —especially the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson), for whom I have the greatest respect and affection—when I said that, if we had our way, there would not be a Bill. What I meant was that in all our discussions about the efforts that have been made to improve patients' access to information written about them in medical records—access which we regard as increasingly important and valuable in improving their health and their compliance with the advice and assistance offered to them by their doctors—we prefer to proceed by negotiation. I am content that we are making progress in that, but we never rule out the possibility of legislation. I suppose it sits there as a dark threat of what might happen if we do not make any progress on these matters.

Our objective is to try to improve the relationship between doctors and their patients and to make sure that confidence, which should be a major part of the relationship between doctor and patient, is reinforced. That should be very much a part of the pattern of acceptance of treatment and care in future. It is not intended in any way to diminish that confidence or to interfere with that relationship, but if Parliament decides —as it may in about five or 10 minutes—that it wishes this piece of legislation to proceed, the Government are, of course, entirely helpless, but will do whatever they can to ensure that it goes on to the statute book in the appropriate way.

Question put and agreed to.

Lords amendments Nos. 2 to 22 agreed to.

Clause 6

EXEMPTIONS

Lords amendment: No. 23, in page 3, line 34, after "individual" insert "or others".

Mr. Kirkwood: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

I can deal with this amendment fairly briefly, but it is a matter of some substance that I thought right to single out for special attention.

Lords Amendment No. 23 slightly widens the exemptions in clause 6 of the original Bill. Under that clause, a doctor can withold part of a report from an individual if the doctor judges that disclosure would cause severe physical or mental harm to that individual. The amendment would allow access to be witheld in the very, I hope, exceptional circumstances where it was thought that harm to some other person, apart from the individual, could arise—for example, if it was thought that a seriously disturbed person might be provoked into making a violent attack on someone else.

It is a sensible provision and has sufficient substance to merit some discussion on its own. I hope that the House will agree to the amendment.

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): I had wanted to intervene in the speech made by the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), but I will make my comments in a speech instead.

I would like clarification on some points. Who will make the decision about the invocation of the exemption? There might be some difficulties here over who decides whether a matter was an exemption under the terms that have been described to the House. We must be sure that we are satisfied that if, as I assume, the doctor takes the decision, the Bill includes provisions in connection with the freedom of access to information to reverse the matter and provide an exemption. It seems to me as a layman that this matter might range quite widely depending on the definition and interpretation of the phrases used. Although the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire gave only one example, we can all think of others. I wonder whether we are satisfied that the point is sufficiently well defined and that we are clear as to whose discretion would be effective to take the decision. I hope that that will be clarified.

Mrs. Currie: This clause is a little different from the other clauses. The Government's view is that the House might want to accept the amendment, but with one or two more genuine reservations than those expressed previously.

As drafted, clause 6 provides that information may be withheld from the individual by the practitioner where disclosure would be likely to cause serious harm to the individual. The amendment seeks to extend the exemption to cover all others. I understand that Lord Mottistone was strongly backed by the National Schizophrenia Fellowship.

The amendment is consistent with the subject access provisions in the Data Protection Act 1984 relating to social work but not consistent with the subject access provisions for health. To be included, such a provision would run counter to the European convention on the use of automated medical data banks. No such constraints are imposed in social work. However, that is not a reason to oppose the amendment.

We believe that the proposal is sensible, although such a provision is likely to be used only rarely. Our slight concern in accepting the amendment is that it might just set a precedent. However, we would expect it to be used rarely and I believe that that would be the view of Lord Mottistone. On that basis, I want to put it on record that we accept the amendment with reservations.

Mr. Corbett: The Opposition welcome the amendment. As the Minister has said, and as other hon. Members will be aware, the National Schizophrenia Fellowship for the welfare of sufferers and their relatives made this point and in a letter to myself and doubtless to other hon. Members said:

> "In our Fellowship's view it is not only the physical or mental health of the individual which may be at risk if he sees his medical report, but that of others. If there is a history of violence, it could be the last straw to see a medical report which . . . could easily lead to physical assault."

I agree with the Minister that this provision is likely to be used very rarely. It must be used with the utmost care and sensitivity, and no doubt it will be.

Mr. Kirkwood: I hope that I can persuade the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) that the exemption provisions in clause 7 give the medical practitioner the discretion, as he rightly pointed out, to deny access. I do not think that the situation will arise all that often. Our discussions with the medical profession including the British Medical Association and others show that clear guidelines will be available to doctors through their own ethics committees adequately to cover this point. However, that is not on the face of the Bill. I was persuaded that it was not necessary to include anything on the face of the Bill to cover that because the exemption will be so infrequent and the guidance available from the Department and the BMA will cover the point adequately. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will be prepared to accept that.

Question put and agreed to.

Lords amendment No. 24 agreed to.

Lords amendment: No. 25, in page 3, line 45, leave out subsections (3) and (4).

Mr. Kirkwood: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

I moved a number of amendments in Committee, which the Government considered to be essential, as they brought the Bill into line with the access provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984. It is sensible for legislation to be brought in line. However, one of the amendments repeated the exemption provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for information that was harmful to national security. I remember the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) expressing mild puzzlement—to speak euphemistically—as to how the issue of national security could arise in a Bill that was concerned with general practitioner reports to employers and insurers. To be fair to the Government, the original scope of the Bill was not clear. Someone—not the Minister, I am sure—must have thought that the definition of medical reports might catch accidentally psychological profiles based on lie detector tests at GCHQ. That was not the intention. I am pleased that the Government have thought again about the national security issue and have agreed that that exemption is unnecessary. Amendment No. 25 removes references to that exemption.

It has only just become clear to me that for the provisions of the Bill to apply to Government Departments and the Civil Service, the long title would have had to specify that the Bill sought to remove Crown immunity and that Government Departments would come within the scope. The House should ponder that because I should not like to be accused of ignoring it. I have recently received advice that Government Departments will be left outside the scope of the Bill; that point was not discussed at earlier stages. If Crown immunity had been removed explicitly, it would have been necessary to state that in a clause at the beginning of the Bill.

Crown immunity leaves a substantial loophole. I hope that Government Departments will respond positively and that the spirit of the law will be embraced by them in a moral sense. I hope that they will seek to comply with the Bill both for new and for existing employees. I hope that I am not pushing my luck to far in saying to the Minister that as she has been so helpful so far, she could put a cap on that assistance by telling me that she will advise her Department, as an employer, to accept the spirit of the legislation.

Mr. Forth: The hon. Gentleman is pushing his luck.

Mr. Kirkwood: Nothing ventured, nothing gained.

I hope that the House will discuss the amendment against that background. It is important because it relates to Government Departments.

1.30 pm

Mrs. Currie: I hope that the House agrees that we have had an interesting morning. Apart from anything else, in a small and, I hope, tantalising way, I have drawn aside the veil of secrecy that surrounds the detailed advice that Ministers are given. The House is about to hear me say that I was wrong, and I do not often do that either. This is a great historic event. In view of the comments made on amendment No. 25, it is probably as well that anyone else who seeks to promote a private Member's Bill should take note of the fact that Bills do not bind the Crown unless they specifically say so. Since the change is usually major and requires extensive consultation and discussion, it is not normally acceptable to the Government, unless they say so at the beginning, and there is usually ample time —six months or more—in which discussions can be held.

On 29 April, when we were debating national security exemptions, I responded to points made by the Opposition. Referring to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), I said:

> "the hon. Gentleman may like to take some proper advice about it. It is for the promoter of the Bill to decide whether the amendment should stand or be withdrawn. It is our view that it improves the Bill. We would wish to take further advice if the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) wants to withdraw it."—[Official Report, 29 April 1988; Vol. 132, c. 685.]

There was considerable discussion on Report, and when the Bill left the House extensive consultations took place with the Home Office, the machinery of Government office—the Minister for the Civil Service—the Ministry of Defence, the Cabinet Office and my Department. No valid case could be made to support the view that a national security exemption was justified within the limitations of the Bill—taking into account the point about pre-existing Crown immunity—and officials advised the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire accordingly. Parliamentary counsel's advice on how the amendment might be removed was sought. On 29 April, I said that the clause improved the Bill. I was wrong—it does not improve the Bill. Therefore we are content that amendment No. 25 should be made.

The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire asked about my Department's views. We have had discussions and I am happy to offer the House the assurance that the DHSS will follow the spirit of the Bill and that my officials have been so instructed. The Bill applies in England, Scotland and Wales, but not in Northern Ireland, until an Order in Council is made. The hon. Gentleman will have to make inquiries of other Departments elsewhere and outwith the Bill.

Mr. Corbett: It is a rare and historic moment when we hear the Minister at the Dispatch Box apologise for what was said in the House on 29 April, and I thank her—[Interruption.] Not at all. I am in favour of any hon. Member, whether an exalted Back Bencher or a lowly Front-Bench spokesperson saying that he or she made a mistake and got it wrong. There is no shame in that.

I am sure that the hon. Lady will forgive me, but she did not do herself justice by reminding us of what she said on 29 April. She could hardly get to her feet quickly enough to accuse me of firing Exocets and generally to chastise me in her best headmistressy, nay matronly, fashion for raising this matter and to tell me that I was not only wrong to raise it but was raising the wrong point on the wrong Bill.

Things move on, and all I want to do in thanking the Minister for seeing the ludicrousness of the proposition is to say that, on reflection, it was not my Exocet that put her in such a state but the boomerang that she had in her hand, because it has come back and taken her head off her shoulders. [Inerruption.] I am an old technology person as well.

Following my contribution, the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) said:

> "I assure the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) that it is the most acceptable agreement that could be reached in the time available."—[Official Report, 29 April 1988; Vol. 132, c. 685.]

That is why I saw the Minister's paws all over that part of the Bill. All's well that ends well, and I hope that the House accepts the amendment.

Mr. Kirkwood: This is the final stage of the Bill's progress. I am grateful for the response by the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett). He ends up with all the Brownie points—certainly in respect of the last amendment. I am genuinely grateful for the Minister's statement about the response that her Department will make. I hope that the House will now consider that the Access to Medical Reports Bill finally recognises the possible harm that could be caused by incorrrect or misleading information recorded in medical files. The Bill introduces safeguards in employment and insurance matters, and certainly trades additional administrative procedures to be carried out by employers and insurance companies for enhanced protection for individuals. I hope that the House will consider that it is worth paying that price. I commend the Bill to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Lords amendments Nos. 26 to 30 agreed to.

Protection of Animals (Amendment) Bill

Lords amendments considered.

Clause 2

OFFENCES RELATING TO ANIMAL FIGHTS

Lords amendment: No. 1, in page 1, line 27, at end insert—

> 5B. If a person who publishes or causes to be published an advertisement for a fight between animals knows that it is such an advertisement he shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 4 on the standard scale."

1.36 pm

Mr. John Browne (Winchester): I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): With this, it will be convenient to take Lords amendment No. 2.

Mr. Browne: Madam Deputy Speaker, you may remember that the Bill was introduced into this House on 28 October 1987, was given a Second Reading on 11 December, and spent some three days in Committee, finishing on 24 February of this year, and one day on Report, receiving its Third Reading on 27 April. In the other place, it was given a First Reading on 25 April, a Second Reading on 23 May, the Committee stage was on 8 June, Report was on 16 June, and the Bill was given a Third Reading on 27 June. It is now before us for consideration of Lords amendments.

I shall—I hope, helpfully—outline to the House the main points of the Bill.

Clause 1 enables a court to disqualify a person from having custody—not merely the ownership but the custody—of any animal upon first conviction under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 or the Protection of Animals (Scotland) Act 1912.

Clause 2(1) increases the penalties for unlawful attendance at animal fights in England and Wales from level 1, which, is £50, to level 4, which is £1,000. That is a 20 fold increase in fine.

Clause 2(2) extends to any individual or group such as the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals authority to prosecute those unlawfully attending animal fights. That clause is terribly important. It opens to the RSPCA and to any individual the ability to bring such prosecutions which, previously, were limited to the police under the three mid-19th century police Acts. It is a great opening up of the power of the individual citizen to start to hammer people engaged particularly in attending such events as animal baits and animal fights.

Clause 2(3) creates the offence of unlawful attendance at animal fights in Scotland.

The two Lords amendments, taken together, make it a specific offence knowingly to advertise an animal fight.

To be helpful, I shall retrace some of the background to the Lords amendments. Right hon. and hon. Members may remember that, in an amendment tabled during the Commons Committee stage, it was proposed that the advertising of animal fights should be made an offence. There was general sympathy for the intention behind the amendment, but it was thought that such advertising might already be covered by the provisions of the Protection of Animals Act 1911. My hon. Friend the Minister undertook to consider the matter further, and, on that basis, the amendment was withdrawn.

Subsequently, it became apparent that advertising, when the advertiser was also the organiser, was covered by the term "procure" in section 1(1)(c) of the 1911 Act, which makes it an offence to > "cause, procure, or assist at the fighting or baiting, of any animal".

Advertising by a person otherwise unconnected with the fight, however, is too far removed from the fight to constitute procuring and may thus not be an offence under existing law.

The introduction of a new offence to cover such advertising was not a straightforward option. For instance, it would not be acceptable unless it included the defence that an advertisement was placed unknowingly. As the House knows, advertisements in newspaper are often couched in veiled terms. It was also necessary to consider whether there were likely to be many advertisers not directly involved in the organisation of fights who would nevertheless have sufficient knowledge of the nature of the advertisement, despite its being in veiled form, to be guilty of knowingly advertising a fight. Given also that such an amendment at that stage might have prejudiced the progress of the Bill, it was decided to proceed no further at that time.

On Report in this House, an amendment was again moved to include an offence of advertising. It became clear that the term "advertising" was intended to mean the relaying of information by any means, from word of mouth to advertisement in newspapers and journals, usually subtly disguised. Advertisements for books describing the illegal activities of animal fighting or baiting, and editorials describing such fights in detail were also mentioned as possible targets for a new offence, as was any material which might encourage animal fighting by publicising it. It was suggested that the amendment should aim to make it illegal to promote animal fights.

In the light of that debate, my hon. Friend the Minister agreed to reconsider whether a suitable form of words could be found for a new offence which would adequately reflect the essence of the concern of hon. Members. The matter was referred to parliamentary counsel, who advised that the general law of incitement should already be sufficient to deal with persons orally encouraging others to attend animal fights and to cover written advertisements. Nevertheless, it was decided that as there were already numerous specific statutory provisions dealing with unlawful written advertisements, it would be inappropriate for an offence of advertising to be included in the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

The Lords amendments' which were moved in Committee in another place, include the words:

> "knows that it is such an advertisement".

In the case of a coded advertisement, it would be for the prosecution to produce evidence to establish that the advertisement was related to animal fighting and would have been so understood by devotees of that activity. Those amendments were welcomed and agreed by the Committee in another place on 8 June.

One point should be brought to the attention of the House before a decision is reached. Such advertisements, even in coded or veiled form, are often used by the police and the RSPCA as a form of intelligence to discover where offences are likely to take place. Having reviewed the situation and reflected on the matter, I am persuaded on balance, that the Lords amendments should stand. I therefore support them and urge the House to accept them.

1.45 pm

I am greatly pleased by the reception given to the Bill from all quarters of both Houses of Parliament. I have received a large amount of mail in support of the Bill—not just from my constituency but from throughout the country. It all shows that there is enormous goodwill towards animals and a very great deal of concern for animal welfare in our country. That concern has been reflected in Government legislation, in the Scientific Procedures Act 1986; the Pet Animals (Amendment) Act 1983 and the Protection of Animals (Penalties) Act 1987. We have also seen the passing of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1980. Furthermore, we have seen the Government support a large number of private Members' Bills on animal protection and welfare. All that goes to show that what is felt generally in the country is in fact being reflected by legislation in the House, not only from private Members but from the Government.

Having said that, I regret the need to bring in such a Bill. Why does animal cruelty exist in our country, to the extent that such legislation is necessary? What is worse, cruelty is actually on the increase.

There are three types of animal cruelty. The first is brought about by ignorance, when people either feed or keep an animal or pet in conditions that are effectively cruel, but they just do not see it. Secondly, there is the cruelty brought about by negligence, such as when people leave a dearly loved pet dog in a car park, in the summer sunshine, in a motor car, with all the windows closed. It is cruel, but people are just neglectful. This is particularly important because more and more pets are now being kept and therefore cruelty, whether it be by ignorance or negligence, has to be watched.

Here, we are dealing with the third type of cruelty, which is quite deliberate and calculated. It stems from two main attitudes. One is an attitude of carelessness for the feelings and suffering of animals. The other, which is much more serious, is from a warped sense of enjoyment at the degradation and repulsive torture of animals. It is something quite outrageous when one considers that we think of ourselves as a nation of animal lovers, which in general we are. It might involve a relatively small proportion of the population, but it is so disgusting that legislation is necessary to stamp on it, and to stamp on it hard. I am thinking particularly of things such as animal fights involving cocks or dogs, and badger baiting.

It is true that many animals fight and even kill in the wild—usually over mates, over food and over hunting territories, but the loser of one of those contests is either pretty rapidly killed or can run away. In an animal fight or in a bait, the loser cannot run away—there is no question of retreat. The animals are put in a pit or in a ring, and it is this natural instinct of the one who is defeated to run away, often without any blood lost that is totally eliminated in a dog or cock fight, or in a badger bait.

Animals also fight and kill in the wild, in order to eat. Usually this event is quick. The predator is usually either much larger or much more efficient in terms of its killing ability than its prey, and the death is usually fast. Unfortunately, in animal fights—particularly with dogs and badgers—deaths are long and drawn out; usually about four hours. Often, the badger has not just one but two or three dogs put against it, and when one of the terriers gets wounded, a fresh terrier is put in, to keep the number up. It is the most galling sight that you will ever have seen, Madam Deputy Speaker. It is revolting. Worse still, it is on the increase. Indeed, the RSPCA experience shows that it is on the increase. Prosecutions brought under the 1911 Act have risen by 25 per cent. in the past six years, and 5 per cent. of those convictions were such bad cases that the individuals concerned were put into custody immediately. I fear that this is only the tip of the iceberg: for every person prosecuted and convicted, several more probably go unseen. The import of pit bull terriers from the United States, bred specifically for dog fighting, is also a very sinister sign of the need for the legislation.

During my researches, it was suggested to me that ready cash bets for as much as £100,000 are being put on dog fights, that a mature pit bull terrier sells for £10,000, and that there are indications that drug money is finding its way into these illegal fights. I have to say that I have seen no proof of that. However, given that money plays a significant part in dog fights in the form of heavy betting, given that those who take part in their organisation or attend them are the type of person likely to be involved in other crimes and given that illicit drug dealing is currently one of the more prevalent types of moneymaking crime, it is perhaps to be expected that a proportion of the money directed towards animal fights should derive from drug dealing. I should therefore appreciate it if my hon. Friend the Minister would agree to alert the police forces at least to keep a weather eye open for the phenomenon.

We all know that private Members' Bills are very delicate and are easily killed at any of their 11 stages. I have been very lucky not only to have drawn the 12th position in the ballot but to have been given four days of parliamentary time in this House alone, and to have had the support of hon. Members on both sides. I should like to close by thanking my sponsors, who came from all the major parties, and the members of the Committee, who gave up three days of their time without any Government whipping. I see that my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) is present. He made some valuable contributions in Committee in helping to get the fines increased, and I am grateful to him for that. I also thank Lord Houghton of Sowerby, who, as you know, Madam Deputy Speaker, is a very experienced parliamentarian. He took on and piloted the Bill in another place in a very professional, skilled and charming manner.

I thank right hon. and hon. Members and noble Lords in all quarters of both Houses for supporting the Bill, the civil servants from the Home Office and the Clerks Department for their help and advice, and, of course, my Whip, my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, West (Mr. Durant). Last but not least, I thank my hon. Friend the Minister, who has been not only constantly helpful but creatively flexible. As you know from your experience on the Back Benches, Madam Deputy Speaker, for a Minister really to listen to Back-Bench feeling, to accept amendments put forward when the Government have had a pretty solid line and to start to mould Government opinion on his feet from the Front Bench, is not altogether common in this place, and should be mentioned. Such creative flexibility should not be taken for granted: it reflects the confidence of an hon. Gentleman who is right on top of his job, and the House and the nation should be grateful for it. Finally, I thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker, your fellow Deputy Speakers and the Chairman of the Committee for all the patience that you have exhibited.

[Mr. Browne]

The Bill has shown all quarters of both Houses at their best in Parliament. It has also shown Government at their best—in other words, willing to listen to Back-Bench opinion and to make adjustments to their planned course. The Bill has taken a considerable amount of parliamentary time, and has been steadily improved throughout its passage—as I think it will be today by the acceptance of these amendments.

I urge the House to accept the Lords amendments and to commend the Bill humbly to Her Majesty for Royal Assent.

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): The House can say, "Well done" to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne). After today, I very much hope that the Bill will reach the statute book. I have been working to improve it all along the way. It could be said that I have dogged the promoter all along the way. I do not know whether that is the right word. Perhaps, on this issue only, I have been a faithful friend in ensuring that the Bill reaches the statute book.

As we are discussing dogs and dog fighting, I am very pleased that my hon. Friend the member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) is in her place. I hope that the House will excuse my poor play on words at the beginning of the debate.

Ms. Jo Richardson (Barking): If my hon. Friend allows enough time, we will get on to donkeys and asses as well.

Mr. Cohen: I take my hon. Friend's intervention as a reprimand for being so asinine and I apologise for that.

I thank the sponsor, and I also thank the Minister for his commitment to review the amendment that I tabled at an earlier stage. He was most helpful and constructive in getting it incorporated into the Bill in another place. He gets my accolade and my support when he is helpful and constructive; I only wish that he was more helpful and constructive on other issues. He is not, not because of any personal defect, but because of his own narrow party political interests. However, in this case I congratulate him on getting into the Bill my amendment making knowingly to promote a fight between animals an offence. He was concerned as he thought that the Bill was a fragile vessel, but I am pleased to say that he got it in and the Bill is still afloat.

The amendments are an improvement to the Bill and close an important loophole. The amendments would make it an offence to know "that it is such an advertisement".

There is still the excuse of not knowing. The publisher of such an advertisement could say that he did not know that it was such an advertisement. Clearly it would be for the courts to decide whether the publishers knew. In many such instances there would be a pretence by the publishers of such advertisements. They might claim that they did not know, when really they were not too bothered, and were more interested in taking the money for the advertisement. In most cases they will have known but it will be for the courts to decide the extent of their knowledge.

The amendments deal with

"a person . . . publishing or causing to be published an advertisement for a fight between animals".

If the person who actually published the advertisement did not know that it was such an advertisement, it will be the duty of the police to find the person who initiated the advertisement and caused it to be published, as, under the amendments, that person will be guilty of an offence. Even if the person publishing the advertisement was duped, under the amendments the person behind the advertisement should be taken to court.

The newspaper publishers and the freesheets which contain such advertisements should be more aware of them and not accept them.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): What about the level of fine?

Mr. Cohen: I am just coming to that. The Bill says that a person

"shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 4 on the standard scale."

Mr. Skinner: That is £1,000.

Mr. Cohen: That is right. It is an appallingly low fine, especially since the RSPCA has reported that sometimes a bet of £50,000 can be put on an animal or dog fight. When one is talking about such large amounts of money, £1,000 does not seem an adequate fine. The inadequacy of the fine also applies to those who organise the fight. They should be hit really hard and sent to prison for a long time. However, at least it is the first step on the ladder. I hope that in future we will increase the fine for people who knowingly take part in advertising such fights.

Mr. John Browne: The hon. Gentleman said "take part". It should be emphasised that the participation and organisation of such fights is subject to a fine of £2,000 and/or six months' imprisonment.

Mr. Cohen: That is absolutely right. I was referring to those who take an active part in advertising such fights.

On 22 April in columns 1103 and 1104 of Hansard I referred to "formal advertisements" appearing in magazines such as Shooting News and Weekly. Since then I and other hon. Members have received a letter from that magazine, which is concerned about what I said at that time. I am considering the letter and will give a proper response. I acknowledge that the magazine has not contained "formal advertisements" recently. Perhaps I should have been a little more careful when choosing my language. Perhaps I should have said that the adverts were more informal, offering encouragement to those who take part in animal fights.

In column 1104 I quoted an advertisement that appeared in Shooting News and Weekly on 6 December 1985. The advertisement was for a book entitled, "Badger Digging with Terriers". It contained information on how to hunt badgers with dogs, an activity that is banned under the law of the land. The book clearly encourages that activity and that was a genuine point to make.

That advertisement was taken to the magistrates court, but the case was lost. The people who initiated the case ran out of money and could not take the matter further. According to the magistrates it was a book on a historical activity and dealt with badger baiting in the past. That was a feeble basis for the decision. If someone published a book on the history of child pornography and used it as an excuse to show child pornography or published the history of terrorism and showed how to make bombs or how to become a terrorist, the House and the courts would move in quickly and say that it was not appropriate. It was therefore wrong for that decision to be made about that advertisement. It will indirectly allow people to advertise animal fights.

The amendments close a gaping loophole. Mention was made in a previous debate of an Order in Council. I know that this legislation will not apply to Northern Ireland, but I hope that that will be corrected by an Order in Council. I do not know what can be done about verbal advertising in public houses of where dog fights will take place. I hope that the problem will be tackled by future legislation. If people are paid to advertise dog fights we must introduce legislation to tackle that problem.

I welcome the Bill, but we will need more Bills to tackle the extensive level of cruelty in this country. We also need Bills to abolish blood sports, the murderous season of which is in full cry. I hope that the House will consider badger baiting, hare coursing and fox and stag hunting in the future and introduce bans on those activities. I shall certainly try to introduce legislation to impose an unequivocal ban on all hunting with dogs.

There is a connection between fox hunting and dog fighting. We are all united against dog fighting, but too many Conservative Members support fox hunting. Those who take part in fox hunting are upper-class vicious thugs but those who take part in dog fighting are the rural-working class—but only a stratum of it that is trying to emulate the upper-class thugs. In many cases, the working-class thugs are linked to the hunt and get a bit of extra murderous pleasure from dog fighting. One problem cannot be tackled without tackling the other, which is why we must get rid of fox hunting.

Ms. Mildred Gordon (Bow and Poplar): Does my hon. Friend agree that reports of the royal family's children being blooded with the brush of the fox are offensive to everybody who cares about the welfare of animals?

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I should be obliged if the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) would refer to the amendments.

Mr. Cohen: My hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon) makes a good and genuine point, which I fully support. I do not intend to say any more on that point, unless my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) wants to question me about it.

Mr. Skinner: I do not know how far the Bill extends. I am occupying what used to be known as the Liberal Bench——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I should be obliged if I could see the hon. Gentleman's handsome face.

Mr. Skinner: You are a friend of mine, Madam Deputy Speaker, and you sat on the NEC. Who knows, you might be putting up for the top job. You might be doing a bit of canvassing, similar to the letters from the Whips that I have received recently.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) remembers that there used to be dog fights between the leader of the SDP and the leader of the Liberal party. Are they included in the Bill?

Mr. Cohen: Unfortunately they are not. They are not in alliance now, but those dog fights are still going on. I pay tribute to my hon. Friend for drawing the House's attention the other day to the fact that it is no longer an alliance party and that they are not now entitled to the Supply days that they previously enjoyed. The Supply days have gone to the Ulster Unionists.

The Bill does refer not to my hon. Friend's point, but to the most serious and heinous crime of dog fighting, which is substantially on the increase. It needs to be stamped out in the most consistent and effective way. The Bill is a step towards that aim. More steps will be needed. Nevertheless, I welcome the Bill.

Mr. Greg Knight (Derby, North): I warmly welcome the Lords amendments. I know that they will also be welcomed by the Derbyshire Wildlife trust and the Derby branch of the RSPCA. I part company from my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) who said that the Bill had received support from all sides of the House. It is worth mentioning that not one SLD or SDP Member has bothered to attend this important debate. They are conspicuous by their absence.

Mr. David Alton (Liverpool, Mossley Hill): I think that the hon. Gentleman needs a pair of spectacles.

Mr. Knight: I apologise to the hon. Gentleman, who has just wandered into the Chamber and who——

Mr. Alton: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Knight: If the hon. Gentleman will allow me to finish this point I shall then give way. He was not present during our consideration of the Bill, but I am aware that he flitted in and out earlier, no doubt with an eye on his own Bill that is set down for debate later today.

Mr. Alton: The hon. Gentleman should not make remarks like that unless he can justify them. I have been in the Chamber for most of the morning and I listened to many of the contributions—most of them fascinating but many of them pretty irrelevant.

Mr. Knight: The hon. Gentleman is an expert in what is irrelevant. He has only just walked into the Chamber. He has taken no interest in the Bill, nor have any of his colleagues. I hope that he will decide to remain in the Chamber and listen to the rest of the debate.

Mr. Alton: The hon. Gentleman was not in the Chamber earlier when my hon. Friend the Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) introduced his very important Bill that provides for freedom for information and access to medical records. I am sorry that he was not present for that debate.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I must ask the hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) to refer to amendments Nos. 1 and 2 that we are now debating.

Mr. Knight: The hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) has confirmed my view that he is ignorant of many of the issues that have been discussed in this Chamber.

Mr. Skinner: Will the hon. Gentleman give way, just for a moment?

Mr. Knight: Yes, provided that it is to make a relevant point.

Mr. Skinner: Yes, it is. I have a sneaking suspicion that at the end of the debate the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) will trot out of the Chamber to speak to the BBC and LBC——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. That is not at all relevant to the amendments that we are debating. I must ask the hon. Gentleman to resume his seat.

Mr. Skinner: All I want to say is that the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill has intervened three times. If any hon. Member is filibustering, it is he.

Mr. Knight: I am sure that you would not permit me, Madam Deputy Speaker, to respond to that point. But I have noted what the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) said, and there is something in it.

The amendments passed by another place correct a flaw in the Bill. They catch those who knowingly advertise such functions, but I want my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester or my hon. Friend the Minister to answer two points.

I listened attentively to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) who said that he hoped that on some future occasion we would deal with legislation to catch the person who advertises dog fights by word of mouth. I have looked in the Hansard of another place, which I shall paraphrase as you, Madam Deputy Speaker, would rule me out of order if I quoted it. The peer who moved the amendment said that it would include the written word, the poster, the leaflet, the flyposter and the oral communication. I am somewhat confused by the comments of Opposition Members, and I now wonder whether the amendment covers oral communication. If it does, we shall need to take care.

2.15 pm

Mr. Cohen: As I read it, the amendment does not cover oral advertisement—the more is the pity in many respects. I referred to it because I think we need to come back to that at some future date, especially if someone is paid to advertise dog fighting by word of mouth.

Mr. Knight: When reading the Lords amendment, I believe that a layman would come to the conclusion that we are talking only about a written advertisement, because it refers to publishing. However, the "Shorter Oxford English Dictionary" defines publication as:

> "The action of making publicly known; public notification or announcement".

There is no mention of its having to be in writing.

In view of the comments made in another place, will my hon. Friend the Minister, or my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester say whether the amendment catches the oral advertisement? I am thinking of the example of someone in a public house, who, when discussing various matters occurring in the community, says to someone else, "There is a disgusting dog fight at Skinners farm on Saturday at 12 o'clock." Would that fall within the scope of the Bill? According to what was said in another place, it would; yet from the comments of the hon. Member for Leyton, perhaps it would not. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister can answer that point.

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): Has my hon. Friend considered the other possibility, which I do not think has been mentioned? Someone, either by post or verbally, might say, "Do not attend this disgraceful meeting where dog fighting will take place." Will that come under the scope of the amendment? The person would ostensibly be saying, "I am an animal lover, I urge you not to go to this event because it will harm animals." If such behaviour were included, it would cause some difficulty.

Mr. Knight: My hon. Friend has touched on the point that I am coming to. The amendment refers only to publishing or causing to be published an advertisement for a fight. It does not say that one has to exhort the public to attend. There is a severe danger that animal welfare groups telling people not to go to a dog fight, or people who oppose dog fighting having a discussion in a pub could be considered to be advertising that event. The House needs some reassurance that a person who opposes this vile practice, and is merely telling friends or colleagues not to attend, will not end up in court charged with an offence. Apart from these two areas of concern, I warmly welcome the amendment.

Mr. Robin Corbett (Birmingham, Erdington): I welcome the Bill back to this place, and congratulate the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) and the all-party sponsors, who will be especially pleased and flattered by the presence of the illustrious and hon. Gentleman, the Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones). He is known throughout the length and breadth of these islands as one of the strongest supporters of this Bill, given his well-known support for anything to do with animal welfare.

The amendments are important. They strengthen the armoury that the Bill seeks to provide to try to stamp out this vile and evil practice to get at those who advertise these events or cause them to be advertised and also those who take part in them. I want to echo a point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). Although a person who causes an advertisement to be published—I take that to be someone who walks into a newspaper or magazine office and puts an advert in coded form across the counter—may be caught by the Bill, I hope that no publishers, editors or advertising managers of newspapers or magazines will use that as an excuse to be casual or careless about accepting advertisements.

I was a journalist for some years and I think that all those concerned with the preparation, publication and distribution of newspapers and magazines have a responsibility to ensure that if they are not absolutely clear about the purpose of an advertisement, they should not publish or accept it until its purpose has been clarified. If prosecutions are brought against publishers, editors or advertising managers under the Bill, I hope that no court will be impressed by the defence that those people did not understand what the advertisement was about or that it seemed like a bit of a joke at the time. That would be irresponsible in the extreme.

I have no reason to believe that that happens, but in this narrow area of publishing one is justified in holding the suspicion that there are people in publishing who know what is happening and do nothing about it. On the back of some money which a publication may receive, those people may accept advertisements which the Bill will rule out.

We are concerned with a vile, disgusting and degrading sport, not only for the dogs and other animals concerned, but more importantly for the adults who take part. God only knows what effect that must have on them and their families. I hope that the amendments are accepted.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): I entirely agree with the concluding remarks of the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett). He is quite right to say that this is a violent and degrading sport, most particularly for those who participate. It is the kind of thing that is unworthy by any definition of that word.

Against that background, the House would want to congratulate and thank my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) on several counts. The first is his perceptive and very generous remarks about me. That seemed to show him to be a very clear-sighted Member of the House of Commons. On behalf of the whole Government Front Bench, I thank him for his comments.

I suppose that one should also thank my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester for introducing the Bill. We must get our priorities right. Therefore, he is to be thanked first for his kind words and then for introducing his Bill. He is also to be thanked for his very clear explanation of the purpose behind the Bill and his explanation of the genesis of the amendments.

My hon. Friend raised the question of a connection between drug money and dog fighting. I am not aware that dog fighting has been used as a method for laundering drug money. I am not aware of any police report to that effect. However, if there is any evidence of such a connection, I would expect that to be brought to my attention and, because of the interest of my hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones) in this matter, I will bring it to his attention also.

On behalf of the House, I should say that we are indebted to my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester for introducing the Bill and we are also indebted to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). I frequently disagree with the hon. Gentleman, as he is aware. However, he has been a powerful exponent of the argument to extend the Bill to include the concept of knowingly to advertise. There is no doubt that he played a prominent part in Committee, when he was able to attend. I make that point because although the Committee met three times, he was unable to attend on one occasion because of an unhappy incident in the Chamber; he was unable to be present because of Mr. Speaker's ruling. However, the hon. Gentleman has been prominent in bringing a gap in the law to the attention of the House and it is right that we should acknowledge what he has done.

There is a range of existing statutory and common law offences which touch on the issue, such as the offences of procuring, inciting and conspiracy, but it is highly desirable that we should introduce a specific statutory offence to deal with advertising. That is why the Lords agreed to the amendments, which I commend to the House.

The position of a publisher has always been difficult in law. The question is whether the offence should be absolute or require proof of knowledge. The hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) and I share the view that it is essential that the act of knowingly publishing should be rendered criminal. It should not be an absolute offence and that is why the Lords amendment was drafted in its present form. The proof of knowledge is an essential element in the commission of the offence and I hope that that will reassure the newspaper industry and others who will come within the scope of the Bill.

Mr. Corbett: I agree with the Minister, but I hope that he will take on board my point that none of that absolves the publisher, editor or advertising manager of publications from ensuring as far as possible that they understand the nature of the advertisement that they , re publishing.

Mr. Hogg: I entirely agree. I was going to make that point because, as a number of hon. Members have said, some advertisements are of a veiled kind. It is certainly the responsibility of an editor to scrutinise carefully advertisements that are capable of giving a message of the kind that we wish to strike at in the Bill. The Lords amendment will not only prohibit express advertisements, which are obvious, but will oblige editors and sub-editors to look more closely at the veiled advertisements, which might carry a similar message.

My hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) asked two questions, in his perceptive and challenging way, one of which causes me some concern. I shall deal first with the one that causes me no concern. My hon. Friend asked what would happen if a person sought to advise others not to attend a dog fight and, in so doing, mentioned the existence or prospective existence of a dog fight. I have a number of answers to that. First, I doubt whether that would fall within the scope of the Bill. Secondly, there is always discretion about whether to prosecute, and, thirdly, if a court believed that a person was acting for the reason that my hon. Friend has described, an absolute discharge would be the appropriate penalty, even though an offence had been committed.

As for whether the publication needs to be in writing or can also be oral, my present feeling is that a publication must be in writing, but other forms of advertisement will be covered by the other kinds of offences that I have described.

We are dealing with an important amendment, which aims to meet a particular problem. For that reason, I commend it to the House.

PALACE OF WESTMINSTER (REMOVAL OF CROWN IMMUNITY) BILL

Madam Deputy Speaker: The Queen's consent has not been obtained. Therefore, I cannot propose the Question.

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I give notice that I shall take up this matter urgently with the Leader of the House. To the best of my knowledge, I have complied with the procedures. I have written to the relevant Departments. I have asked them to take up the matter to get the Queen's Consent. Today, I was most surprised to receive a letter from the Public Bill Office, stating that the last instruction that was received from me was to suspend application. That is not the case. I intend to seek application. I wonder whether there is even a conspiracy to stop the Bill coming forward. [Interruption.]

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Lady is taking a wise action.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I listened carefully to what my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) said about the Bill. Are we to understand that the dilatory behaviour of the Palace is preventing the House from debating an important measure to protect the conditions of staff employed in this building and to give them the conditions that they would enjoy anywhere else?

Madam Deputy Speaker: Let me help the hon. Gentleman if I can. It is no reflection on the Palace, as the hon. Lady knows. An application is made to a Minister, and the hon. Lady is perfectly entitled and right to take the action that she now proposes to take.

Mr. Corbyn: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Are we to understand that the slothful behaviour of the relevant Ministers is preventing the Palace consenting to the Bill being debated?

Madam Deputy Speaker: It has nothing to do with the Palace. I think that I have explained the situation. The hon. Lady knows exactly the procedure that she is now to adopt.

Ms. Walley: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I have written to the Secretary of State for Employment. There seems to have been some mix-up between the Public Bill Office and the Secretary of State for Employment. As my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) quite rightly pointed out, the people who work in the House—those who work in the canteens and everyone else—deserve proper public protection. I intend to pursue the matter.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I shall answer the hon. Lady, because she is quite right in pursuing the matter in the way that she is.

Second Reading deferred till Monday 11 July.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I heard my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) say that there is a complication with regard to the matter being progressed. You, Madam Deputy Speaker, said that it was not the fault of anybody at Buckingham palace. We now find out that it is not the Minister's fault. I want to know whose fault it is. It is time that misleading replies were ended. If it is not the fault of the Palace or of the Minister, let us get on and pass the Bill so that people here on poverty-stricken wages can have a fair deal.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. Lady is taking action to see that that is done and that her position is preserved.

Mr. Corbyn: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I understand that the Bill is coming back for a Second Reading on Monday. Could the Ministers who are present at the moment ensure that, by Monday, it is clear to the House that we are in a position to debate the Bill to allow a degree of protection of employment for staff in this building similar to that which they would enjoy anywhere else?

Madam Deputy Speaker: It is not a matter for the Chair. There are Ministers on the Treasury Bench. The hon. Lady is doing absolutely the right thing in preserving her position at this time.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Garel-Jones.]

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Can you tell the House to how many Bills the hon. Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones) has objected today and how many people will be adversely affected as a result?

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): It is not within my remit to notice who is actually objecting. I hear voices.

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Will you confirm that, quite correctly, objections have been made from both sides of the House? Will you further confirm that a Bill which had passed most of its stages in the House was objected to by Opposition Members? Will you make it clear that any Member in any part of the House is entitled to object on a Friday?

Madam Deputy Speaker: I am sure that when hon. Members read the Official Report on Monday they will see that that is the case. Meanwhile, this discussion is coming out of a private Member's time. I call Mr. Tom Clarke.

2.43 pm

Mr. Tom Clarke (Monklands, West): This debate concerns the treatment of the late Bahadur Singh in Barlinnie prison. Even as I speak these words, I find it difficult to contemplate that a man 26 years of age, who lived for a short time in Coatbridge in my constituency and for whom I had been making representations from mid-winter until spring this year, died on 12 May—the day after his release, following six months in Barlinnie prison. Time after time, as his solicitor took up the case, his friends the Banga family in Coatbridge came to see me. I can still hear them saying, as they frequently did, "They will kill him, they will kill him." Throughout, they had a lack of faith in the administration of British justice which many now think proved chillingly perceptive.

I consider the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton), to be one of the most humane of hon. Members, with a fine record as a Back Bencher interested in penal reform issues. I have to say, however, that after a number of representations and warnings, I cannot regard Mr. Singh's death on a bus on the way home in the Punjab as a coincidence. There are far wider implications—of civil liberties, of basic human rights, of racism in Scottish prisons and, until recent times, a lack of Scottish Office concern about the problem—and I believe that these should be urgently addressed.

Bahadur Singh had been languishing in Barlinnie prison after his arrest for a breach of the immigration laws, for not having proper documentation. Last year, he went to stay in Scotland with his friends, restaurant owner Autar Banga and Mrs. Jasbir Banga. In November, he was reported to the immigration authorities and arrested. He appeared in Airdrie sheriff court on Monday 9 November, when he pleaded guilty to a contravention of the Immigration Act 1971. He was fined £120 but because he had no money on his person, he was sentenced to 28 days and sent to Barlinnie pending the outcome of an appeal.

I first took up his case with the Home Office on 18 November 1987, as Mr. Singh had sought political asylum. He was kept in prison while his application was processed. The inevitable questions arise: why did it take so long for the Home Office to make a decision and why, during the decision-making process, was he kept in prison? Those matters are diminished in importance by the most basic question of all: how was Bahadur Singh treated while he was in Barlinnie prison?

I first drew the Government's attention to allegations of violence against Bahadur Singh when I wrote to the Minister of State, Home Office, the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton), on 11 February and again on 26 February 1988. I understand that Mr. Singh changed his mind about appealing for political asylum from time to time, but as I said then in my letter to the Minister, Mr. Singh's

> "indecision over his appeal results from . . . bullying and abuse which has caused very great distress."

The Minister's written reply, received more than a month later, directed me to the Scottish Office, while the Minister proposed > "to maintain his detention in view of his previous disregard for . . . immigration control."

Allegations of violence and racism continued, so on 28 March I wrote to the prison governor, Mr. Walker, that from the outset of Mr. Singh's

> "committal to Barlinnie, I have had reports from his visitors of physical and cruel verbal abuse."

After a brief acknowledgment, the governor replied on 21 April, nearly a month later, in the following words:

> "I have had the allegations investigated by a member of my senior management team. Mr. Singh speaks virtually no English and it was necessary to interview him through another inmate who was acting as an interpreter."

In that interview, according to the governor's letter, Mr. Singh apparently stated that he > "had no particular problems at that time"

and no real fears for his own safety, although a few slogans had been daubed on his cell door. That account of the investigation is strongly disputed and I shall return to it later.

I would have expected that a matter as serious as this, raised by a Member of the House, would have been personally investigated by the governor and not delegated as a matter of little importance. Moreover, a letter from the governor to Strathclyde community relations council a few weeks later implied that there had been no problems with the treatment of ethnic minority prisoners. In the words of the council, his reply was "complacent" and "misleading"; it was not consistent with the facts.

I was still very unhappy as allegations continued to mount, so I wrote to the Secretary of State for Scotland on 3 May 1988. One of the most unacceptable aspects of the whole affair is that the Secretary of State's office did not reply to my letter until Thursday 2 June—the day when, by another remarkable coincidence, the Glasgow Evening Times broke the news to his office that Mr. Singh had died several weeks before. I believe that the House is entitled to an explanation for that insensitive delay from the Secretary of State. At the very least, his role seems to represent administrative incompetence which cannot be dismissed lightly in view of the tragic consequences.

I have now had the opportunity to speak at length to crucial witnesses of the alleged events. Mr. Mohammed

[Mr. Tom Clarke]

Sattar is a young Pakistani who at one point shared a cell with Bahadur Singh. It should be said in passing that Mr. Sattar had a fracas with his girl friend—now happily his wife—which led to a short stay in prison. There is a conflict of evidence between Mr. Sattar and Mr. Walker, the prison governor. Whereas Mr. Walker had said—I return to my earlier point—that Mr. Singh had made no complaint, Mohammed Sattar insists—and I can confirm that his English is very fluent—that he acted as an interpreter for Mr. Singh in the presence of the governor's representative, and that Mr. Singh did, indeed, complain about beatings and racist behaviour. In my conversation with Mr. Sattar he repeated the allegations that he had first made in the Glasgow Evening Times when he said:

> "They were just banging at them with steel bars and Bahadur and the other man were on their knees trying to protect themselves."

I can do no other than underline that conflict of evidence in the hope that the matter will be investigated.

I have also talked, with the help of an interpreter, to another key witness, Mr. Vijay Kumar. Mr. Kumar had also alleged that he had suffered racial harassment while an inmate in Barlinnie prison, again as a result of a breach of immigration rules. However, on 16 June 1988, when his case came before Lord Weir in the Court of Session, Mr. Kumar was set free. Lord Weir used the following words:

> "It was not in the tradition of the Scottish administration of justice for someone to be detained for months and months in such circumstances."

I cannot stress too strongly that it is of the utmost importance that no steps should be taken to deport Mr. Kumar from this country before he has the opportunity to give evidence to an inquiry into the scale of racial harassment in Scottish prisons and, in particular, the death of Bahadur Singh. My hon. Friends and I hope that the Under-Secretary can give us an assurance to that effect today. Let me add that it is a tragic pity that Lord Weir was never given the opportunity to reach the same conclusion in the case of Bahadur Singh.

Having spent four hours last Sunday listening to Mohammed Sattar and Vijay Kumar, I am convinced that they are telling the truth. I understand that the Minister has already taken some steps, and I thank him for that; but I insist that the problem warrants a full and open public inquiry. The Scottish Office must demonstrate that it takes the issue of racism seriously by responding to that call.

The allegations are serious ones. They are that Mr. Bahadur Singh was subjected to a series of harrowing racial attacks while in one of Her Majesty's prisons; that Mr. Singh, a timid man who spoke virtually no English, was beaten up in his cell by five white inmates carrying metal bars and kitchen knives; that he was attacked while he mixed with other prisoners; that he had hot tea and soup thrown at him and was struck by a metal tray in the dining room; that racial slogans and threats were daubed on his cell door; and that the wardens specifically responsible for that part of the prison pretended not to notice any of this. It could hardly have helped that there is the suggestion—and I can go no further than that—that Mr. Singh was kept for some of his stay in a cell for 23 hours per day with a light on permanently.

I have been told by the Under-Secretary that Mr. Singh was medically examined on 28 April. But even if that was so, it does not explain what happened between that date and 12 May when he was released.

There are other questions to be answered. Why did it take six months to deal with such a case? Are there other similar cases in Scottish prisons at the moment? Why, after such delays, was he rushed straight on to a plane and deported without being allowed to let friends and relations know what was happening? Is it true that he spent his last night in Scotland, not in Barlinnie, but in a police cell in Strathclyde police headquarters, and if so, why was he moved and why did his friends not have access? What precisely was the state of Mr. Singh's health at that time and, frankly, was he fit to undertake that long flight?

Why do we lock up illegal immigrants beside violent criminals in our toughest jails? Why do we run that risk of racist intimidation or, to put it another way, condemn people, whose only crime was to want to live here, to long periods of solitary confinement for their own protection? Why is there no purpose-built detention centre for immigration cases in Scotland, or at least a special arrangement with low security prisons? In a recent reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie), the Minister said that there are so few such cases in Scottish prisons that special arrangements are not neccessary. Surely the Minister accepts that if the numbers involved are so small, the establishment of a special detention centre would be so much simpler. It might be even less costly than present arrangements.

What special arrangements exist in our prisons for religious worship by minorities? What proportion of our prison officers come from ethnic minorities, and what steps are the Government taking to boost recruitment? What arrangements for special diets exist in Scottish prisons, and how sensitively are cultural questions tackled by prison administrators? Are there any members of ethnic minorities who are prison visitors in Barlinnie, and will the Under-Secretary tell us how he plans to increase their number around Scotland? I understand that the Home Office in England and Wales has recommended that each prison should have a race relations policy and senior management given proper training. Has any such policy even been talked about by the Scottish Office? Is racial harassment a problem in its own right or does the Scottish Office treat it as just another breach of prison rules?

For all those reasons, I have called for an official inquiry into Bahadur Singh's detention and subsequent death. I try not to underestimate the problems of administering Scottish prisons and I have no difficulty in accepting that the vast majority of prison staff are thoroughly decent people. But that cannot, on its own, be enough. If there is something wrong with the system we must try to put it right, and what is wrong is the absence of a clear, central anti-racist policy.

Bahadur Singh is dead. But there are, I hope, many lessons that we can learn from his short life—particularly the last six months of it. We must face facts and tackle racism in our prisons and in wider society as a matter of urgency. This is, I believe, the least we can do in tribute to a young man whose love for this land was greater than we could return.

2.58 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton): The hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) contributes a service by raising some extremely serious matters.

I share the concern of the hon. Member that the members of the ethnic community who find themselves for whatever reason detained in Scottish prisons, should have no fear of persecution and should be able to enjoy a satisfactory quality of life. In particular, I utterly condemn racism, wherever it occurs.

It would be fair to say that I have received no evidence that there is any widespread problem of abuse against inmates of ethnic origin in Scottish prisons. Prison staff are aware that they must be vigilant for evidence of abuse, and any breach of prison discipline by an inmate which is related to racial discrimination of any sort would be treated very seriously indeed.

If it became clear that measures were needed either to help members of ethnic communities or to stamp out racial discrimination, such measures would be taken swiftly by prison governors. Indeed, following the allegations of abuse against Mr. Singh, the governor of Barlinnie prison has held constructive discussions with representatives of the Asian community and has taken a number of immediate measures to help ease the problems which might be encountered by members of the ethnic community in prison. In particular, the governor has introduced a practice of locating inmates from ethnic communities together for mutual support and companionship; invited the community groups to undertake the translation of the prison's rule book into the four major Asian languages—an invitation that I understand has been accepted; discussed with the community groups visit arrangements for members of ethnic communities; discussed the special diet requirements of members of ethnic communities; and discussed with the community groups the provision of newspapers and reading materials in the major Asian languages.

All those steps should make a positive contribution towards improving the well-being and the quality of life of members of the ethnic communities located in Barlinnie prison. It is Barlinnie prison which holds the majority of persons detained under the Immigration Acts in Scotland. The numbers held at any one time are small and I understand that 11 are currently being held.

Nevertheless, my Department will be writing to governors of all other Scottish prisons, outlining the steps taken at Barlinnie, and inviting them to consider how far it may be appropriate to introduce similar procedures in their own establishments.

In addition, I have asked Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons to consider whether there are any further improvements which the prison service ought to be making to the general arrangements for accommodating members of ethnic groups in Scottish prisons. I am anxious that the study should be concluded as soon as is practicable and I expect to have the chief inspector's report well before the end of the year.

The decision that Mr. Singh should be detained under the Immigration Act 1971, on completion of his prison sentence on 4 December, as the subject of deportation proceedings for overstaying, is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. He tells me that a deportation order was signed on 3 February 1988. Enforcement of the order was delayed by the need to take full account of the representations made on Mr. Singh's behalf and by the need to consider his application for asylum, as well as the statutory requirements which prevent an order from being made and enforced before the expiry of the time limit set for appeal against deportation.

These are, as I have said, matters for my right hon. Friend. But the hon. Gentleman has also raised a number of matters concerning Mr. Singh's treatment while he was held in Barlinnie prison, and for these I accept full responsibility.

Mr. William McKelvey (Kilmarnock and Loudoun) rose——

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am reluctant to give way because I have so much ground to cover.

Let me assure the hon. Member for Monklands, West that I take all such allegations very seriously. The hon. Gentleman has questioned the time—five weeks—which it took me to reply after he raised the allegations with me on 3 May. By that time Mr. Singh had been moved to accommodation where he could be kept under close observation. I first saw a photocopy of the hon. Gentleman's letter on 9 May. In his letter, the hon. Gentleman expressed dissatisfaction with the replies he had received from the governor of Barlinnie prison and asked for a more thorough investigation into the alleged assaults. Such an investigation was instigated immediately. It took three weeks to complete and the report was received by my Department on 26 May. I do not think that the period is unreasonable, given that the hon. Gentleman had expressed dissatisfaction with the earlier replies and asked for a more thorough and careful investigation.

I understand that the hon. Gentleman first raised the question of Mr. Singh's treatment in Barlinnie with the Home Office on 26 February and was immediately advised that complaints about Mr. Singh's treatment in Barlinnie were a matter for the Scottish Office. It was not until 3 May—some three months later—that the hon. Gentleman wrote to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and myself about the allegations.

Mr. Tom Clarke: If the Minister reads my speech he will see that I took the matter up immediately with the governor of Barlinnie prison. I went to the Scottish Office when I regarded the reply from the governor as being unsatisfactory.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Yes. However, the hon. Gentleman will appreciate that the letter that he sent to me included a letter from the lawyers which said:

> "perhaps you would pursue this matter with the Secretary of State and urge that either Mr. Singh be given full protection or alternatively the deportation procedure be speeded up as quickly as possible."

In fact, he was deported three days later.

I wrote to the hon. Member on 9 June, setting out the results of my Department's investigations into the complaints of assaults on and prior to 23 April. I should make it clear that neither the prison authorities nor the prisons department have received any complaint, from any source, of alleged assaults on Mr. Singh after that date. The hon. Member will know that the procurator fiscal is conducting his own investigation into the allegations that Mr. Singh and another Asian inmate, Mr. Kumar, were assaulted by other inmates at Barlinnie. I am not able to comment upon the alleged assaults in any detail today.

[Lord James Douglas-Hamilton]

However, I have passed papers on this case to the Crown Office in the hope that they will be of assistance to the procurator fiscal.

Although I cannot comment on the alleged assaults in detail, I would like to make clear to the House that, at the governor's request, a medical examination of Mr. Singh was carried out at Barlinnie prison on 28 April following complaints of assaults. The medical officer noted minor bruising to Mr. Singh's left upper arm. Mr. Singh also complained of discomfort in the left loin. In the medical officer's opinion, Mr. Singh's injuries were of a minor nature and no treatment was required. Mr. Singh made no further complaints to the medical officer at that time. In particular, he did not complain, when examined, of any pain or discomfort in his head. Consequently, neither the prison authorities nor the Home Office had any reason to think that Mr. Singh was not in a fit state to travel to India. No evidence is available to my Department to link Mr. Singh's reported death in India with his stay at Barlinnie prison. Were evidence to become available to the Department, it would be passed to the procurator fiscal.

Mr. Tom Clarke: Will the Minister confirm that between 28 April—the Minister referred to the medical examination—and 12 May, when Mr. Singh was released from Barlinnie, no medical assessment was made?

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: If I am unable to complete my speech, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman about any matters that I have omitted. I want to set out the Home Office procedures, but I may not have time.

As to accommodation for persons detained under the Immigration Act, the decision on whether a person should be held in custody is, as I have explained, one for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, who may exercise administrative powers in certain circumstances, and the courts. Where, in the considered opinion of the courts or my right hon. Friend, custody is necessary to prevent absconding, or for any other reason, the Scottish prison service takes all necessary measures to ensure that inmates are held under the proper conditions. In particular—contrary to what has been alleged in certain press reports—persons detained under the Immigration Act are not usually put in beside convicted inmates. The normal practice is for them to be held at local prisons beside other untried inmates. They receive all the same privileges as untried inmates, including the right to visits every day except Sunday.

It is open to any inmate to discuss with prison staff any difficulties which he or she may be experiencing. They will always take steps to ensure his safety. This may include transfer to another location, or special supervision, on occasion. This is what happened at Barlinnie after the alleged assaults were brought to the attention of the governor.

The hon. Member has suggested that there is a need for special accommodation for persons detained under the Immigration Act. It has been suggested that the arrangements in Scotland are inadequate compared with those in England and Wales. This is not so.

I am told that there is a detention unit at Harmondsworth, adjacent to Heathrow airport, which is managed by the immigration service and which may be used for any person liable to detention under the Immigration Act. It can be used for potential deportees but its capacity is limited to about 90 and it is primarily used for passengers who have been refused leave to enter or who have been detained pending further inquiries. It is a statutory requirement in both jurisdictions that any such persons detained for more than five days must be held in the detention unit at Harmondsworth, in prison or in a remand centre. I should clarify my statement of Tuesday last by making it clear that detention in legalised police cells is used for up to five days.

It is certainly true that the greater number of such detainees held at any one time in England and Wales means that they may be located together. There is, for example, a remand centre in the London area which can hold a number of potential deportees at any one time. In Scotland, we have no adult remand centres, but remand prisoners are kept separate from convicted prisoners. In this, there is no difference in the way potential deportees are treated on this side of the border. On individual cases, the Scottish Office and the Home Office do and will keep in close contact about the most appropriate location for the individual concerned. We are always ready to listen to representations from community groups or representatives of those waiting to be deported.

I should mention that only a very small number of persons are held in Scottish prisons at any one time under the Immigration Act. This week, for example, there were just 11 cases. Three of those persons also face drug charges and, if convicted, may well be given prison sentences. Another is due to be deported next week. I should imagine that such a very small number from a prison population of more than 5,000 would make it difficult to justify the cost of providing special accommodation, but that is an aspect that I would expect Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons to cover in the report that I have requested from him. We shall of course approach his recommendation with a completely open mind.

I hope that I have made it clear to the House that the Scottish prison service takes seriously its responsibilities towards members of the ethnic community who are detained in custody. Racial discrimination in our prisons will not be condoned and swift measures will be taken if it occurs. I have already said that the procurator fiscal is investigating the specific allegation of assault against Mr. Singh and Mr. Kumar, the inmates whose cases the hon. Member for Monklands, West raised with me. The governor of Barlinnie has had constructive discussions with——

Mr. Tom Clarke: Will the Minister give way?

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will allow me to answer the point about Mr. Kumar. That allegation is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. I shall make certain that he receives the representations and that he is kept informed. The hon. Gentleman also referred to lights in the prison cells. It appears from inquiries that I made this morning that Mr. Singh was not at any time kept in a cell with a light on during the night. Mr. Kumar was briefly kept under close observation on the medical officer's advice after he reacted badly to the news of the death of his friend in India. That involved observations at regular intervals during the night, so a light was kept on in the cell. That is standard procedure when an inmate is distressed, and it is followed on the medical officer's advice.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary told me that Mr. Singh, a native of India, was given leave on 18 May 1986 to enter the United Kingdom to attend a family wedding in Derby. A condition of his entry was that he would not take up any employment while he was here. He was subsequently given an extension to remain in the country until 28 January 1987.

I understand that Mr. Singh then disappeared from view. He did not leave the country on the agreed date. Nothing further was heard from him until 6 November 1987 when he was discovered by the immigration service working without authority at a restaurant in Coatbridge. He was arrested and charged with knowingly overstaying his leave in the United Kingdom. On 17 November 1987 he was sentenced to 28 days in prison, instead of a fine, for this offence.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary then decided that, following completion of that sentence, Mr. Singh should be deported from the United Kingdom. He was served with notice of the intention to deport him and given the appropriate forms to enable him to appeal, should he wish to do so. Taking into account Mr. Singh's conduct since his entry to this country, my right hon. Friend took the view that Mr. Singh would abscond on completion of his sentence. He therefore concluded that Mr. Singh should be kept in detention, pending his deportation.

I am told that Mr. Singh chose not to appeal formally against his deportation. However, on 18 November 1987 the hon. Member for Monklands, West wrote to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary enclosing a letter from Mr. Singh's solicitors——

The motion having been made after half-past Two o'clock and the debate having continued for half an hour, MADAM DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at twelve minutes past Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 27 June 1988

PRIME MINISTER

COMARE Report

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Department or Departments have responsibility for implementing each of the recommendations of the second report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE).

The Prime Minister: Several Government Departments are considering how best to implement these recommendations. Government Departments with an interest in specific recommendations include the following: Scottish Office, recommendations 1, 2 and 4*(d); health Departments, recommendation 3; Departments responsible for authorising discharges, recommendations 4(a)*, (b) and (c); Health and Safety Executive and Departments with appropriate environmental responsibilities, recommendation 5; health Departments and authorising Departments, recommendations 6 and 7; health Departments and Department of Education and Science jointly, recommendation 8. The Departments and agencies to which the recommendations relate will consult one another as appropriate. Co-ordination of action on a United Kingdom basis rests with the Department of Health and Social Security.

Sharpeville Six

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she intends to make an appeal herself to the State President of South Africa to reprieve the Sharpeville Six; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It would be premature to consider intervening again with the South African Government before the legal processes are exhausted.

However, as was made clear in the chairman's summary of discussions on South Africa at the Toronto summit on 20 June, we continue to urge that all legal options available in South Africa should be used to secure clemency for the Six.

EC Agricultural Production

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment she has made as to whether the proposals agreed at the Council meeting in February on penalising over-production and maintaining agricultural guidelines will be achieved in light of the provisional agreement of 11 member states at the recent Council meeting of Agriculture Ministers.

The Prime Minister: The Commission has provided assurances that the costs of the package now agreed can be contained within the guideline.

The stabilisers agreed at the European Council in Brussels are not affected by the price-fixing agreement. They will operate generally to reduce levels of support if predetermined production thresholds are exceeded. The extent of any reductions in support can only be determined once production levels for 1988-89 are known.

Member's Question

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 23 June, if she will give the precise references in the Official Report of previous replies in which the specific supplementary question from the hon. Member for Linlithgow was answered; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 17 July 1987 at column 660.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General how the Government's policies on race relations and equal opportunities for women in accordance with the appropriate code of practice include race and sex monitoring exercises in (a) his Department and (b) the Lord Chancellor's Department; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Treasury Solicitor's Department is responsible for the provision of all staff to the Law Officers' Department. Within the Treasury Solicitor's Department, the application of the policies is monitored by the personnel division. Within the Lord Chancellor's Department, the application of the policies is monitored by appropriate committees of the departmental Whitley council, and the equal opportunities officers chairs a joint working party. Within both Departments ethnic monitoring is being carried out by a phased programme of surveys of staff and, in addition surveys of applicants in recruitment schemes. Monitoring by sex can be done from staff records.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attornery-General whether he has taken steps to identify disparities in recruitment and promotion by reason of the ethnic origins and sex of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in the Lord Chancellor's Department; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Figures of individual local recruitment schemes and promotion boards are collected within the Lord Chancellor's Department by the equal opportunities officer; and within the Treasury Solicitor's Department by the personnel division. Benchmark data on the ethnic composition of recruitment areas are not yet available in either Department, nor are the full results of the surveys of the ethnic origins of serving staff. Disparities cannot be identified until this information is to hand. In the year ending 31 May 1988 nearly 66 per cent. of new entrants to the Lord Chancellor's Department were women. Within the Treasury Solicitor's Department, the figure was over 49 per cent.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Lord Chancellor has taken any steps other than issuing policy statements and leaflets to staff and giving guidance and training on equal opportunities, so as to promote greater equality within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Yes. In addition to the other examples of action taken specified in the reply to the hon. Member on 7 June, at column 449, a joint working party of the departmental Whitley council has been set up to monitor and review the application of the equal opportunity policies and the effect of the personnel procedures to ensure equality of opportunity.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has identified any inequalities in employment practices in his Department, arising from the sex or ethnic origins of staff; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General what was the result of the survey of ethnic origin of all staff carried out by the Lord Chancellor's Department; which areas that survey identified as areas where positive action was required; and what positive action has been taken other than that specified in his reply to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West on 25 May, Official Report, column 44.

The Attorney-General: The full result of the survey of ethnic origin of staff in post is not yet available. With the limited data available at present there is insufficient information to identify any areas where an imbalance of ethnic origin of staff calls for positive action.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General whether *(a)*he and (b) the Lord Chancellor have appointed an equal opportunities officer; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Yes. Both Departments have an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities, respectively.

The Attorney-General: There are at present no black or Asian members of staff in the Law Officers' Department.

The figures in relation to women members of staff are as follows:

Grade	Men (%)	Women (%)	Total
2	1 (100)	—	1
5	3 (75)	1 (25)	4
6	5 (100)	—	5
SPS	—	4 (100)	4
EO	—	1 (100)	1
PS	—	1 (100)	1
AO	—	2 (100)	2
AA	1 (100)	—	1

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General what steps (a) he and (b) the Lord Chancellor have taken to ensure that there is equality of opportunity for women and for people fom ethnic minorities in all grades of their Departments, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

The Attorney-General: The position is the same in both Departments. Recruitment procedures and promotion selection procedures are formal and standard and designed to avoid both direct and indirect discrimination. They are based on merit. Training is available to all staff in accordance with their identified needs. The training given to interviewing panels includes guidance on the dangers of assumptions and stereotyping.

Members (Writs)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Attorney-General what action he is taking about the writs recently served on right hon. and hon. Members of Parliament.

The Attorney-General: The proceedings to which my hon. Friend refers are brought by one Anthony Hill who styles himself "The Christ". An application has been made to the High Court by the Treasury Solicitor acting on behalf of my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor as one of the Defendants named on the writ, seeking to have the proceedings struck out as against all the defendants. I understand that the application will be heard in the Sheffield district registry on Thursday 30 June. In these circumstances, I do not consider any action on my part to be presently necessary.

ENERGY

Departmental Staff

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give for each standard planning region of England (a) the number of employees of his Depatment, (b) the amount spent on wages and salaries and (c) the proportion of total expenditure in each region by his Department which is represented by personnel costs.

Mr. Parkinson: The table gives the numbers of employees in each region in England and their salary cost based on average salary in the Department. A breakdown by region of total departmental expenditure is not available.

Region	Number of Staff in post	Salary and Wages £
North	2·0	32,730

British Coal (Investment)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the level of investment proposed for the north-east area of British Coal in the year 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Investment levels for individual areas are a management matter for British Coal. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Eritrea

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make more food aid available directly to the Eritrean Relief Association.

Mr. Chris Patten: We will continue to seek to provide humanitarian relief to the hungry in Ethiopia wherever they may be. In selecting the most appropriate channels for our assistance we take particular account of the need to ensure that it reaches those for whom it is intended as quickly as possible. We believe this can best be achieved by operating through international organisations, or through British based non-governmental organisations.

Nepal

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of aid to Nepal; and what is the planned total for the coming year.

Mr. Chris Patten: In the current year Her Majesty's Government expect to provide about £12 millon of aid to Nepal. Most of this is designed to help protect the environment and reduce poverty in one of the world's poorest countries and to support the Government of Nepal's efforts to reform its economy. When I visited Nepal in March this year I announced a new grant of £20 million.

British Citizens (Torture)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to cease to give aid to any country which tortures British citizens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Her Majesty's Government deplore the use of torture wherever and to whomsoever it occurs. Respect for human rights is one factor taken into account in deciding the level and nature of our bilateral aid to a particular country.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Information Services

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list information services, receiving Government funding, which supply biological data, including sequence and molecular structure data, plant and animal cell lines, regulatory affairs and patent registrations, to research institutions and companies with biotechnological interests; what is the current level of financial support for such services; and what future developments in biological information services are proposed.

Mr. Jackson: The following information services are funded by the research councils from their grant-in-aid from the Department's science budget.

1. Protein structure sequence database. Science and Engineering Council with University of Leeds and Birkbeck College. SERC support £823,000 over four years.
2. DNA sequence data bank at the European Molecular Biology Laboratory in conjunction with, and to complement, Genbank in the USA. The operating costs are not known, but the Medical Research Council's contribution to the EMBL total budget will be £2·6 million in the 1988-89 financial year. Major users of the data have direct access and the MRC funds one scientist to provide a centralised UK facility for accessing the databank at a cost of £10,000 per annum.
3. Systematics of microfungi. Science and Engineering Research Council with Commonwealth Agricultural Bureau, International Mycological Institute, Kew. SERC support £187,000 over four years.
4. Information on the following collections is available on request, but it is not possible to identify expenditure directly relating to provision of information:
   - (a) The National Environment Research Council's culture centre for algae and protozoa;
   - (b) The Agricultural and Food Research Council's national collections of food bacteria and yeast cultures;
   - (c) The Medical Research Council (MRC) radiobiology unit's mouse mutant stock facility;
   - (d) The national collection of animal cells, part funded by the MRC and SERC.

In addition, a number of research council institutes maintain small data bases primarily for their own use.

The research councils expect to create new data bases in the future and several proposals are under consideration.

Tertiary Colleges

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the tertiary colleges, by local education authorities, showing the political make-up of the appropriate local councils.

Mr. Dunn: Those colleges generally classified as tertiary colleges which are currently in existence in England and Wales are listed in the following table. The table also shows which political party, if any, held a majority in each authority following the last elections.

Working Groups

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will describe the procedures used in appointing members of the national curriculum working group on science, stating what proportion of members were interviewed by a Minister before appointment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will describe the procedures used in appointing members of the national curriculum working group on mathematics, stating what proportion of members were interviewed by a Minister before appointment; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will describe the procedures used in appointing members of the national curriculum working group on English, stating what proportion of members were interviewed by a Minister before appointment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: In appointing members to the various national curriculum subject working groups, the Government looked for a range of professional expertise and experience. We also ensured that each group had at least one member from the business world. My right hon. Friend and I met the chairman of the mathematics and science working groups before they were appointed; in the case of the English group my right hon. Friend and I held discussions with all those offered appointment.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State of Education and Science if he will give for each standard planning region of England (a) the number of employees of his Department, (b) the amount spent in wages and salaries and (c) the proportion of total expenditure in each region by his Department which is represented by personnel costs.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department currently has 1,379 employees in London and 627 in Darlington. In addition, there are 584 members of Her Majesty's Inspectorate and their support services who are based outside London around the country.

The wage and salary costs (including national insurance) in each case in 1987-88 were of the order of £19 million, £5 million and £12·5 million. Information about total expenditure is not readily available in the form requested.

Parent-Students

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest figures for the number of students on mandatory or discretionary grants with children.

Mr. Jackson: In 1986-87, 7,405 mandatory award holders received allowances in respect of dependants. Most of these dependants are likely to have been children. Information on the number of students with children who did not receive dependants allowances (usually because of the level of the family's income) is not available. Nor is information available about discretionary award holders with children.

New Teachers

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available regarding the number and proportion, for each subject, of newly trained secondary teachers (a) taking up a first appointment in the maintained sector; and (b) working in the maintained sector after the satisfactory completion of probation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The numbers and percentages of newly trained secondary teachers who in 1986 both completed training and took up a teaching appointment in a maintained secondary school are shown in the table. Others enter teaching at a later date, and a small number become teachers in the primary, special or further education sectors. For those who trained in university departments of education, data are readily available only for the three subjects shown.

The Department has no direct information on the numbers of teachers remaining in service after satisfactory completion of probation. However 10 per cent. of secondary teachers in service two terms after qualifying were no longer in service a year later.

Mathematics and Science

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn of 26 May, Official Report, column 236, if he will state the numbers separately of primary school teachers who (a) have a post A-level qualification in which science was a main subject and (b) have attended an in-service course in science of at least one term's full-time equivalent duration.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [holding answer 14 June]: I regret that my answers to the first two of the hon. Member's questions of 26 May, at columns 236, 237, contained small errors. Some teachers whose training took the form of short courses only were included.

The corrected figures and further detail requested are as follows:

Maintained nursery and primary school teachers qualified in science March 1987

Teachers with science as:	Full-time	Part-time
1. Main subject of post-A-level qualification
(i) with long INSET course[1]	[2]400	—
(ii) without long INSET course	12,700	2,300
2. Second subject of post-A-level qualification
(i) with long INSET course[1]	100	—
(ii) without long INSET course	8,200	1,200
3. Subject of long INSET course[1] only	700	—
Total of the above	22,000	3,400

[1] Long INSET courses are courses in science of at least one term's full-time duration or equivalent, attended in the years 1982 to 1986.

[2] Including some who obtained the qualification through the long INSET course.

Notes:

Thus in all an estimated 13,100 full-time and 2,300 part-time teachers had a post-A-level qualification in which science was a main subject, and 1,100 full-time teachers had attended an in-service course in science of at least one-term's full-time duration or equivalent in the years 1982 to 1986.

The revised estimate of the number of schools is 13,600 nursery and primary schools in England—68 per cent.—having at least one teacher with a post-A-level qualification that had science as the main or second subject or who had attended, in the previous five years, an in-service course in science of at least one term's full-time duration or equivalent.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for The Wrekin of 20 June, how many civil servants in his Department are employed at grade 3 and above; and what is the estimated cost of discovering whether they were educated at state or private schools.

Mr. Butcher: Sixty-seven. The cost was seen to be disproportionate.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the deficit in manufactured trade for the first quarter of 1988 at an annualised rate.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information for the first quarter of 1988 is available in the June 1988 issue of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" (table A8).

Beer Barrels and Casks

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to introduce legislation on tare weights for barrels and casks used in the sale of bulk beer.

Mr. Butcher: The Brewers' Society and the National Licensed Victuallers Association are themselves seeking to regulate the filling of beer barrels by the introduction of a code of practice. Accordingly, I have no plans to legislate on this matter at present.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to ensure that the Post Office maintains Welsh/bilingual versions of all Government forms and leaflets.

Mr. Butcher: No. The Post Office maintains Government forms and leaflets in the versions provided to it by the Departments concerned. It is a matter for those Departments to decide whether to issue the material in Welsh, taking into account the cost and demand and whether a Welsh version seems appropriate.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those forms and leaflets which are available in post offices in Wales (a) both in Welsh and English, (b) in a bilingual format and (c) in English only.

Mr. Butcher: My Department does not keep this information, but I have asked the chairman of the Post Office to write to the hon. Member with the relevant details.

Infants' Walking Aids

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the British Standards Institute to complete its updating of standards for baby-walkers or other infants' walking devices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I understand that the British Standards Institution hopes to publish the revised standard on babywalkers, BS 4648, by the end of the year.

Southeach Ltd.

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has received a report from the liquidator in connection with the bankruptcy of Southeach Ltd., formerly of Epworth Chapel, Tanfield Lea, Stanley.

Mr. Maude: It is not the Department's practice to disclose information about reports under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 in relation to individual companies.

Patent Office

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library a copy of the report commissioned from management consultants on the hiving off of the Patent Office, as referred to in the 1986 annual report of the Comptroller General of Patents, Designs and Trade Marks, House of Commons 323, 1986-87, paragraph 1.

Mr. Butcher: No. This report was submitted to my Department on a confidential basis as part of the run-up to the proposed hiving-off of the Patent Office. That proposal has since been abandoned for the reasons given by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 29 October 1987, Official Report, House of Lords, at columns 775-76.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in the Official Report a reconciliation of the expenditure and receipts table for calendar year 1986 of the Patent Office, House of Commons Paper 323, 1986-87, paragraph 14, with the financial year figures provided in the 1986-87 Appropriation Accounts, class V, vote 2, House of Commons 107-IV, 1987-88; and if he will indicate whether the Comptroller and Auditor General audits the calendar year figures as well as the appropriation accounts.

Mr. Butcher: The reconciliation cannot be provided other than at disproportionate cost.

As part of routine audit activity the Comptroller and Auditor General has from time to time examined the material used to produce the calendar year figures.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in the Official Report the facilities and offices operated by the Patent Office, indicating the standard economic region in which they are located and stating both approved establishments and actual employment in 1987.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is as follows:

Office	Economic region	Approved posts 1 April 1987	Staff in post 1 April 1987

Woodhill Developments Ltd.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the ownership of Woodhill Developments Ltd., formerly Bushart Ltd.

Mr. Maude: The Registrar of Companies tells me that an annual return giving details of this company's shareholdings is not yet due to be filed. The current holders of the two subscriber shares should however be shown in the company's register of members, available for inspection at the registered office, 1 Harley Street, London W1A 4DG.

Copies of documents delivered to the Registrar of Companies are available for public inspection at Companies House, Cardiff and London.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has about the application by Woodhill Developments Ltd. to become a member of the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation.

Mr. Maude: I understand that Woodhill Developments Ltd. held interim authorisation under the Financial Services Act as a consequence of its application to join the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation, but has now withdrawn its application. Interim authorisation has therefore lapsed. Applications for membership of a self-regulatory organisation recognised under the Financial Services Act are matters for the organisation concerned.

Brookwood Asset Management

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received about the financial and personal links between Brookwood Asset Management and Barlow Clowes.

Mr. Maude: None.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will obtain a report from the Gibraltar authorities on the activities of Brookwood Asset Management.

Mr. Maude: It is not my policy to comment on discussions which may or may not take place with the authorities in other jurisdictions concerning individual cases.

Newspaper Distribution

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will refer to the Director General of Fair Trading the current practice of certain newspaper publishers in deliberately narrowing the options of newsagents in terms of wholesale distribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I understand that the Director General of Fair Trading has the distribution of newspapers under review, including recent developments in distribution introduced by certain newspaper publishers.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from newsagents about the trend towards a virtual monopoly of distribution on the part of certain newspapers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My Department has received a number of representations from newsagents about recent developments in newspaper distribution. They have been referred to the Director General of Fair Trading, who is monitoring such developments.

Pirate Radio

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much was spent on monitoring, identifying and prosecuting pirate radio operators in each of the last five years.

Mr. Butcher: The Radio Investigation Service became part of the Department only in August 1984. As a consequence, it is possible to provide detailed information only for the last three financial years. The following table lists the RIS's overall costs, and the estimated amount spent on enforcement activity against unlicensed broadcasters where figures are available.

Year	Overall costs £ million	Costs of Broadcasting Enforcement £ million est
1983-84	9·3	n/a
1984-85	8·6	n/a
1985-86	6·8	0·6
1986-87	6·6	0·6
1987-88	6·5	0·8

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many pirate radio operators have been prosecuted in each of the last five years.

Mr. Butcher: The answer is as follows:

	Prosecutions	Convictions
1983	40	40
1984	48	47
1985	136	135
1986	79	74
1987	77	75

Investors (Protection)

Sir William Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, in the light of the recent ruling by the Advertisement Standards Authority that certain advertisements issued by the Campaign for Independent Financial Advice are misleading, he will now take steps, pursuant to the answer of Friday 6 May, Official Report, column 645, to ensure that the public are not misled as to the standards required of advisers regulated under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Maude: I understand that the advertisements referred to by my hon. Friend relate to the period prior to 29 April, the date on which the main provisions of the Financial Services Act came into force. With the commencement of the provisions of the Financial Services Act relating to advertisements and the Control of Misleading Advertisements Regulations I am confident that adequate machinery is being established in this area.

Single European Market

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the completion of the single European market by 1992 will affect the restrictions on the number of shares that can be owned by foreign shareholders in the privatised companies.

Mr. Maude: The completion of the single European market in 1992 will not in itself directly affect any restrictions on foreign shareholdings in British companies. Article 7 of the EEC treaty already generally prohibits discrimination on the grounds of nationality and article 221 requires that member states accord nationals of other member states the same treatment as their own nationals as regards participation in the capital of companies or firms, without prejudice to application of other provisions of the treaty. One of the latter, article 223, enables any member state to take such measures as it considers necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security which are connected with the production of or trade in arms, munitions or war material.

Govan Shipyard

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on arrangements for the sale of the Govan shipyard by British Shipbuilders.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have today approved, on behalf of the Government, the terms of the sale of the Govan shipyard by British Shipbuilders to a subsidiary of the Norwegian Group Kvaerner Industrier. Kvaerner has secured an order for two gas ships with the option for its clients to confirm orders for two further ships later this year. I have agreed to offer intervention fund support within the limits permitted by the European Community sixth directive for all these orders. Once secured these orders would provide work for Govan well into 1992.

Agreement with Kvaerner brings the promise of a secure future for the yard for which BS has not been able to win further orders beyond the two ships for China announced early last year. Kvaerner has confirmed its intention to transfer its ship technology to this country and to develop Govan as its centre for gas ship technology in support of activities worldwide. There is the possibility of further investment in future by this major engineering group.

Subject to the approval of the Euopean Commission and agreement on certain outstanding matters of detail, my right hon. and noble Friend therefore intends to give his consent for the disposal of British Shipbuilders Govan yard to Moss Rosenberg Verft, the shipbuilding subsidiary of the Norwegian group Kvaerner Industrier. I have received formal application for consent from the chairman of British Shipbuilders. The board of Kvaerner Industrier approved the broad terms earlier today.

Completion is planned for the beginning of August to allow Govan to start under new ownership after the annual summer holiday. Kvaerner will then pay £6 million for the yard, while BS will meet certain agreed costs. These include costs arising from the completion of the present work load, which BS will subcontract to Kvaerner, costs of redundancies, and a contribution to a programme of capital investment Kvaerner plans to undertake to restructure the yard. Certain payments will be made on completion, others over time as expenditure is incurred, giving a net cost of disposal to British Shipbuilders of up to £25 million valued at completion.

The liabilities of Govan Shipbuilders Ltd. will remain with the company and therefore with BS. Nothing is being written off. The assets and work force will shortly be transferred into a new subsidiary of British Shipbuilders, which will become Govan Kvaerner Ltd. on completion.

The trades unions representing the work force have already agreed to proposals from Kvaerner for a reduction of up to 500 in the number of employees and to certain changes in the yard.

I welcome the achievement of this agreement, as I am sure will the people of Scotland in particular. I look forward to welcoming Kvaerner to these shores once the final hurdles have been cleared.

Mr. Peter Luff

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will outline the job description of Mr. Peter Luff as special adviser to his Department;

(2) what expenses are payable to Mr. Peter Luff as special adviser to his Department; and how many hours he is expected to work.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Mr. Luff's appointment is full-time. He is entitled to claim travel and subsistence expenses incurred in connection with his departmental duties as special adviser. His duties are to act as special adviser to the Secretary of State, on such tasks as the Secretary of State allocates to him.

Radio Licence Fee (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will meet members of Clwyd public protection committee to discuss proposed increases in radio licence fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Arrangements will be made for a senior official from the Department of Trade and Industry's radiocommunications division to meet members of Clwyd public protection committee to discuss increases in radio licence fees.

Civil Research and Development

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the latest available figures for Government-backed civil research and development for each year since 1983.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 23 June 1988]: The available information is given in the table:

Government funding of research and development for civil objectives

	£ million
1983-84	2,011
1984-85	2,093
1985-86	2,185
1986-87	2,330

Cozy Glaze Ltd.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will request the Director General of Fair Trading to use his powers under the Fair Trading Act 1973 to obtain written assurances of future good conduct from Cozy Glaze Ltd. of Unit 3B, Sneckyeat industrial estate, Whitehaven;

(2) if he has received any complaints regarding shoddy and defective work, and failure to remedy such work, on the part of Cozy Glaze Ltd. of Unit 3B, Sneckyeat industrial estate, Whitehaven.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 24 June 1988]: I have received representations from the hon. Member about a company trading as Cozy Glaze, to which I replied on 12 May.

The exercise of the powers in part III of the Fair Trading Act 1973 in a particular case is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I shall ask him to write to the hon. Member.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Premises (Pin-ups)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether guidance is issued to police authorities to ensure that no offensive pin-ups are displayed in police premises.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. This is a matter for individual chief officers of police.

Prison Disturbances

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the dates of prison disturbances that have taken place in 1988; and if he will list the prisons involved;

(2) what has been the estimated cost of damage to prison property caused in prison disturbances that have taken place in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Incidents causing significant damage occurred at Bedford prison on 1 and 2 March, Rollestone prison on 24 May, Haverigg prison on 5-6 June, and Hindley youth custody centre and remand centre on 8 June. The estimated cost of damage was approximately £11,000 at Bedford, £750 at Rollestone, £750,000 at Haverigg and £750 at Hindley.

Football Matches (Offences)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of people charged with offences at football matches in each of the last three years and the number convicted of such offences.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested on charges and convictions is not available from the records held centrally.

Haverigg Prison

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a full public enquiry into the recent events at Her Majesty's prison, Haverigg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As I informed the House on 7 June, at column 709, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has asked the deputy director general of the Prison Service, Mr. G. H. Lakes, CB, MC, to conduct an urgent investigation into the recent incident at Haverigg prison. The inquiry will be comprehensive and wide-ranging and will consider all relevant factors which may have contributed to the incident. My right hon. Friend will report Mr. Lakes' conclusions to the House.

Police (Establishment)

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for the present year and each of the last nine fiscal years, the increase in establishment requested by the Metropolitan police force and each of the provincial police authorities, together with the increase approved for each of those authorities for each of those years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Forensic Services

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how much the budget for the forensic services in the Home Office has changed in the past 10 years, allowing for inflation; and if he will list expenditure on an annual basis.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Expenditure on the forensic science service rose from £6,306,000 in 1978-79 to £13,754,000 in 1987-88. Allowing for inflation, this represented an increase of 6·3 per cent. in real terms. The figures for annual expenditure (including capital expenditure) in this period are as follows:

Year	Amount £
1978-79	6,306,000
1979-80	7,999,000
1980-81	10,224,000
1981-82	11,673,000
1982-83	12,149,000
1983-84	10,311,000
1984-85	11,303,000
1985-86	10,828,000
1986-87	11,523,000
1987-88	[1]13,754,000

Licensing Laws

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a review of the licensing laws with regard to restricting retail sales to establishments easily accountable for sales to those under the legal minimum age for purchase and to consider whether the total number of retail outlets should be reduced.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not persuaded that a further review of the licensing laws is required for these particular purposes. It is the responsibility of individual licensees to ensure that the law on the sale of alcohol to those under 18 is observed. To meet the widespread concern about the extent of under-age drinking, the Licensing Act 1988 strengthens the law on sales to young people, and will require sales in off-licensed premises by staff under the age of 18 to be effectively supervised. Licensing justices can already take into account local circumstances in reaching decisions on the grant or renewal of licences in their area.

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the effect of increasing the minimum age for purchasing alcohol to 21 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have at present no plans to do so.

Identity Cards

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the scheme in Taunton organised by the local licensed victuallers' association for the carrying of identity cards by customers of public houses; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the police are to monitor and evaluate a voluntary identity card scheme in Chard before proceeding with a proposal by the local licensed victuallers' association for a similar scheme in Taunton. I am pleased to see licensees and the police working together on schemes of this kind and welcome the introduction of voluntary schemes which take full account of local circumstances.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to introduce a system of identity cards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 24 June.

Prison Officers (Housing)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the average movement in house prices within (i) a 1-mile and (ii) a 5-mile radius of former military camps converted into category C. prisons in the last (a) 12, (b) 24 and (c) 36 months;

(2) how many newly appointed prison warders or warders taking up new duties in the last 12 months have chosen to buy houses within 500 yards of the prison wire wall; and if he will list such purchases for each prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of married quarters in former military camps now used as category C prisons which have (a) remained empty, (b) been demolished and (c) sold to the private sector, with the date on which his Department first acquired the houses.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is given in the table.

Former military camps now used as category C prisons: Married quarters

Establishment	Number of married quarters on acquisition	Date of acquisition	Number remained empty	Number demolished	Number sold to private sector
Acklington	253	1973	41	147	—
Aldington	—	—	—	—	—
Ashwell	—	—	—	—	—
Channings Wood	—	—	—	—	—
Erlestoke	6	1961	—	—	2
Haverigg	—	—	—	—	—
Highpoint	88	1973	—	—	11
Lindholme	166	1986	114	8	—
Northeye	54	1968	—	—	31
Norwich (Brittania Annexe)	8	1970	—	8	—
Ranby	16	1972	—	—	—
Wayland	—	—	—	—	—

Some of these quarters, particularly at Lindholme, were in a very poor state of repair.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, for each former military camp used as a category C prison, he will list the average price of houses sold on the open market, together with the average price for a similar-sized house in that locality.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Married quarters, acquired with former military camps now used as category C prisons, have been sold on the open market at Erlestoke, Highpoint and Northeye. Average prices shown below relate to the year in which properties were last sold: Erlestoke—£33,500 (1983); Highpoint—£35,500 (1987) and Northeye —£45,000 (1987). The average price for similar-sized houses in these localities would have been about the same.

Prisons (Duty Officers)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each prison the number of police officers on duty (a) during daylight hours and (b) during the night, within a 5-mile radius.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Category C Prisons

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans his Department has formulated to protect members of the public living near category C prisons in the event of (a) disturbances and (b) escapes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All prison establishments are required to maintain contingency plans for dealing with inmate disturbances and escapes, in accordance with instructions issued by the Prison Department. These plans include arrangements for calling for assistance from the police whenever it is needed, and governors are required to maintain close liaison with their local chief officers of police to ensure that these arrangements will work effectively in the event of any emergency. Plans to deal with disturbances are directed towards containing and suppressing disorder with minimum force and restoring order within establishments as quickly as possible. In the event of an escape the police are called immediately and assume responsibility for the conduct of any follow-up action outside the establishment.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of category C prisons that are within 5 miles of a regular bus and rail service; and how many prisoners are more than 5 miles from a regular bus and rail service.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Of the 25 currently operational category C training prisons in England and Wales, 16 are located within 5 miles of both a regular bus service and a rail station served by a regular train service and five are within 5 miles of a regular bus but not a regular train service. Four prisons, accommodating 1,345 prisoners on 17 June, are more than 5 miles distant from both a regular bus and a regular rail service.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category B prisoners have been down graded to category C in the last (a) 12, (b) 24, (c) 36, (d) 48 and (e) 60 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of escapes from category C prisons by prisoners over the last (a) 12, (b) 24, (c) 36, (d) 48 and (e) 60 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 20 June, at column 384.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of crimes committed by those escaping from category C prisons over the last (a) 12, (b) 24, (c) 36, (d) 48 and (e) 60 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Escaping from prison is itself an offence at common law. Information relating to crimes committed by prisoners during their escape or while at large is not collected centrally.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the instance of drug and alcohol (a) abuses and (b) discoveries in category C prisons over the last (i) 12, (ii) 24, (iii) 36, (iv) 48 and (v) 60 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: New instructions for the reporting by prison establishments of finds of illicit drugs and related implements took effect on 1 July 1984. Since then, the following numbers of such reports have been received from category C prisons:

	Number
1984[1]	190
1985	255
1986	264
1987	312
1988[2]	223

[1] From 1 July.

[2] Up to 31 May.

Other information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of internal disturbances in category C prisons over the last (a) 12, (b) 24, (c) 36, (d) 48 and (e) 60 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On the night of 30 April-1 May 1986, at the time of the national industrial action called by the Prison Officers' Association, incidents occurred at a number of prison establishments. The most serious including those at two category C prisons—Northeye and Wymott. Since then, there have been disturbances at Wymott on 4 October 1986, at Rollestone on 24 May 1988 and at Haverigg on 5-6 June 1988.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each category C prison the number of prisoners serving sentences for each category of crime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The readily available information is given in the table.

(³) New prison, with population increasing up to capacity.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of uniformed and non-uniformed staff in each category C prison; and how this relates to the recommended establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of uniformed and non-uniformed staff in post and the recommended complement at the beginning of June at each category C establishment was as follows:

Establishment[1]	Uniformed staff	Non-uniformed staff
Acklington	176	94½

[1] Excluding Medomsley which is closed and Norwich which has a predominantly local and remand function.
[2] Staffed by the armed services.
[3] Includes the remand function.

It is not possible to relate staff in post to the recommended establishment because some complements are under review either in connection with Fresh Start implementation or, following implementation, as a consequence, this year, of the efficiency targets, framework agreement and optancy rates. In general establishments' staffing levels meet requirements, although there are some shortages particularly of specialists.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category B prisoners there are in category C prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Prisons (Infectious Diseases)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each prison the incidence of infectious disease, by disease, for the last (a) 12, (b) 24, (c) 36, (d) 48 and (e) 60 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information available relates to four infective conditions; tuberculosis, hepatitis A, hepatitis B (including carriers) and HIV. The information may not be complete as it deals only with the cases which were identified and reported, and it may include some double counting owing to movements of prisoners during the year. The available information for 1983 relates to tuberculosis only.

Rating Reform

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether category C prisoners will be required to pay the community charge.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, but I understand that the Local Government Finance Bill exempts all sentenced prisoners, except for rates, community charge and fine defaulters, from paying the community charge.

Prison Building

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the proportion of (a) initial prison construction work and (b) repair and renovation of prison buildings undertaken by small local building contractors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: One contract for the construction of a new prison, typically costing £40 million to £50 million would normally be awarded. By virtue of the size and complexity of the scheme the firm to which it was let would be a large national concern. All such firms would however sub-let elements of the work, and local firms would be able to compete for this where they had the relevant skills and capacity.

Small local building contractors are similarly able to compete for elements of large schemes of repair and renovation at existing establishments. They undertake the great majority of minor repairs and minor new works at these prisons, also on a competitive basis.

Prisons (Local Shopping)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the percentage proportion of prison purchasing done in small local retail shops for each prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Certain items may be purchased from local retail shops, but the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Such shops are, however, used extensively by prison staff and their families living in the area.

Stonehenge

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Wiltshire on the policing of events at and around Stonehenge over the period of the summer solstice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Wiltshire that the police have made effective use of their powers under the Public Order Act 1986. There were two serious outbreaks of disorder, both at Stonehenge. On 17 June a group of people rammed the perimeter fence and their attempted occupation of the monument led to 32 arrests, mainly for public order offences. On the night of 20/21 June large groups of people again invaded the stones. There were attacks on the police which led to officers being deployed with protective equipment. Sixty-seven arrests were made and seven officers required hospital treatment. Those celebrating the solstice have now dispersed from the area and did so without further incident.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give for each standard planning region of England (a) the number of employees of his Department, (b) the amount spent in wages and salaries and (c) the proportion of total expenditure in each region by his Department which is represented by personnel costs.

Mr. Hurd: The total number of permanent staff employed by the Home Office at 1 April 1988 was 39,228. Total Home Office expenditure on salaries and wages for 1987-88 amounted to £593 million, which represented about 53 per cent. of total direct Home Office expenditure for the year. A breakdown of these figures by standard planning region is not available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department's staff are permitted to give progress reports and case workers' direct telephone numbers to (a) the general public and (b) representatives of commercial organisations; if he will renew the relevant guidance to staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Case workers ae generally encouraged to give progress reports, and direct telephone numbers, to members of the public who have submitted applications and to their representatives. This is, of course, subject to case workers satisfying themselves as to the identity and relevance of the caller to the case in question. I see no need for general guidance on this at present.

Sports Clubs (Sex Discrimination)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for Barking (Mrs. Richardson) of 16 June, Official Report, column 198, he expects to be in a position to report the Government's response to the Equal Opportunities Commission's paper on sex discrimination in private sports clubs.

Mr. John Patten: The Equal Opportunities Commission's proposal to amend the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 to bring private clubs with both male and female members within the scope of the Act is one of a number of proposals which were published by the commission on 8 March. The proposals require detailed consideration. It is too early to make any commitment on the timing of responses.

Community Radio

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is his intention to proceed with an experimental pilot scheme in community radio.

Mr. Renton: It did not prove possible to proceed in 1986 with the proposed community radio experiment and we have no plans to revive it, but we have indicated to the IBA and other interested organisations that we will look without commitment at any proposals in advance of the proposed broadcasting legislation for further developing the indepenent radio broadcasting sector within the current framework of the Broadcasting Act 1981.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the European Parliament's resolution to reserve part of the radio spectrum for non-commercial community radio stations.

Mr. Renton: The Government's proposals for the assignment of frequencies to, and licensing of, independent radio stations at the local level (including the community level), under the new regime planned for radio broadcasting, were set out in paragraph 7.12-23 of the Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities".

Passports

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an inquiry into the implications for the administration of the Passport Office of statements by Mr. Steven Cockings, manager of Visa Shop Ltd., that can obtain a new passport in 12 days, compared with the normal time for processing applications made by post of up to 12 weeks; and what action he is taking to ensure that all members of the public receive equal service from the Passport Office.

Mr. Renton: Priority is given to all passport applications requiring urgent attention, whether these are lodged personally by individual members of the public, or by one of the over 230 agencies accredited by the London passport office to lodge applications in bulk. The agency section benefits all members of the public who call at the busy London passport office by reducing the number of applications which have to be examined on the spot. This reduces the average time callers have to wait to lodge their applications.

Lunar House

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his assessment of how delays experienced by the public awaiting attention at Lunar house, Croydon, are likely to be affected by the actions of a company known as Bureaucracy Control Ltd. in having representatives at Lunar house with tickets for times throughout the day; what action he proposes to take to ensure that the public are not further inconvenienced at Lunar house; whether he is aware of any other organisations engaged in similar activities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will establish an inquiry into statements made in a letter, dated 21 May, from Mr James Wallace-Dunlop, chairman of Bureaucracy Control Ltd., of Chislehurst, Kent, claiming that his company can obtain all-day queueing tickets at Lunar house, submit and have dealt with same-day applications, call files into the central computer terminal and obtain progress reports and caseworkers' direct telephone numbers.

Mr. Renton: I am not aware of the details of the claims to which the hon. Member refers, but I have seen the reports in this morning's press. If the hon. Member has any evidence of abuse of the public inquiry office facilities at Lunar house which he cares to submit to me, I shall arrange for inquiries to be made.

Central Computer Terminal

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what access is provided for the general public and commercial organisations to the central computer terminal at the Home Office.

Mr. Renton: There are 117 computer systems processing personal data in the Department. All are registered in accordance with the Data Protection Act 1984, and disclosure of information from them is permitted only as described in the registration appropriate to each system.

Newton Lodge Secure Unit

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the areas where inmates at the Newton Lodge secure unit in Wakefield are allowed to visit when on unaccompanied parole, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Patients detained at the Newton Lodge secure unit at Fieldhead hospital subject to a restriction order under section 41 of the Mental Health Act 1983 may be granted escorted or unescorted leave outside the hospital grounds only with my right hon. Friend's consent. This will be given only after consideration of all the circumstances of the case, including proposals about the areas which the patient will visit while on leave. These proposals will vary according to each individual case.

The movement of patients within the hospital grounds is a matter for the responsible medical officer.

Drug Charges (Mr. Alan Waite and Others)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for Birkenhead on 17 June, Official Report, column 327, he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the exact nature of the doubts about the reliability of police evidence which led to the dropping of drugs charges in each of the cases of Mr. Alan Waite, Mr. Geoffrey Pope, Mr. Marcel Mullins, Mr. Mark Whittaker, Ms. Theresa James and Mr. Paul Brown.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The decision whether or not to prosecute in each case was an operational matter for the police.

Knives (Amnesty)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends taking to institute a knives amnesty in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Building on the success of the campaigns which a number of police forces have held already we have asked forces throughout England and Wales to run campaigns during the period 27 June to 11 July inclusive to encourage people to dispose of knives and other offensive weapons.

The casual carrying of knives in public is totally unacceptable and the campaign will be an opportunity for people to dispose of their knives and other weapons safely. I would urge them to do so. When the Criminal Justice Bill becomes law a person who carries a knife, other than a small folding pocket-knife, in a public place and cannot show good reason for carrying it will commit a criminal office.

As I indicated in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Sir E. Griffiths) on 17 May at column 376, a separate amnesty for firearms will be held for one month from 1 September this year.

Crime (Forfeiture of Property)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to encourage the use of the powers which exist to deprive offenders of the use of vehicles used in the commission of crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Under section 43 of the Powers of the Criminal Courts Act 1973 a court can order the forfeiture of any property used to commit an offence punishable with a sentence of two or more years' imprisonment. The Criminal Justice Bill extends this power to offences with lower maximum penalties. Section 44 of the Act empowers the Crown court to disqualify from driving a person convicted of an offence carrying a maximum sentence of two or more years' imprisonment, if the court is satisfied that a motor vehicle was used in the commission of the offence.

Radio Surveillance Equipment

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what responsibilities his Department has for monitoring the use of radio surveillance equipment following the issue of a licence; and what requirements are imposed upon licensees concerning the use of such equipment.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

In respect of monitoring I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 21 June 1988 to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) at column 492. The requirements placed upon licensees are broadly to avoid causing interference to other radio users and to maintain equipment in accordance with the relevant specification. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department will shortly be writing to my hon. Friend about his wider concerns on this subject.

Custody

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many males and females aged 17 years or under were sentenced to a period of custody during (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987;

(2) how many males and females aged 17 years and under who were from an ethnic minority were sentenced to a period of custody during (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 17 June 1988]: The readily available information is given in the following table:

Persons aged 17 and under received under an immediate custodial sentence into Prison Department establishments: by ethnic origin and sex, 1985-87

Ethnic origin	Males 1985	Males 1986	Males [1]1987	Females 1985	Females 1986	Females [1]1987

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Eritrea

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to encourage the Ethiopian Government to cease their military campaigns in Eritrea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives are being taken by Her Majesty's Government to bring about peace and a reduction in suffering and casualties in Eritrea.

Mrs. Chalker: We remain deeply concerned about the suffering caused by the civil wars in northern Ethiopia. With our partners in the European Community we urge a political solution of the conflict and we are discussing with them whether more could be done to encourage this process. In our view this must ensure observance of human rights and take account of the distinctive historic and cultural identity of Eritrea. We recognise the territorial integrity of Ethiopia within its existing frontiers.

Kurdish Political Prisoners

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, following the improvement in relations with the Iraqi Government, he has raised with them the issue of human rights violations, especially the executions of Kurdish political prisoners, both adult and minors.

Mr. Mellor: As I made clear in my answer on 11 March, we regret the denial of basic human rights wherever they may occur. We are aware of reports of human rights violations in Iraq and continue to take every opportunity to voice our concern about such abuses. I raised this issue at the highest levels during my visit there in February. When my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State met the Iraqi Foreign Minister in March, he reiterated in strong terms our concern about human rights violations, and the plight of Iraqi Kurds in particular. We have also protested vigorously about the use of chemical weapons on the civilian town of Halabja in Iraqi Kurdistan.

Mr. Tom Carlin

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has made to the Government of Nepal concerning the ill-treatment and torture of Mr. Tom Carlin while in custody in Kathmandu between January and May 1987;

(2) what representations he has made to the Government of Nepal concerning the re-arrest and further detention of Mr. Tom Carlin following his acquittal of all charges in May 1987;

(3) what representations he has made to the Government of Nepal regarding compensation for the costs resulting from Mr. Tom Carlin's ill-treatment, torture and detention in Kathmandu between January and May 1987.

Mr. Eggar: On 25 May 1987, the day of Mr. Carlin's acquittal and re-arrest, Her Majesty's embassy at Kathmandu made immediate representations to the district superintendent of police. On 29 May 1987, the embassy made further representations to secure Mr. Carlin's release to the chief of protocol of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. These were repeated on 1 June 1987. On 5 June 1987, Her Majesty's ambassador at Kathmandu drew to the attention of His Majesty the King of Nepal the circumstances of Mr. Carlin's detention. Her Majesty's Government have made no representations for compensation in Mr. Carlin's case. It is open to Mr. Carlin to pursue any claim direct with the Nepalese authorities.

Sharpeville Six

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Her Majesty's Government will not be taking the same diplomatic action as the other countries of the European Community if the Sharpeville Six are executed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Contrary to recent speculation in the press, our partners in the Twelve have not agreed on how to respond should the Sharpeville Six be executed. As was made clear in the chairman's summary of discussions on South Africa at the Toronto summit on 20 June, we continue to urge that all legal options available in South Africa should be used to secure clemency for the Six.

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information Her Majesty's Government have now received about the timing of the preliminary hearings in relation to the inquest into the deaths of three Irish Republican Army personnel shot by British service men in Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Gibraltar coroner announced on 21 June that the preliminary hearing concerning the inquest will open on 4 July. We expect it to set the date of the main inquest and hope this will be as soon as possible.

Nuclear Weapons (Tests)

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the further limitation of nuclear weapons tests.

Mr. Mellor: For the foreseeable future the United Kingdom's security will depend on deterrence based, in part, on the possession of nuclear weapons. That will mean a continuing requirement to conduct underground nuclear tests to ensure that our nuclear weapons remain effective and up to date.

We hope that the peaceful nuclear explosions treaty and the threshold test ban treaty will be ratified soon. Further steps to limit tests will then have to be considered. But serious technical problems of verification remain. As thresholds are reduced, verification becomes more important but also more difficult.

A comprehensive test ban remains a long-term goal. Progress will be made only be a step-by-step approach. This must take account of technical advances on verification as well as progress elsewhere in arms control and the attitude of other states.

UNITA

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards UNITA.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 22 April at column 586.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the full numerical basis of the national restart interview results referred to in a Manpower Services Commission evaluation report on follow-up interviewees and the restart programme, paragraph 4.34, page 16, Manpower Services Commission, CSBI, March, which outlines the people starting menu items as a proportion of submissions to that item; how many interviews referred to each item; and how many started each of those menu items.

Mr. Lee: Information on the numbers interviewed on the restart programme between July 1986 and April 1988 and the numbers referred to each menu item is shown in the table. We do not know how many people ultimately end up in a job or other opportunity after a restart interview since we do not follow up every referral. The figures on which the table in the report are based are not comprehensive but taken together with the other evidence in connection with the pilot exercise they confirm the effectiveness of the follow-up interviews. Between July 1986 and 29 April 1988, 3,725,563 restart interviews took place. These resulted in:

	Referrals
Jobs	326,700
Community Programme	299,800
Voluntary Projects Programme/Voluntary Work	80,600
Jobclub	323,200
New Job Training Scheme	253,900
Other Training	306,900
Employment Rehabilitation Centre	9,200
Restart Course	283,300
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	145,000
Disablement Resettlement Officer	126,500
Claimant Adviser	157,300
Other Referrals (inc. PER)	678,500

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the results of the Manpower Services Commission's evaluation of the impact that follow-up restart interviews have had on the unemployment count.

Mr. Lee: The evaluation of the impact of follow-up restart interviews showed that these further interviews are particularly effective. Increasing the take-up of opportunities available under the restart programme will inevitably have an effect on the number of people claiming unemployment benefit.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether it is his intention to introduce national follow-up restart interviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in the White Paper "Training for Employment" the restart programme will be developed further during 1988-89. An important aspect of this development is the phased introduction of follow-up interviews throughout the country.

Unemployment Mismatch

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evidence he has of significant increases in unemployment mismatch; and what steps he is taking to overcome this problem.

Mr. Lee: The economy is growing fast, generating half a million new jobs in 1987 alone, and as a result unemployment, particularly long-term unemployment, is falling rapidly. Although unemployment remains high, there are an estimated 700,000 unfilled vacancies in the economy.

In our White Paper "Training for Employment" we drew attention to the need to equip the unemployed with the skills today's jobs demand. That is why we are investing £1·5 billion in the employment training programme starting in September, to provide relevant training for up to 600,000 unemployed adults.

Redundant Workers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage of jobs found by redundant workers that are with their previous employer.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available.

Tourism

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the launch of the tourism business advisory service.

Mr. Lee: I welcome the initiatives of those regional tourist boards which, together with their local small firms service, have established advisory services for tourism businesses in their regions. I was delighted to have the opportunity personally to launch the first such initiative for East Anglia in June 1987, and the west country initiative in May this year.

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a breakdown of the main items of overseas visitors' spending.

Mr. Lee: The table gives the most up-to-date estimates.

Expenditure in the United Kingdom by overseas visitors: 1988

Category of spending	Per cent.
Accommodation	32
Eating out	23
Travel within the United Kingdom	9
Shopping	23
of which:—
Clothes	14
Other	13
Entertainment	5
Services	3
Other	2
Total Expenditure	£5·5 billion

Mr. Barry Field: to ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to encourage the greater use of unmanned tourist information centres for use by tourists after normal working hours.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board estimates that around 10 per cent. of manned tourist information centres have some form of electronic information system. The ETB is actively encouraging the widespread use of interactive video systems to provide information to visitors outside normal working hours, and is establishing a database of recommended systems.

Engineering

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been lost in the engineering industry since June 1979; and how many of these jobs have been in the northern region of England.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job losses and Job gains. Between June 1979 and june 1987 there was a net decrease of 541,000 in the number of employees in employment in the mechanical, electrical and electronic, office machinery and data processing equipment, and instrument engineering industries in Great Britain. In the northern region, there was a corresponding net decrease of 41,000. The figures are unadjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been lost in the shipbuilding industry since June 1979; and how many of these jobs have been in the northern region of England.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job losses and job gains. Between June 1979 and June 1987, there was a net decrease of 63,000 in the number of employees in employment in the shipbuilding and repairing industry (SIC 80: Activity Heading 3610) in Great Britain.

My Department's employment statistics for the northern region for this period relate to the broader industry class "manufacture of other transport equipment" (SIC 80: class 36 which includes shipbuilding and repairing, railway and tramway vehicles, cycles and motorcycles, aerospace equipment manufacturing and repairing, and other vehicles). In September 1984 the number of employees in shipbuilding and repairing in the northern region was 95 per cent. of the total employees in the broader industry class. Between June 1979 and June 1987 the number of employees in employment in the broader industry class decreased by 24,000 in the northern region and by 126,000 in Great Britain.

The figures are unadjusted for the effects of seasonal variations and are subject to considerable estimation error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industry.

YTS

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he proposes to take to increase the number of employed young people on the YTS.

Mr. Cope: The Training Commission, which administers YTS, is encouraging employers to recruit 16 and 17-year-olds through YTS whether or not they gave them immediate "employed" status, to continue YTS training for those who do become employees, and to enrol in YTS any 16 and 17-year-old employees who are not already in the programme.

YTS Managing Agents

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will update the answer to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East of 9 May, Official Report, column 47, regarding the final outcomes for those YTS managing agents initially awarded provisional ATO status.

Mr. Cope: By 31 May 1988 of the 1,715 managing agents who had been awarded provisional ATO status after the first monitoring period, 1,516 had been awarded full status, 95 had withdrawn and 16 had been rejected. Decisions on the remaining 88 are expected shortly.

Willenhall Jobcentre

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the reasons why the west midlands region of his Department wishes to offer a co-housing arrangement inside Willenhall jobcentre to the local chamber of commerce, (b) the benefits he expects to accrue from such an arrangement to his Department and job seekers and (c) the terms, financial and otherwise, on which the offer has been negotiated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: This is an experimental project in partnership with an organisation which has a common interest in promoting enterprise and the various Government initiatives offered by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry. If successful, this will clearly benefit the public generally and usefully extend the range of services available from the jobcentre. Negotiations with the chamber are continuing and have not yet been finalised.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each standard planning region of England (a) the number of employees of his Department, (b) the amount spent in wages and salaries and (c) the proportion of total expenditure in each region by his Department which is represented by personnel costs.

Mr. Lee: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Wages Council Orders

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library the instructions he has issued to jobcentres on action to be taken when a vacancy covered by a wages council order is notified.

Mr. Lee: These instructions form part of a two-volume working guide for officials on the operational aspects of the jobcentre service. I do not consider it would be appropriate or practical to place such a document in the Library. The existing instructions on handling vacancies covered by a wages council order are currently being amplified. I will arrange for the hon. Gentleman to be sent a personal copy of both the current and the revised guidance as soon as it is ready.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the risk of unemployment by social or occupational class.

Mr. Lee: Preliminary estimates from the 1987 labour force survey of (i) the previous occupation of those unemployed persons who left their last job less than three years earlier and (ii) the proportion of the economically active in each occupation group these represent, are shown in the table:

Unemployed Persons[1] in Great Britain in Spring 1987 by Occupation

[1] Those without a job who were looking for work in the survey reference week.

[2] Includes 1,048,000 who had never had a job or left their last job three or more years ago (not asked about previous occupation).

[3] Includes 4,000 who had had a job within last 3 years but did not state that occupation.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment in the year up to the publication of the labour force survey of 1987.

Mr. Lee: The information was included in an article on page 144 of the March 1988 edition of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, in view of the fact that unemployment figures are based on the number receiving unemployment benefit, he will retitle the unemployment figures in the Employment Gazette and other official publications the "unemployment benefit" figures.

Mr. Lee: The monthly unemployment figures are based on the records of those claiming benefit at unemployment benefit offices. This was explained when the series was introduced in November 1982. A description of the coverage of the figures is also given in the regular monthly press release issued by my Department and in the definitions given in the Employment Gazette.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors were employed by the Health and Safety Executive in each region, for each year from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive operates through an area office network. The number of factory inspectors employed in each area for each year from 1980 to 1987 is as follows:

The number of factory inspectors in post at area offices on 1 April of each year

Area location	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987

[1] The London North West office is no longer regarded as a separate area office. Factory inspectors located there are outstationed from either the London North or London South area offices.

Mines and Quarries

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what factor he attributes the increase in prohibition notices issued by the mines and quarries inspectorate from an average of four for the previous eight years to 30 so far in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 June 1988]: In view of the high level of accidents in quarries, the chief inspector of mines and quarries decided that a vigorous application of formal enforcement procedures is necessary as part of a wider strategy designed to raise standards of safety.

WALES

Welsh Language

4. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what percentage direct Government support for the Welsh language has increased since 1979-80.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Since 1979-80 direct Government support for the Welsh language has increased by 1,285 per cent., an increase in real terms of 656 per cent.

23. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is yet in a position to announce whether he plans to introduce a new Welsh language Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 25 April.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his estimates of the percentage of people in Wales who (a) use the Welsh Gaelic as their first language and (b) have a fluent knowledge of Welsh Gaelic.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Nineteen per cent. of residents (aged three or over) of Wales were recorded as Welsh speakers at the time of the 1981 Census. Information is not collected on the fluency of Welsh speakers nor on which language is used as a first language.

Rural Communities (Development)

16. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has held with Welsh local authorities concerning amendments to planning and housing legislation in order to safeguard rural communities from overdevelopment.

Mr. Grist: None.

Regional Development Grant

17. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what have been the numbers of regional development grant applications in Wales made since January 1987; and what is the amount of investment and number of jobs connected with these applications.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since January 1987, 3,940 regional development grant applications have been received. If the full potential of these applications is realised they will produce additional investment of almost £1,700 million and create 64,000 new jobs. Over the last 12 months of this period almost £2,000 million of potential investment has been associated with RDG and RSA applications, and I am delighted that so many firms have demonstrated their confidence in Wales and its economic revival.

Health Authorities (Financial Control)

18. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what lack of financial control he has identified in (a) the Clwyd health authority and (b) any other Welsh health authority.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend and I are not aware of any serious weakness in financial control in Clwyd health authority. The hon. Gentleman has written to me on this matter and I shall reply to him shortly.

My right hon. Friend and I have discussed financial control with the chairmen of health authorities in order to obtain the most efficient methods of financial control.

House Building

19. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make a statement on his plans for house building in Wales up to the end of the century.

Mr. Grist: We plan to create conditions which will maintain housebuilding at the high level achieved in 1987 when over 10,500 new homes were started. We expect that "Housing for Wales" will give a fresh impetus to housing in Wales.

Labour Statistics

21. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unemployment figures for (a) the Ogmore constituency and (b) Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 12 May 1988 the numbers of unemployed claimants in the Ogmore constituency and Wales were 3,502 and 132,962 respectively.

Single European Market

22. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to assess the overall effects on Wales of the 1992 development towards a unified market within the European Community.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 26 May and to my reply to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) earlier today.

Homelessness

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the number of homeless households accepted by local authorities in Wales whose homelessness resulted from mortgage arrears, and (b) the percentage of homeless households which these represented, in each of the years from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Number of homeless households in Wales whose homelessness resulted from mortgage arrears

	Action by mortgagee	Percentage of accepted cases
1979	339	7·2
1980	398	7·3
1981	419	7·7
1982[1]	351	7·0
1983	448	8·9
1984	547	10·9
1985	732	13·6
1986	896	15·0
1987	795	15·0

[1] Figures for Neath were not categorized by household type and are excluded.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities where more than 20, 50, and 100 homeless households, respectively, were living in bed and breakfast hotels in Wales at the end of June 1979, December 1981, December 1983, December 1985 and at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Grist: No Welsh local authority has had more than 50 households accepted as homeless and living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation at the dates specified. Cardiff is the only local authority with more than 20 homeless cases living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. This figure was exceeded on two of the stated dates: 31 December 1981 and 31 March 1988.

Rents

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the average level of (a) local authority rents, (b) fair rents registered for unfurnished housing association lettings, (c) fair rents registered for other unfurnished lettings and (d) fair rents registered for all unfurnished lettings in Wales in each of the years from 1979 to 1987, indicating the percentage increase in each on an annual cumulative basis; and how these increases compare with the movement of the retail prices index over that same period.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is given in the following table:

[1] Local authority average rent is at April.

[2] Housing associations and private rented sector.

The actual rent paid can vary significantly from these figures depending upon the amount of housing benefit being paid.

Assured Tenancies

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many assured tenancies of (a) newly built and (b) newly improved properties have been created in each of the years since 1980 in Wales.

Mr. Grist: There were no assured tenancies created in the years between 1980 and 1987. Since April 1988 a number of assured tenancies have been created by housing associations in Wales. The figures will be available following the 1988 monitoring exercise towards the end of this year.

Rating Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if mature students in Wales paying the 20 per cent. community charge with a non-student spouse will be jointly and severally liable for their spouses' community charge at a rate of 100 per cent.

Mr. Grist: Yes. Students paying a one fifth community charge with a non student spouse will be jointly and severally liable for their spouses' community charge, subject to any benefit applicable to it.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has concerning research into or a study of the incidence of respiratory disease in the general public living in areas adjacent to opencast mining sites; and what conclusions he has come to.

Mr. Grist: I am not aware of any published research or study.

European Structural Fund

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the implications for the economic policies of his Department of proposed changes in the European structural fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Commission's review envisages concentration and co-ordination of the structural funds in order to maximise their impact on the reduction of regional imbalances. This will be achieved mainly through programmes of integrated development and my Department is already involved in several such initiatives.

Cardiff Bay Redevelopment

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what studies his Department has conducted into the impact of the Cardiff bay redevelopment scheme on the south Wales valleys; and of what other studies he is aware;

(2) what is his assessment of the impact of the Cardiff bay redevelopment scheme on the south Wales valleys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: A report by consultants commissioned by the Welsh Office in 1986 suggested that a major innovative redevelopment in Cardiff would be of national and possibly international importance. It would enhance Cardiff as a capital city and also help the economy of south Wales as a whole by attracting the investment and creating employment. The programme for the Valleys and the developments of the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation will combine together to make a considerable impact on the south Wales economy.

The programme for the Valleys envisages very substantial public investment over the next three years and in addition to that the private investment provoked by regional development grants and regional selective assistance alone are anticipated to create £1,000 million of private investment in the Valleys. There will be, of course, much further private investment that does not fit into this category.

The projections undertaken recently for the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation suggest that the project there could stimulate the creation of about 30,000 jobs in the area and private investment of £1 billion.

Doubtless there will be those in Cardiff who will find employment opportunities in the Valleys and those in the Valleys who will find employment opportunities in Cardiff.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the total number of people who will be eligible to pay some or all of the poll tax in its first year.

Mr. Lang: Based on the latest population figures, in respect of 1987, the number of adults liable to pay all or part of the community charge is estimated at approximately 3·8 million.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total area of land afforested by the Forestry Commission and private planning, respectively, in Britain in 1987-88; and if he will provide an estimate for 1988-89.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the year ended 31 March 1988, the Forestry Commission carried out 4,995 hectares of new planning and grant-aided 23,821 hectares of new planting by the private sector.

The commission proposes to carry out some 4,000 hectares of new planning in the current year. It is not possible, however, to provided a firm estimate of the level of private planting for this period until the likely pattern of forestry investment following the recent changes to the tax and grant arrangements becomes clearer.

Mental Handicap (Expenditure)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the total spending on care for the elderly with mental disability for each year since 1981, at 1981 prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The below shows health board's expenditure on elderly with mental disability in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87.

CBI Scotland

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry in Scotland; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have frequent discussions with CBI Scotland on a range of industrial and economic issues. I look forward to a continuing exchange of views.

Mental Health Expenditure

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 June, if he will restate for each health board the total spending on mental health for each year since 1981 at constant 1981 prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The table shows health boards' expenditure on mental health in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87.

Physicists

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of current unfilled medical physicists posts for each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Management information of this kind is not held centrally.

Homelessness

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the number of homeless households accepted by local authorities in Scotland whose homelessness resulted from mortgage arrears, and (b) the percentage of all homeless households which these represented, in each of the years from 1979 to 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This category was not separately identified prior to March 1984. Figures for later years are set out in the following table.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the local authorities where more than 20, 50 and 100 homeless households, respectively, were living in bed-and-breakfast hotels in Scotland at the end of June 1979, December 1981, December 1983, December 1985 and at the latest date for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested was not collected prior to 1980. Details for the other years are set out in the table.

Rents

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the average level of (a) local authority rents, (b) fair rents registered for unfurnished housing association lettings, (c) fair rents registered for other unfurnished lettings and (d) fair rents registered for all unfurnished lettings in Scotland in each of the years from 1979 to 1987, indicating the percentage increase in each on an annual cumulative basis; and how these increases compare with the movement of the retail prices index over that same period.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The information requested on local authority rents, registered rents for unfurnished private sector lettings and the retail prices index was given in my answer to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on 16 May 1988 at columns 343-344. Information for housing associations is set out in the following table.

Housing Revenue Account Dwellings

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the value of the Exchequer subsidies and rate fund contributions, respectively, to Scottish local authority housing revenue account dwellings in total and on a per dwelling basis for the years 1978-79 to 1987-88.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given in the table.

	Exchequer Subsidy		Rate fund Contributions
	Total £ million	Per Dwelling £	Total £ million	Per Dwelling £
1978-79	142·7	160·69	55·6	62·61

1987-88	41·9	50·39	41·8	50·27

Notes:

(1) Figures for 1978-79 to 1985-86 are based on audited accounts.

(2) Figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are based on authorities' near actual outturn returns.

Assured Tenancies

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many assured tenancies of (a) newly built and (b) newly improved properties have been created in each of the years since 1980 in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. Sections 56 to 58 of the Housing Act 1980, which introduced the existing scheme of assured tenancies, do not apply to Scotland. There is no comparable provision in Scottish legislation.

Reprocessing Plant, Dounreay

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he expects to be able to announce his decision on the planning inquiry in respect of the application to build the European demonstration reprocessing plant at Dounreay, prior to the parliamentary summer adjournment.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Scottish Gaelic

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his estimates of the percentage of people in Scotland who (a) use the Scottish Gaelic as their first language and (b) have a fluent knowledge of Scottish Gaelic.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available in the form requested. At the time of the 1981 census some 1·6 per cent. of the population of Scotland aged three or over were identified as Gaelic speakers.

Erskine Bridge

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library his traffic forecasts for the Erskine bridge, as referred to in the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General (HC 387, 1987-88, page 18).

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest published accounts for the Erskine bridge are in respect of 1986-87 (HC387). The Comptroller and Auditor General's report is to be found on page 11 of the White Paper account. The report makes no reference to traffic forecasts.

Health Boards (Members' Interests)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate by board which chairmen and members of health boards have declared any interests in matters being considered by their boards under the terms of the National Health Service (Health Boards: Membership, Procedure and Payment of Subscriptions) (Scotland) Regulations 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Training Courses (Offenders and Prisoners)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the vocational courses of the industrial training boards presently available to (a) adult and (b) young offender male prisoners.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The vocational courses of the industrial training boards presently available to (a) adult and (b) young offender male prisoners are listed below. The full range of courses listed is not available at any establishment.

Vocational courses available to adult male prisoners

1. Bricklaying
2. Carpentry and joinery
3. Catering
4. Domestic appliance repair and servicing
5. Electronic wiring and computer appreciation
6. Hairdressing
7. Horticulture
8. Painting and decorating
9. Upholstery
10. Welding/fabrication

2. Carpentry and joinery
3. Computer appreciation
4. Hairdressing
5. Horticulture
6. Mechanical/electrical engineering
7. Motor vehicle mechanics
8. Painting and decorating
9. Vehicle body repair/paint spraying
10. Welding/fabrication

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the most recent available figures for hospital waiting lists in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provisional figures show that on 30 September 1987 77,772 people were awaiting in-patient treatment at NHS hospitals in Scotland. This is a 4·6 per cent. reduction from the March 1987 figure, and a 12 per cent. reduction from the 1983 peak of 88,338 which was caused by industrial action in 1982. Recent disruptive action taken by the trade unions resulted in nearly 3,500 operations being cancelled earlier this year. I have, however, recently taken a series of major initiatives to reduce substantially the time people have to wait for treatment.

Scottish TUC (NHS)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss the National Health Service in Scotland.

Housing (Scotland) Bill

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek to amend the Housing (Scotland) Bill to ensure that no house may be transferred from a public sector landlord to a private sector landlord, with consequent effects on the tenant's status as a secure tenant, without the positive consent of the tenant of the house.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The requirement for the Secretary of State's consent to be obtained to disposal of houses already provides adequate safeguards in such circumstances and it will continue to do so.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that the proposed Scottish Homes organisation will not dispose of any housing stock to any private sector landlords without the consent of the tenant of each house involved in the proposed transfer.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend will ensure, through his use of his powers of consent in relation to disposals, that tenants of Scottish Homes are treated no less favourably than tenants of local authorities in relation to any proposal to dispose of houses, irrespective of whether the proposed disposal is to the private or public sector.

Leukaemia (Rosyth)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest information available to him on the levels of leukaemia in the Rosyth area and the national average.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest published information on the levels of leukaemia in the Rosyth area and the national average is that contained in the study undertaken by the information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency into the incidence of leukaemia in Scotland which was published last year in the May edition of the Health Bulletin issued by the Chief Medical Officer of the Scottish Home and Health Department. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 9 July 1987 at column 245.

Fish Farms (Pesticides)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a list of the pesticides used with the formal approval of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland on salmonid fish farms.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 June]: Pesticides require approval from six departmental Ministers acting jointly. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is one of these. All pesticides approved for sale in the United Kingdom appear in the book "Pesticides 1988" copies of which are already in the Library of the House.

Records are not held centrally on the use of specific approved products on salmonid fish farms.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the regulations governing the use of the pesticide Nuvan 500 EC on salmonid fish farms.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 June]: Pesticides are controlled under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 made under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. Any product or substance used on fish farms and which is added to the water or given orally or otherwise for the treatment, control or prevention of ectoparasites however is regarded as an animal medicine and as such requires a product licence under the Medicines Act 1968. A copy of the Medicines Act is already in the Library of the House.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research has been conducted, or commissioned by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland into the use of pesticides on fish farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 June]: No general research into the use of pesticides on fish farms has been commissioned. However, in addition to its work on the toxicity of Nuvan 500 EC to a number of marine organisms, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland marine laboratory, in conjunction with the university of Stirling, has studied the effect of Nuvan 500 EC on farmed salmon and the susceptibility of salmon lice to Nuvan 500 EC.

Nuvan 500 EC

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research has been conducted, or commissioned, by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland into the effects of Nuvan 500 EC on marine organisms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 June]: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine laboratory in Aberdeen has carried out an investigation into the toxicity of Nuvan to a number of marine organisms including neritic phytoplankton species, representative neritic copepod species, the larvae of the oyster (Crassostrea gigas), the larvae of the common lobster (Homarus vulgaris), the developing eggs of the prawn (Nephrops norvegicus) and to the early larvae of the herring (Clupea harengus). In addition, one dispersion study to simulate the treatment of 10 salmon rearing cages has been undertaken. Further work is planned in the current year.

Community Programme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals to provide extra central Government money for good quality Manpower Services Commission community programme projects in the community care field which cannot meet the requirements of the new adult training programme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 June 1988]: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes that bodies which have operated successful projects under the community programme will be able to adapt to the requirements of employment training. He has no plans to set up special funding arrangements for providing alternative grant assistance to such projects. Local authorities and health boards both routinely provide assistance to local voluntary projects in the community care field.

CIVIL SERVICE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service by what methods his personnel policies are designed to ensure that all staff, no matter what their age, disability, ethnic or national origin, marital status, race or sex, respectively, have equal opportunity for employment and advancement solely on the basis of their ability, qualifications and suitability for the work; when these were introduced; and with what results.

Mr. Luce: The principle of equality of opportunity applies to the whole range of personnel management issues in the Cabinet Office. Policy statements on equal opportunities for men and women, and race relations were issued in 1984 and have resulted in increased awareness at all levels of the potential problems and a willingness to overcome them.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Luce: Yes. There has been an equal opportunities officer for the Cabinet Office (OMCS) since 1984.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service, how many, and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department, are women and from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Luce: The information as at 1 May 1988 is:

	Total Staff	Women		[1] Ethnic Minorities
		Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
Grades 1-7	337	55·5	16	2	1
SEO and HEO	222·5	84·5	38	2	1
EO	220·5	86·5	39	3	1
AO and below	787·5	590·5	75	52	7
Industrials	9·5	1·5	16	0	0
TOTAL	1,577	818·5	52	59	4

[1] Ethnic minority representation figures are based on questionnaires voluntarily completed by staff and not all have been returned.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he has any plans to improve equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Luce: My Department is constantly looking for ways to develop and improve its equal opportunities programme. Current initiatives include alternative working patterns, especially part-time working and job-sharing, and recruitment reviews.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he has carried out monitoring exercises in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mr. Luce: Monitoring exercises of recruitment, promotion and training have been carried out in accordance with these codes. The results of the exercises are being studied.

Civil Servants (Secondment)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many civil servants are currently seconded to private companies; what are their names; and to which companies they are seconded, other than those companies in which the state takes more than a 25 per cent. interest.

Mr. Luce: Information in the form requested is not held centrally and could be assembled only at disproportionate cost. The report on interchange of staff between the Civil Service and other organisations in 1987, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, gives a range of information about secondments being undertaken in that year, notably between the Civil Service and industry and commerce. The industrial and commercial organisations which took part in the secondment programme in 1987 are listed in annex B of the report.

THE ARTS

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has carried out monitoring exercises in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mr. Luce: Monitoring exercises in respect of Office of Arts and Libraries staff have been carried out by the Cabinet Office, in accordance with the codes.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts by what methods his personnel policies are designed to ensure that all staff, no matter what their age, disability, ethnic or national origin, marital status, race or sex, respectively, have equal opportunity for employment and advancement solely on the basis of their ability, qualifications and suitability for the work; when these were introduced; and with what results.

Mr. Luce The policy of the Office of Arts and Libraries follows that of the Cabinet Office, which agreed the adoption of policies on race relations and equality of opportunity for women with departmental trade unions in 1984. These policies take account of the codes of practice issued under the Race Relations Act 1976 and the Equal Opportunity Act 1975. Policy statements were circulated to all staff in 1984.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Luce: The services of the Cabinet Office equal opportunities officer are available to the Office of Arts and Libraries and its staff.

Mr. Janner To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has any plans to improve equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 26 May at column 257.

Southern Arts Association

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the grant to the Southern Arts Association for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: The grant was £1,496,020 in 1987-88 and £1,666,615 in 1988-89.

Cultural Centres

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Minister for the Arts what Her Majesty's Government are doing to support the Council of Europe initiative to establish networks of cultural centres to encourage cultural co-operation and exchanges throughout Europe.

Mr. Luce: Her Majesty's Government welcomed this initiative by the Council of Europe, and has put the Council in touch with appropriate centres in the United Kingdom via the Arts Council.

Budgets (Statistics)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what information he has as to what percentage of the total budget of (a) the National theatre, (b) the Royal Shakespeare Company, (c) the Royal Exchange theatre, Manchester, (d) the Royal Court, (e) the Crucible theatre, Sheffield and (f) the Liverpool playhouse has been spent on (i) productions, (ii) administration and (iii) marketing in each of the last five years;

(2) whether he will publish a table showing (a) the total budget, (b) earned income and (c) income from sponsorship and expressing both (b) and (c) as a percentage of (a) for (i) the Derby playhouse, (ii) the Belgrave theatre, Coventry, (iii) the Yvonne Arnaud theatre, Guildford, (iv) the Salisbury playhouse, (v) the Theatre Royal, Bristol, (vi) the Theatre Royal, Stratford East, (vii) The Bolton Octagon and (viii) the Victoria theatre, Stoke on Trent in each of the last five years;

(3) what information he has as to what has been the advertising and marketing budget for (a) the Royal Opera house, (b) the English National opera, (c) Kent opera and (d) Opera North in each of the last five years;

(4) what information he has as to what has been the advertising and marketing budget for (a) the National theatre, (b) the Royal Exchange theatre, Manchester, (c) the Royal Court, (d) the Royal Shakespeare Company, (e) the Sheffield Crucible theatre, (f) the Leeds playhouse, (g) the Liverpool playhouse and (h) the Theatre Royal, Bristol in each of the last five years;

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the name, location, constituency and numbers of people employed in each non-governmental and university research establishment where his Department commissions research;

(2) if he will list the name, location, constituency and numbers employed, of each Government research establishment where his Department conducts or commissions research.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 3 May, at column 404. The comprehensive information requested is not kept centrally.

Fisheries Council

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council in Luxembourg on 23 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to our hon. Friend for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on Friday 24 June 1988.

Prices Agreement

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the provisional agreement on 1989 prices agreed by 11 member states at the recent Council meeting will ensure that the agricultural guideline will not be exceeded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission has provided assurances that the costs of the package provisionally agreed by 11 member states at the recent Council can be contained within the guideline.

Price Cuts

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the United Kingdom representatives at the recent Council meeting did not support the Dutch proposal for linked monetary compensatory amount-European currency unit price cuts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: At the insistence of the United Kingdom, as well as the Dutch, the Council examined various ways, including price cuts, for offsetting the costs of the final package so as to respect the European Council's decisions.

The Commission proposed a number of green rate changes during the negotiations, and in response to United Kingdom demands have confirmed in a clear statement that the package finally agreed by the Council on 23 June enables it to comply with the 1988 budget and the 1989 preliminary draft budget, and therefore the guideline, and that it will effect management economies to ensure this.

Food Prices

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress was made at the recent Council meeting in aligning EEC food prices with world prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Council agreed to hold common prices for all major commodities unchanged for the coming year, and to make some changes in intervention arrangements which will have the effect of reducing support prices. There were also changes to green currency rates, which will affect support levels for certain commodities. Further reductions in support levels are also likely through the operation of the new stabiliser arrangements. The gap between the resulting Community prices and world prices will depend on how world prices move.

Land Classification

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has now considered the responses to the consultation document on the revised agricultural land classification for England and Wales.

Mr. MacGregor: We have received a number of helpful and detailed comments on the draft revised guidelines and criteria. I intend to defer publication of the definitive system until October 1988 to allow time for the appropriate adjustments to be made. The revised system will come into actual operation on 1 January 1989 which will give practitioners time to familiarise themselves with the detail.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers meeting on 23-24 June in Luxembourg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: As I reported in a written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 20 June, these negotiations almost reached a conclusion at the end of a meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers which finished on 17 June, but were blocked by the need for further discussion on one issue of particular importance to Greece. At that point 11 member states were prepared to vote for the package and agreed that there should be no further changes to it with the exception of the one Greek point. This was further confirmed at an informal Council in Germany from 19-21 June.

I am glad to report now that further discussions last week resolved that difficulty. Final agreement was reached on this issue by the presidency, Commission and Ministers concerned towards the end of last week which enabled the whole package to be formally endorsed at a Council meeting in Luxembourg on 23-24 June.

My major objectives during these negotiations were to ensure that a settlement was reached within the limits for CAP expenditure set by the meeting of Heads of Government in February; and to ensure a fair outcome for United Kingdom farmers which would improve their competitive position. Both these objectives were achieved.

The Commission confirmed that cost savings in the management of the CAP, including on the subsidisation of skimmed milk powder in animal feed, will enable expenditure to be kept within the provision in the 1988 budget and the preliminary draft budget for 1989 for agriculture guarantee expenditure.

So far as our farmers are concerned, I secured a devaluation of the "green rate" at which support prices fixed in ECU are converted into sterling greater than that agreed for any other member state except Greece and Portugal, where exceptional circumstances apply. It will therefore improve our farmers' position relative to those in all the remaining nine member states. This devaluation will reduce monetary compensatory amounts by 3·2 percentage points, more than double those for France and Ireland. It will take effect on 1 January 1989 for all commodities except beef, for which decisions on green rates are to be taken later.

The agreement included a declaration of the intention of the Council and the Commission to dismantle remaining monetary gaps in four stages between now and 1992. At first it was proposed that this should apply only to countries which belong to the EMS exchange rate mechanism. At my insistence, it was accepted that parallel measures must apply to other member states as well.

So far as the rest of the package is concerned all basic support prices fixed in ECU will remain unchanged for 1988-89, except those for some varieties of tobacco, which will be reduced. But the basic support prices are in several cases liable to be cut automatically, under the budgetary stabiliser arrangements agreed earlier this year, if output exceeds a given level. In addition there will be indirect reductions in support for certain commodities, through lower monthly price increases for cereals and oilseeds, and through changes in the intervention arrangements for beef, where sales into intervention have remained at a high level despite the reforms agreed in 1986. There are also to be reductions in the prices at which some surplus wine is taken off the market, to complement the stabiliser system for wine previously agreed.

The package includes the extension of stabiliser mechanisms to three further horticultural crops, namely, oranges, lemons and peaches, as well as the detailed arrangements for operating the stabiliser for tobacco.

A solution was agreed to the long-standing problem of the inadequate margin for the refining of raw cane sugar. The margin will be supplemented by direct payments to refiners. This will ensure our ability to continue to fulfil the Community's commitment to import and refine sugar from the ACP countries.

A proposal from the Commission for a sharp increase in the levies on imports of birdseed, which would have led to a considerable increase in the price of birdseed, was dropped following strong United Kingdom criticism.

Overall, this is a good settlement for United Kingdom interests. It keeps within the budgetary limits. It will maintain pressure on the prices of surplus commodities in line with the stabiliser mechanisms already agreed. And it does at the same time further improve the competitive position of United Kingdom farmers.

Sheep (Radiation)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, of the 15,854 lambs and sheep marked blue and released for further fattening between 28 September 1987 and 10 January 1988 in Cumbria, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, how many above the 1,000 kg action level were remonitored before 1 June in each of the four countries; and how many were monitored and tagged for slaughter before 1 June in each of the four respective countries.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Of the 15,854 sheep which had been marked blue between 28 September 1987 and 10 January 1988, 5,578 were remonitored before 1 June 1988. 33 out of these 5,578 remained above the action level. However, these animals all passed on subsequent re-testing. All 5,578, therefore, were ear-tagged as eligible for slaughter before 1 June.

The breakdown by country of the remonitoring is as follows:

Country where sheep remonitored	Number of sheep marked blue (28 September 1987 to 10 January 1988) and remonitored before 1 June 1988
England	593
Northern Ireland	33
Scotland	3,572
Wales	1,380
Total	5,578

NORTHERN IRELAND

Elderly People

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was, for hospital and community health services for elderly people in Northern Ireland, the number of geriatric in-patient cases, geriatric out-patient attendances, geriatric day patient attendances together with the expenditure after allowing for general inflation, expenditure, after allowing for hospital and community health service inflation and the number of district nursing staff and average length of stay for geriatric in-patients in each year from 1976-77.

Mr. Needham: The health and social services boards' accounts are not maintained at present in such a way as would enable the expenditure on geriatric services to be identified separately. The statistical information requested is as follows:

Mentally Handicapped People

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was, for hospital services for the mentally handicapped in Northern Ireland, the number of nursing staff per occupied bed, expenditure after allowing for general inflation, expenditure after allowing for hospital and community health service inflation and the number of occupied in-patient beds in each year since 1976-77.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Mentally handicapped

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the discharge rates for National Health Service hospitals in Northern Ireland, as a whole and for each area board, stating these as a rate per 10,000 resident population, for the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Needham: The discharge rates for the Health Service hospitals, excluding hospitals for the mentally ill and mentally handicapped are:

	1983	1984	1985	1986
Northern Ireland	1,623	1,630	1,705	1,665
Eastern Board	2,143	2,149	2,272	2,151
Northern Board	1,011	1,025	1,071	1,129
Southern Board	1,354	1,373	1,429	1,420
Western Board	1,524	1,513	1,537	1,519

Deaths are included in the discharge rates.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of patients leaving mental illness hospitals and units after a stay of five or more years in Northern Ireland and by area board in the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Needham: The numbers of discharges and deaths are:

	1983	1984	1985	1986
Northern Ireland	186	205	197	199
Eastern Board	90	85	81	118
Northern Board	28	19	27	24
Southern Board	12	30	25	15
Western Board	56	71	64	42

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement in tabular form containing information, broken down by health and social services boards in Northern Ireland, on identifiable improvements in services in the National Health Service since 1983, the resources which have been made available for such service improvements and the monitoring by the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland, and health boards to ensure that money allocated for service improvements is spent on them; and if he will give information for Northern Ireland as a whole.

Mr. Needham: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The operational planning system, including the annual accountability reviews, is the process through which the Department determines the global allocations for each board, agrees the targets and objectives for the year ahead and in time reviews progress towards these.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are his Department's guidelines for acute service targets in the following priority areas: coronary bypass, hip operations, bone marrow transplants, cataract operations and end stage renal failures; what progress has been made so far in meeting these targets; what further progress he expects health and social services boards to make within existing resources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The targets which are set out in the regional strategy (1987-1992) published last August are as follows:

Coronary by-pass—450 by-pass operations included in a target of 750 for cardiac surgery.

Hip operations—reduction of average waiting time for admission to hospital from nine months to six months.

End State Renal Failure—acceptance rate for treatment of 50 new patients per million by 1990. Bone Marrow Transplants—12 operations per year. It has not been thought necessary to set targets for cataract operations.

As we are only one year into the strategy, it is too soon to expect significant improvements but I am currently reviewing progress through the present round of accountability reviews. I am confident that the target will be met.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give figures for progress towards acute sector targets for Northern Ireland for 1983, 1986-87 and 1990.

Mr. Needham: The regional strategy for the health and personal social services 1987-1992 published in August 1987 establishes bed targets for the acute hospital sector based on 1983 data. The target for 1992 is 6,250 beds overall and by the end of 1987 the figure was 6,690.

Immunisation

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current uptake level in Northern Ireland for measles, diphtheria, tetanus, polio and rubella immunisation; and what are his Department's target uptake levels.

Mr. Needham: The immunisation uptake rates for 1986; the most recent year for which information is available; together with minimum uptake targets to be achieved by 1992 are as follows:

	1986 Uptake Rates per cent.	Minimum Uptake Targets per cent.
Measles	51	90
Diphtheria	81	90
Tetanus	82	90
Polio	82	90
Rubella	94	95

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many officers of the rank of inspector or above have resigned from the Royal Ulster Constabulary each year since 1983; for what reasons; and from which rank.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many officers of the rank of inspector or above who were interviewed for the purposes of the Stalker-Sampson report and in respect of whom there was evidence to suggest that they were guilty of the crime of perverting or attempting to pervert or conspiring to pervert the course of justice or any other offence relating to the shooting incidents in November and December 1982 in Armagh have resigned from the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and for what reasons.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 21 June 1988]: I have seen only those parts of the Stalker-Sampson report which have a direct bearing on my responsibility for policing matters. I have therefore no knowledge of what evidence exists of possible offences relating to perverting the course of justice or of any person who might have been involved.

Irish Language

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will seek to establish a co-operation scheme with the Republic of Ireland for the cross-border exchange of Irish medium teachers for short periods during the school year.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 21 June 1988]: We have no current plans to do so, but under existing reciprocal in-services arrangements, Northern Ireland teachers are able to attend Irish language courses in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make available a copy of the Ministry of Education circular which declared the Irish textbook "Cosan an Oir" unsuitable for school use.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The Department of Education has not issued such a circular.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many of the students who applied to study Irish/Celtic as part of the degree—bachelor of education course in 1985-86 were accepted;

(2) how many students applied to study Irish/Celtic as part of a bachelor of education course in 1985-86.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 21 June 1988]: There were 57 applicants of whom 12 were accepted.

Modern Languages

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of financial support to teachers involved in modern languages in-service training in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 21 June 1988]: Financial support in 1987-88 totalled £109,000.

DEFENCE

Royal Navy

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on his Department's policy towards the maintenance of a 50-ship fleet.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My colleagues and I have received 13 letters from hon. Members and others on this subject since the beginning of the year.

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the Royal Navy's surface fleet is truly operational; and how many ships are currently undergoing sea trials and refits.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are currently 126 ships in the surface fleet that are operational or engaged in preparing for service or trials or training. All these ships can be made available for operational deployment immediately or within a short period. In addition there are 17 ships in refit or on standby.

Low-flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received concerning military low-flying exercises in Wales.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1 April and 31 May 1988 the Ministry of Defence received 279 inquiries or complaints from Wales about low-flying military aircraft.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what minimum height is specified for military jet aircraft performing simulated attacks on RAF St. Athan; and within what range of airfield flying at the minimum height is permitted;

(2) what minimum height is specified for military jet aircraft performing simulated attacks on RAF Valley; and within what range of the airfield flying at the minimum height is permitted;

(3) what minimum height is specified for military jet aircraft performing simulated attacks on RAF Brawdy; and within what range of the airfield flying at the minimum height is permitted.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

RAF station	Height
RAF Brawdy	— 200 ft
RAF Valley	— 100 ft (single aircraft) 500 ft (formations)
RAF St. Athan	— 100 ft (single aircraft) 500 ft (formations)

Such activity is permitted only within the boundaries of the stations themselves.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any low-flying aircraft were in the immediate vicinity of the A303 road at the Wylye bypass, between 12.00 and 13.30 on Thursday 16 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Two Harriers from RAF Wittering were operating near the A303 Wylye bypass between 12.00 and 13.30 on 16 June. Two RAF Jaguars from RAF Coltishall were also operating in the vicinity between 11.30 and 11.50 on the same day.

Royal Naval Armament Depot, Beith

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of roof and other insulation material at the Royal Naval Armament Depot, Beith, is made of asbestos; what work is currently under way to replace this material; and what is the planned date by which the removal of all asbestos from the site will be completed.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

Insulation material containing asbestos is present in the roof of one building at RNAD Beith. Asbestos material was used in the construction of some 15-20 per cent. of the remaining buildings on the site. Building components containing asbestos are replaced under normal maintenance procedures when they become life expired, and there is no planned date for the removal of all asbestos from the site.

Departmental Staff (Religious Affiliations)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he hopes to publish the results of the survey presently being undertaken to monitor the religious affiliation of civil servants employed by his Department in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Sainsbury: The results of the religious affiliation survey of home civil servants employed in Northern Ireland will be published when they have been collated and analysed.

Military Establishments

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all military establishments region by region which are currently surplus to military requirements, or are due to become surplus to military requirements in the next 12 months.

Mr. Freeman: We have already announced that MOD sites in the following areas are currently, or will become, surplus to defence requirements. Details of sites under consideration cannot be given for managerial and commercial reasons.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give for each standard planning region of England (a) the number of employees of his Department; (b) the amount spent in wages and salaries; and (c) the proportion of total expenditure in each region by his Department which is represented by personnel costs.

Mr. Sainsbury: For (a) I would refer the hon. Member to table 4.13 of volume 2 of "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988", which gives the latest available figures. Figures for (b) and (c) are not readily available and could be prepared only at disproportionate cost.

Tactical Warhead

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether work has started since 21 January at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment, Aldermaston, on the design of a new tactical warhead.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to my answer to the hon. Member for Leyton on 21 January, at column 774.

NATO (Briefings)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British (a) groups and (b) individuals visited North Atlantic Treaty Organisation headquarters in each of the past three years for briefings and information; what are the figures for visits from each other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation country, in numbers and in cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Recent information on visitors to NATO headquarters is contained in the "NATO Information Service Survey of Output, 1987", a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House. The cost of all such visits is met from the NATO information service budget, but details of the cost by individual nation or visit is not available.

Bangladeshi Military Personnel (Training)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proportion of the courses run by the British military advisory team training Bangladeshi military personnel deal with human rights issues;

(2) what proportion of the total year's training provided by the British military mission in Dhaka is given over to human rights training;

(3) what training in human rights issues is included in the courses run by British military advisers for Bangladeshi military personnel;

(4) what emphasis in the training provided by the British military mission in Dhaka is placed on the responsibility of each individual member of the Bangladeshi armed forces to ensure that human rights are protected;

(5) to what extent the training programme provided by the British military mission in Dhaka deals with the various categories of human rights violations that have been alleged against the Bangladeshi security forces in the recent past; and whether the programme spells out the appropriate and internationally recognised minimum standards applicable in such situations.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The British military advisory team in Bangladesh assists with military staff courses for all three services at the Bangladesh Defence Services Command and Staff College. The courses are not specifically directed at conditions in any one country: students from countries other than Bangladesh also attend the college. Although no specific training is given in human rights legislation, the courses include reference to the laws and conventions governing armed conflict and military aid to a civil power. The college training at all times emphasises high ethical standards in line with the British military tradition.

Service Personnel (Charges)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in any country in which they are stationed, members of the armed forces pay charges under the fiscal regulations of the receiving state in respect of the provision of (a) refuse collection, (b) education services, (c) environmental health services and (d) water and drainage services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Members of the armed forces who are operating abroad under the provisions of the NATO status of forces agreement are exempt, under article X of the agreement, from any charges under the fiscal regulations of the receiving state in respect of the services listed by the hon. Member. It may be helpful, however, if I explain that within NATO Her Majesty's Government make a payment in lieu of rates (or their equivalent), or a direct payment for the services provided where this is appropriate. Outside NATO we generally seek to ensure that neither the service man, nor Her Majesty's Government, is liable to pay charges under the fiscal regulations of the receiving state for the provision of any essential services.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Pre-tax Income

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the amount and share of pre-tax income accruing to (a) the top 1 per cent., (b) the top 5 per cent., (c) the top 10 per cent., (d) the top 25 per cent., (e) the top 50 per cent., (f) the top 75 per cent. and (g) all taxpayers in each year 1978-79 to 1988-89, and the amount and share of tax liability for each of these groups.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates are given in the tables for 1978-79 and 1983-84 to 1988-89. Information for other years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. All estimates of income are based on information reported to tax offices and collected through the annual surveys of personal incomes. For years before 1985-86, estimates exclude employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and some investment income on which tax is deducted at source.

Tax Liabilities

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will show, for the tax base existing in each year from 1979-80 to 1988-89, the difference between actual tax liabilities and liabilities under the indexed 1978-79 tax regime, for each of the following tax groups: top 1 per cent., top 2 to 5 per cent., top 6 to 10 per cent., top 11 to 20 per cent., top 21 to 30 per cent., top 31 to 40 per cent., top 41 to 50 per cent. and the bottom 50 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates are not available in the precise form requested. For each financial year shown in the table, the yield from the tax regime in that year is compared with the yield under the 1978-79 tax regime. All estimates are based on a provisional 1988-89 income base projected from the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and all tax regimes are indexed to 1988-89 levels according to the statutory formula. The comparison therefore allows for budgetary changes in income tax since 1978-79 but not for changes in definition or any other factors which might affect the income base.

Unlimited Liability Insurance

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Government Departments, and under what circumstances, seek to require contractors to provide for unlimited liability insurance as part of any agreed contract of service.

Mr. Brooke: It is unlikely that any Government Department will require, in any circumstances, a contractor to provide for unlimited liability insurance as part of an agreed contract of service. Under the standard conditions used in departmental contracts, a contractor may have unlimited liability for any costs arising from a default by him. But it is normally left to the contractor to determine what insurance he needs. In certain cases, however, a contractor may be required to insure for a particular level of cover.

Credit-checking Services

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the implementation date for the revised customs interpretation of the value added tax treatment of credit-checking services; and if such services remain standard rated.

Mr. Lilley: The service of checking on the creditworthiness of a particular subject is standard-rated for VAT purposes. This has been so since the inception of the tax; there has been no recent change in Customs' interpretation of the law. If my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind, perhaps he would like to write to me.

Nationalised Industries (Manpower)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for the years 1979-80 to 1988-89, for each organisation treated as a nationalised industry in at least one year, in the external financing tables of the annual public expenditure White Paper, the number of employees, indicating whether these are on a head-count or full-time equivalent basis.

Mr. Major: The three tables show, for the years 1979-80 to 1986-87, the number of employees for each organisation treated as a nationalised industry in at least one year during that period. The data are taken from individual industries' annual report and accounts. In the large majority of cases, these are not yet available for 1987-88. It is neither the public nor the private sector's practice to provide employee projections for future years.

Notes to all tables:

(a) It is conventional in company accounts to provide employee data on a full-time equivalent basis although annual reports and accounts do not always state that such a convention has been followed.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the share of total public spending taken up by housing spending (a) in Great Britain and (b) in England, in each of the years from 1974 to 1987.

Mr. Major: The table shows, for Great Britain and England, identifiable public expenditure on the housing function as a percentage of total identifiable public expenditure:

Percentages

	Great Britain	England
1982-83	4·0	3·7
1983-84	4·4	4·1
1984-85	4·1	4·0
1986-87	3·0	2·8

The term "identifiable expenditure" refers to expenditure that can be indentified from official records as having been incurred in a particular territory. Total identifiable expenditure accounts for just over 80 per cent. of total public departmental expenditure: it excludes expenditure on defence, overseas aid and other overseas services which are deemed to have been incurred on behalf of the United Kingdom as a whole. It also excludes Government net landing to, and the market and overseas borrowing of, the public corporations (including nationalised industries), due to the difficulty of allocating this finance to expenditure in a particular country.

Figures prior to 1982-83 are not available on a consistent basis because of changes in definition that have taken place between different public expenditure White Papers. Figures for 1987-88 are not yet available.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East concerning pre-tax incomes and tax liabilities, for answer on 27 May.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Today.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Birkenhead on the cumulative impact of Budget changes, tabled for answer on 9 June.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Today.

Planning Totals

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table, showing for the years 1975-76 to 1987-88 in a form consistent with table 2.18 of Cm. 288-I, the planning totals analysed by Department and spending authority.

Mr. Major: The information requested is given for the years 1982-83 to 1987-88. Since Cm. 288 there have been some minor reallocations from Voted receipts subject to cash limits to Consolidated Fund extra receipts which are not cash limited. A table on this revised basis for 1988-89 is also given. Corresponding figures for earlier years are not readily available.

Social Security

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report an analysis of plans and outturns for programme 15, social security, for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91 in a form analogous to table 1·5 of Cmnd. 288-I.

Mr. Major: The information requested on programme 15 is as follows.

Public and Government Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table, for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91 providing a detailed reconciliation between the public expenditure planning total and general Government expenditure.

Mr. Major: A detailed reconciliation between the public expenditure planning total and general Government expenditure for outturn years was given in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" Cm 288-1, Table 6.4 with an associated explanation. The differences between these two aggregates for later years are estimates and individual components would be subject to considerable margins of error.

GNP (Definition)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government have now agreed to the European Commission's proposal for a directive on the harmonisation of definitions of gross national products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Commission's proposal for a directive on the harmonisation of definitions of gross national product (GNP) (document 5647/88 (COM(88)176)) forms part of a package of measures to implement the conclusions of the European Council in February on the future financing of the Community. The proposal has been deposited in Parliament, and an explanatory memorandum was submitted on 20 May. The substance of the directive has now been agreed by member states in a way consistent with the United Kingdom's interests, ensuring that GNP data will be rigorously controlled with involvement by member states, and compiled in a way that does not put unreasonable burdens on them. In view of a recommendation by the Select Committee on European Legislation that the proposal should be debated, the United Kingdom placed a Parliamentary scrutiny reserve on it in Council discussions. It subsequently proved necessary however for the United Kingdom to lift this reserve to enable the Council to adopt a common position on the proposal, along with the rest of the future financing package, at the Agriculture Council on 16 June.

This was done in preparation for a conciliation meeting with the European Parliament on 20 June, and notwithstanding the fact that, for technical legal reasons, formal adoption of the GNP directive itself cannot take place until the proposed new decision on the Community's system of own resources has been approved by national Parliaments. I regret that it was not possible to arrange a debate on the draft directive before the common position was adopted: the Government took the view that it would not be in the United Kingdom's interest to hold up a common position on the future financing package as a whole, which we strongly support, not least in its effect on strengthening budget discipline; indeed, the Government made clear that the various future financing measures must be agreed as a package. The broader issues raised by the future financing package were of course debated by the House on 19 May. The Government will seek to ensure that the House has an early opportunity to debate the GNP directive itself.

TRANSPORT

Traffic

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the increase in rigid lorry traffic in the first quarter of 1988; and what was his Department's forecast;

(2) what was the increase in motor traffic in the first quarter of 1988 over the first quarter of 1987; and what were his Department's forecasts;

(3) what was the increase in motorway traffic in the first quarter of 1988 over the first quarter of 1987; and what were his Department's forecasts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimated increases in vehicle kilometres on the first quarter of 1987 were:

	Per cent.
All motor vehicles	13
Rigid Heavy Goods Vehicles	11
All motor vehicles on motorways	19

Forecasts are not made for particular three-month periods or particular road classes. There are no separate forecasts for rigid goods vehicles which are included in those for the heavy goods vehicle category.

The latest traffic forecasts for all vehicle categories are given in table 2.42 of "Transport Statistics of Great Britain 1976-1986", which is held in the Library.

A10 (Dualling)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans exist for dualling the A10 from Cambridge to Ely.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no proposals at present. We shall continue to keep the situation under review.

Road Accidents

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of accidents involving road vehicles, for each of the last five years, are attributable to (a) driver error, (b) vehicle disrepair or faultiness, with particular regard to vehicle tyre condition; what was the number of people killed, seriously injured or injured as a result of those accidents, for each category of principal causal factor; and what action he intends to take to seek to reduce the casualty toll.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is not collected on the STATS 19 form, and cannot be provided in the form requested.

Studies carried out by TRRL during the 1970s indicated that human error was a contributory factor in 95 per cent. of all road accidents and was the main cause in about 70 per cent. of them. A more recent study suggests that 5 per cent. of road accidents have vehicle defects as their main contributory factor.

We have set up a behavioural studies unit at TRRL, and put in hand new research into driver behaviour. We are also considering the recommendations of the North report as regards the enforcement of vehicle standards.

Tolls

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider waiving the toll charges at estuarial crossings during those holiday weekends when motorists can expect to experience frustrating delays.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Severn bridge is the only estuarial crossing for which the Secretary of State is directly empowered to levy tolls. There are no plans to waive these at peak times.

Casualty Values

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to make any changes to the casualty values used in transport appraisals.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the light of the recommendations of the report of the interdepartmental review of road safety we have carried out a comprehensive review of the available research evidence on the valuation of fatal casualties. Following this review we now propose to increase significantly the value to be attached to a fatal road accident casualty, from the present level of £283,000 to £500,000. This new figure would be adopted by the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland offices in addition to the Department of Transport. A consultation paper dealing with this—"Valuation of Road Accident Fatalities" has been published today. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Last year, values for casualties were increased as an interim measure in line with the increase in the value of time savings. At the time of that announcement we made it clear that the basis of valuation would be kept under review. Research into what people are willing to pay to reduce accident risks both in the United Kingdom and the United States of America yielded a wide range of values. Although the available evidence does not point unequivocally to any single valuation and a considerable element of judgment seems unavoidable, the Government believe a significantly higher value for a fatal casualty is justified, and considers that the figure proposed should command widespread support. Because of the importance of minimising uncertainty on road improvement schemes already at public inquiry or awaiting a final decision from the appropriate Secretary of State a final decision on the new value needs to be reached quickly. We have therefore sought views from those directly concerned by mid-August. We shall also give careful consideration to any other views we receive. Current values of accident costs will continue to be used until there is a further announcement.

An increased value for fatality costs should increase the emphasis on safety in road schemes, particularly the smaller schemes which can often do so much to reduce casualties. The proposed change underlines our continuing commitment to make our roads safer for everyone.

Rebuilt Car Write-offs

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will take steps to ensure that all persons and organisations who were consulted by the Association of Chief Police Officers in preparing a report on rebuilt car write-offs will be given the opportunity to comment on the draft report:

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the draft report of the Association of Chief Police Officers on rebuilt car write-offs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department has received a copy of the final report. In preparing it, the Association of Chief Police Officers took full account of the views of all those consulted, although the Government are not in any way committed to its conclusions. My right hon. Friend will be carrying out such further consultation as he considers necessary. A copy of the final report has been placed in the Library.

Women Motorists (Assistance)

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will launch a national campaign to encourage women motorists and passengers to render assistance to stranded women motorists.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our advice is:

> "Before going on any long journey make sure your vehicle is in good condition and has enough fuel. If you break down on the motorway, get your car as near to an emergency phone as possible. If you cannot see a phone look for the marker arrows and follow them—they show the direction of the nearest phone. While on the hard shoulder, or telephoning, keep a sharp look out, and do not accept lifts from strangers; wait for the police or breakdown service."

We encourage drivers to be courteous and helpful to others, both while on the road, and in the event of accidents or breakdowns.

Gade Valley Viaduct, M25

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement of the remedial work on the M25 Gade valley viaduct.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Additional welding was carried out as part of the original contract for M25 to correct minor deficiencies in the construction of the viaduct. The integrity of the structure is not in doubt. There is no danger to the travelling public from the continuing use of the road.

Integrated Ticketing (Greater London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he expects to take to maintain or extend the current systems of integrated period ticketing covering both bus and rail services in Greater London; what studies or reports he has commissioned or received encouraging multi-mode journeys; and if he will direct London Regional Transport to retain this facility.

Mr. David Mitchell: Fares structures and ticketing are matters for the operators concerned. No specific studies have been commissioned or received, but my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State discusses such matters with the chairmen of British Rail and London Regional Transport from time to time in the London Passenger Transport Group.

Cross-Channel Ferries

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report each roll-on/roll-off cross-Channel passenger ferry currently operating out of Dover, its maximum passenger load and the number of occasions on which each ship was inspected by his Department in the last six months without notification; and if he is satisfied that all such ships have been operated with the recommended manning levels.

Mr. David Mitchell: Roll-on/roll-off cross-Channel passenger ferries currently operating out of Dover.

Ferry	Maximum Passenger load
European Clearway	107
European Endeavour	107
European Trader	107
Pride of Bruges	1,326
Pride of Calais	2,290
Pride of Dover	2,290
Pride of Kent	1,326
Pride of Sandwich	1,035
St. Anselm	1,350
St. Christopher	1,400

Ferry	Maximum Passenger load
Champs Elysees	1,804
Cote D'Azur	1,600
Nord Pas De Calais	30
Prince Laurent	1,302
Princess Marie Christine	1,200
Prins Albert	1,200
Prinses Beatrix	1,500
Prinses Marie Esmeralda	1,280
Reine Astrid	1,200
Saint Eloi	1,000

Although it is the Department's normal policy to undertake some inspections without prior notification to the owner, no such inspections have been carried out in the past six months on the vessels listed above because of the large number of pre-arranged inspections that have been required. On each occasion that an inspection was carried out the manning level was satisfactory.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the recommended bridge personnel complement on a roll-on/roll-off cross-Channel ferry.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is a statutory requirement that the bridge is manned by a duly certificated deck officer at all times when the ship is at sea. A helmsman is also required when the ship is not in automatic steering and must be immediately available to take the wheel. A lookout must be posted during the hours of darkness, during restricted visibility and at any other time when required by the officer of the watch or the master.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions marine surveyors from his Department have made unannounced inspections of cross-Channel roll-on/roll-off ferries in which they remained aboard the relevant vessel throughout the duration of the Channel crossing.

Mr. David Mitchell: This information is not readily available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give, for each roll-on/roll-off cross-Channel ferry inspected by marine surveyors in the last six months, where notification of intention to inspect the relevant vessel was given to the relevant company prior to inspection, what amount of time elapsed between notification and inspection.

Mr. David Mitchell: My surveyors made 88 inspections of roll-on/roll-off cross-Channel ferries in the last six months where notification of intention to inspect was given prior to inspection. In general, at least 24 hours notice was given.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what basis the decision is made either to notify or not to notify a cross-Channel ferry operator of the intention to inspect a roll-on/roll-off ferry.

Mr. David Mitchell: In general, the operator is notified when the inspection requires some preparatory organisation.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many inspections by marine surveyors have been carried out on cross-Channel roll-on/roll-off ferries in the last six months; how many of those inspections were carried out without prior notification of the intention to inspect; and if he has any plans to improve current procedures in regard to notification.

Mr. David Mitchell: A total of 118 inspections have been carried out in the last six months. Thirty inspections were carried out without prior notification. Procedures are continually kept under review.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the average length of time spent, per inspection, aboard roll-on/roll-off cross-Channel ferries by marine surveyors from his Department over the last six months.

Mr. David Mitchell: The length of time spent, per inspection, aboard roll-on/roll-off cross-Channel ferries by my marine surveyors over the last six months varied from two surveyor hours to two surveyor days, averaging about one surveyor day.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what criteria his Department's marine surveyors satisfy themselves during an inspection of a cross-Channel ferry that the manning complement is adequately trained to perform their respective roles.

Mr. David Mitchell: My marine surveyors satisfy themselves in two ways. A check is made of the qualifications of crew members and a drill of emergency procedures is witnessed during which crew members can be seen performing their duties and can be questioned by the surveyor.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are taken by his Department to ensure that a roll-on/roll-off cross-Channel ferry's staffing complement recorded during an inspection of the vessel at any one time is wholly representative of that vessel's appropriate manning complement once the inspection has been completed.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is the Department's experience from subsequent inspections that the manning complement remains as inspected.

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give an indication of the progress of research on roll-on/roll-off ferry studies arising from the Herald of Free Enterprise disaster; and if he will give details of the techniques to be employed on such studies.

Mr. David Mitchell: Progress is continuing to be made under the guidance of the steering committee set up in October last year to administer, assist and advise the Department on the management of the three-year programme of research into ferry design. A copy of that programme has been deposited in the Library.

European Trader (Fire)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to whether properly trained radio officers were available for radio operations during the fire involving the vessel European Trader.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have not received the inspector's report of his investigation of this casualty, but I understand that a properly trained radio officer and in addition VHF radio facilities were available for radio operations during the fire involving the vessel European Trader.

London Assessment Studies

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made by the consultants carrying out the London assessment studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since December 1987 the consultants have been developing a range of options aimed at relieving the problems in the four study areas, identified in their stage 1 reports. They have now produced a preliminary set of options of varying feasibility, for further assessment. The suggestions put forward in the consultants' working papers represent a wide range of alternative approaches. They include different levels of investment and different combinations of public transport improvements, road schemes and management measures. It is not for us to take a view at this stage on the consultants' suggestions. They will complete stage 2 after consultation with the local boroughs, transport operators and police, evaluate them and report to us next summer.

Copies of the consultants' working papers can be purchased from them. I have arranged for copies to be available in the Library.

SOCIAL SERVICES

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the rate of HIV infection identified amongst groups of pregnant mothers in Hackney.

Mr. Newton: The Lancet of 18 June reports a study, on unnamed blood samples, of women attending City and Hackney health district antenatal clinics.

NHS Paymaster

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost of the consultant report by Touche Ross into the paymaster function of the National Health Service.

Mr. Tony Newton: £75,306·32.

Elderly Patients

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received concerning the problem of elderly mentally ill patients being mixed with elderly physically ill patients; and whether there has been any change in the guidance provided to local National Health Service management on the subject.

Mrs. Currie: Since March 1987 the Department has received 47 representations on this issue. There has been no change in the policy indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend on 7 June, at column 565.

Southern Derbyshire Health Authority

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much in lieu of rates is paid by the Southern Derbyshire health authority to Derbyshire county council, and what this sum would be if the county precept was reduced to 215p in the pound.

Mr. Newton: Southern Derbyshire health authority makes payments in lieu of rates to Derby city council, Amber Valley district council, Erewash borough council, South Derbyshire district council and West Derbyshire district council. In 1987-88 the total contribution was about £2·2 million. The health authority does not pay county rates directly; the local authorities concerned pay a proportion of what they receive to Derbyshire county council to cover the county rate. My hon. Friend may care to contact the chairman of Southern Derbyshire health authority for details of current payments and Derbyshire county council for information about the effects of changes in the county precept.

Royal Liverpool Hospital

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the reasons why visitors to the Royal Liverpool hospital are being charged to park their cars in the hospital car park; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Arrangements for car parking at hospitals are a matter for the district health authority concerned. It is perfectly legal for hospitals to charge for car parking, and some are doing so as a means of generating income. I understand, however, that because of the high incidence of vandalism to vehicles at the Royal Liverpool hospital a car park attendant has been appointed and the parking charge is to cover the cost. If the hon. Member requires more detail he may care to contact the district chairman of the Liverpool health authority.

Family Credit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children are in families receiving family credit.

Mr. Portillo: This information will not be available until the autumn.

Neonatal Intensive Care Facilities

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the transferral rate from Trafford and North Lincolnshire health authorities to other health districts for patients requiring neonatal intensive care facilities.

Mrs. Currie: Information is held centrally only for babies treated in special care baby units. This does not cover all neonatal intensive care.

In 1985 (the latest year for which information is available centrally), some 470 babies resident in Trafford and 500 babies resident in north Lincolnshire were treated in special care baby units. The transferral rates to other health authorities were 60 and 40 per cent. respectively.

Medical Physicists

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the number of current unfilled medical physicists posts for each health authority;

(2) what action his Department is taking to ensure that health authorities can retain and recruit medical physicists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Vacancy figures for medical physicist posts are not collected centrally.

The management side of the Scientific and Professional Staffs Whitley council has recently offered to increase the pay rates of scientists (including physicists) and clinical psychologists by 5·5 per cent. This offer is now being considered by the staff side. The management side has also agreed to undertake a review of the recruitment and retention of these staff in the light of service needs.

Pensions

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing average rates of pension payable in each member state of the European Community on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Scott: A copy of "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Community (position at 1 Janaury 1987)" published by the Department is available in the Library. This sets out the pension system in each member state of the European Community. Figures for average rates of pension are not available, since in most countries the pension is earnings related and calculated on the number and level of contributions during working life.

Section 64 Grants

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the awards given to voluntary organisations under section 64 procedure, for the current and preceding years, indicating which are new grants.

Mr. Portillo: Our section 64 grant scheme provides core grants to assist national organisations with their administration costs; and project grants to support projects which are experimental or innovative for a specific period. The scheme also provides a small number of capital grants.

The table lists all grants awarded in the financial year 1987-88 and those awarded in 1988-89 as at 22 June 1988. New grants are asterisked.

[1] Interim payments—Grants not yet settled.

[2] The same project run by different organisations.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent changes there have been in the criteria for awarding section 64 grants.

Mr. Portillo: None.

Disability (OPCS Survey)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to receive and to publish the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys survey on disability.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 8 June, at column 575.

Kirkby Kidney Fund

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the work carried out by the voluntary supporters of the Kirkby kidney fund;

(2) if he will take steps urgently to ensure that the Kirkby kidney fund is allowed to continue its work and that the difficulties caused by the Mersey regional health authority's refusal to help identify suitable acceptable accommodation are resolved.

Mrs. Currie: Supporters of the Kirkby kidney fund have worked very hard over the years to help those suffering from chronic renal failure, giving generously of their time and money. The Mersey regional health authority greatly appreciates and values the contribution they have made.

When the Kirkby kidney fund began its work dialysis facilities were scarce and similar units in a number of places across the region supported by voluntary workers were an appropriate solution at that time to provide additional facilities. Now no one needing dialysis in the Mersey region is waiting. As older and more ill patients are accepted it is being found that the priority must be provision of additional places in hospital premises where professional support is available. Patients not requiring hospital facilities are generally dialysed at home or by Continuous Ambulatory Peritoneal Dialysis which does not require regular attendance at a centre.

The regional health authority has suggested that the Kirkby kidney fund should review the help it provides. The hon. Member may care to contact the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority for further information.

HEA (Marketing Director)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the role of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), in the interviews to select and appoint a marketing director for the Health Education Authority; and what is his policy on ministerial participation in the appointment of public servants.

Mr. John Moore: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the recent appointment by the Health Education Authority of a commercial manager. The appointment procedures were entirely in the hands of the authority and my hon. Friend was not involved. I have powers of appointment to a large number of public authorities, but the recruitment of officers to an authority is normally a matter for the body in question.

DHA and RHA Chairmen

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names and addresses of each district and regional health authority chair; and if he will indicate whether or not their normal place of residence is within the boundaries of the health authority they chair.

Mrs. Currie: It is not our practice to disclose personal information of this sort. While most health authority chairmen have local connections, we do not regard residence within the area served by their health authority as essential to appointment.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the estimated amount that will be spent in publicising in the media and elsewhere the arrangements for transitional payments relating to loss of housing benefit; what national and provincial papers have been used for such advertising and how often; what has been the amount of advertising on commercial television; and how often such television advertisements have appeared so far.

Mr. Portillo: The first stage of an advertising campaign publicising changes to housing benefit capital rules and transitional payments appeared in the national press at the end of May. Advertisements appeared in:

the Sun
Today
the News of the World
the Daily Mail (two advertisements)
the Sunday Mirror
the People
the Daily Mirror
the Sunday Telegraph
the Daily Telegraph (two advertisements)
the Daily Express (two advertisements)
the Sunday Express
the Daily Record
the Sunday Post.

Total media and production expenditure for this campaign came to £263,000.

The estimated expenditure on the production of posters and leaflets which advertise and give information on the transitional payments is £241,000. Television advertising has not been used in this campaign.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the extent to which the increases in cash expenditure on housing benefit over the period 1982-83 to 1990-91 have been driven by other Government policy changes, identifying both the particular measure and the responsible Government Department.

Mr. Portillo: Housing benefit expenditure is affected by many different factors. Some of these, such as real terms increases in rents, will tend to increase expenditure and others, such as the recent fall in unemployment, will tend to reduce it. It is not possible meaningfully to isolate the effects of one factor from another or from general demographic and economic change over the period.

Details of the extent to which current plans take account of the proposed deregulation of private sector rents were given in my reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 11 February 1988, at column 349.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total cost of providing housing benefit for the financial years 1983-84 to 1987-88, broken down by payments in respect of rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates; what was the total number of claimants involved; and what is the current estimate for 1988-89.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The information requested in relation to benefit expenditure and the average number receiving benefit is given in the table. There is a significant overlap between the three categories tabled as most households receiving help with rent will also be receiving help with rates.

Housing Benefit: Costs and Numbers of Recipients

	Rent Rebates		Rent Allowances		Rate Rebates
	Cost £ million	Numbers 000's	Cost £ million	Numbers 000's	Cost £ million	Numbers 000's
1983-84	1,980	3,735	536	1,015	1,220	7,020
1984-85	2,145	3,745	688	1,080	1,360	7,230
1985-86	2,294	3,710	835	1,150	1,510	7,020
1986-87	2,421	3,720	947	1,180	1,650	7,050
1987-88	2,563	3,760	1,057	1,250	1,760	7,030
1988-89	2,740	3,430	1,130	1,055	1,390	5,845

Note: The information is taken from the public expenditure White Paper of January 1988 (tables 15.1 and 16.6).

The 1988-89 estimate takes account of the expected changes in case load and expenditure arising from the change to the housing benefit capital rules, the effect of the budget income tax changes and the latest information on rent and rates.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for the number of people claiming unemployment benefit with children.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not available.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for the number of people claiming invalidity benefit with children.

Mr. Portillo: At April 1986 there were 105,000 people receiving invalidity benefit with increases for dependent children.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in each of the three categories mentioned in regulation 70(2) of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987, persons from abroad, persons with notional income and seasonal workers, were receiving income support or supplementary benefit at the latest date for which information is available; in how many such cases benefit was awarded during the latest period of 12 months for which information is available; and what is his estimate of the additional cost of paying income support at the full rate to persons in each of those categories.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, in calculating the capital of a hospital patient for the purpose of entitlement to income support, the resettlement benefit which will become payable on discharge from hospital is taken into account.

Mr. Portillo: Resettlement benefit is an income resource payable on discharge from hospital and is disregarded under income support. Any amount of the benefit that remains after the period for which it is payable has expired will be treated as capital.

Social Fund

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many local offices of his Department had spent on community care grants from the social fund, by the end of May (a) nothing, (b) up to 1 per cent. of their budget for 1988-89, (c) between 1 and 2 per cent., (d) between 2 and 4 per cent., (e) between 4 and 6 per cent., and (f) more than 6 per cent.

Mr. Portillo: Details of social fund budget allocations to local offices for community care grants in 1988-89 and the budget balances remaining at the end of May 1988 are in the Library.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many social fund inspectors have been appointed; at what cost to public funds; how many of them are engaged full-time as inspectors; how many reviews they have undertaken; and what other duties have been assigned to them.

Mr. Portillo: I am advised by the social fund commissioner that she has appointed 40 social fund inspectors, one of whom is engaged on a part-time basis. The cost to public funds is about £800,000 per annum. Social fund inspectors have so far received 53 cases for review and have completed 23. No other duties have been assigned to them.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what were the numbers and amounts of budgeting loans, crisis loans and community care grants made by social fund officers in each local office and in the whole of Great Britain in May 1988, analysed by client groups, within application purpose, within application type;

(2) how many applications for community care grants were refused by social fund officers at each local office in May 1988, analysed by reasons for refusal, broken down by application purpose within client group.

Mr. Portillo: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the social fund budget forecasts for each local office for June 1988.

Mr. Portillo: Local offices do not have monthly budgets. Details of the annual budget allocations for every local office are in the Library. Local office managers draw up monthly profiles of how they expect to spend their budget throughout the year.

Such profiles are an internal management tool only, designed to help local managers operate the social fund efficiently. They do not represent rigid budget targets or limits.

I regret that the individual local office profiles are not available centrally.

Community Care

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will amend the social fund manual to make it clear that, where part of an applicant's needs can be met out of capital over £500 or money available from other sources, a community care grant up to the suggested maximum amounts in annex 4, or more if appropriate, should be made for the balance of the amount needed.

Mr. Portillo: The Social Fund Manual refers both to the relevant legal provisions under which an award may be made and to Secretary of State's direction 27, which relates to the £500 capital rule. However, it will be amended at the earliest opportunity to clarify the effects of both the £500 capital rule and the requirement to take into account in full other resources available to meet the applicant's need.

Attendance Allowance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in what circumstances it is permissible for doctors to charge patients for reports in connection with claims for attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: Fees for medical reports commissioned by the Attendance Allowance Board, or its delegated doctors, are paid by the Department in accordance with a scale of charges negotiated and agreed with organisations representing the medical profession. Where a disabled person chooses to submit a medical report in support of a claim to attendance allowance, the doctor should provide this free of charge if the disabled person is under observation or receiving treatment and the information required is reasonably incidental to that observation or treatment. If, however, the doctor has to examine the disabled person or needs to undertake a considerable amount of work in making extracts from case notes for the report, the doctor can charge a fee.

Kidney Dialysis

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many kidney patients requiring dialysis are now being treated on average per million of the population; and if he will publish the figures for each of the regional authorities;

(2) how many patients in total are receiving kidney dialysis; and what is the rate for new cases of renal failure to be accepted for this treatment per million of the population;

(3) how many persons are receiving dialysis or are in possession of a functioning kidney transplant.

Mrs. Currie: According to the latest information published by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, a total of 13,694 patients, representing 242 per million population, were receiving renal replacement therapy in the United Kingdom at 31 December 1986. Of this total, 6,890 (122 patients per million population) were receiving dialysis and 6,804 (120 patients per million population) had a functioning transplant.

Within England the number and rate per million population of patients on dialysis at 31 December 1986 is estimated to be as follows:

Regional health authority	Number on dialysis	Rate per million population
Northern	487	157
Yorkshire	418	116
Trent	711	155
East Anglian	220	116
North West Thames	362	103
North East Thames	676	183
South East Thames	536	149
South West Thames	156	52
Wessex	192	69
Oxford	280	117
South Western	397	128
West Midlands	611	118
Mersey	233	97
North Western	504	126

These figures need to be interpreted with caution because patients sometimes cross administrative boundaries to receive treatment: these patient flows can sometimes be substantial, as in the case of South West and South East Thames, which have shared services.

Approximately 47 new patients per million population were accepted for renal replacement therapy in the United Kingdom in 1986. I understand that figures for 1987 should be available within the next month.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) who decides the number of renal cases to be treated by dialysis in each regional health authority; and what guidance or additional finance is provided by his Department to assist in the cost of this treatment;

(2) in what circumstances regional health authorities are empowered to deny renal treatment to sufferers on grounds of age; and what criteria are issued by his Department giving guidance on this matter.

Mrs. Currie: The planning and allocation of resources to renal services is the responsibility of health authorities. It is a matter for clinical decision whether or not treatment should be provided to any particular patient within the resources available to health authorities. However, in recent years health authorities have given priority to increasing facilities for the treatment of end stage renal failure. Data provided to the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, covering an estimated 84 per cent. of the new patients accepted for renal replacement therapy in 1986, show that approximately 47 per cent. of patients were aged 55 years or over.

Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table, in a similar format to table 15.1 of Cm 288—II, showing for each expenditure line the percentage of expenditure for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91 which is demand led.

Mr. Scott: All expenditure on social security benefits is demand-led, other than for elements of the social fund from 1988-89 onwards. Those elements of social fund expenditure which are demand-led represent about a quarter of planned expenditure on the benefit in those years. Expenditure on administration is not demand-led.

Child Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of raising child benefit in April 1989 in line with the projection of the retail prices index between September 1987 and September 1988.

Mr. Scott: Increases in the rate of child benefit are not statutorily linked to movements in the index of retail prices and, even for those benefits which are, the calculations are made on an "historical" and not a "projected" basis. Based on the assumptions in Cm. 288 (chapter 15, paragraph 37 and table 15.20) published in January 1988, the annual net cost of uprating child benefit by the projected increase in the retail prices index between September 1987 and September 1988 would be about £160 million.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the estimated number of people who have taken out private medical insurance in England and Wales;

(2) if he will give the estimated number of persons including dependants, who have some form of private medical insurance, through their employers;

(3) if he will give the estimated average cost of treatment per person per annum provided under private medical insurance.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the average cost of treatment and the number of people with company insurance is not collected centrally. The estimated number of people in the United Kingdom covered by private medical insurance was 5·25 million at 31 December 1986 (latest available data).

Junior Doctors (Hours)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy that additional junior doctors will be employed and funds provided for this purpose to ensure that there are no closures of acute hospital services, solely as a result of the initiative to reduce the number of hours worked by junior doctors.

Mr. Newton: Our objective, which has been endorsed by the leaders of the medical profession, is to eliminate regular rota commitments requiring junior hospital doctors to be on duty on average for more than one night and one weekend in three wherever resources and the needs of patients permit. We believe it is preferable for health authorities to devote the increased resources available to them to the expansion of the consultant grade and to the development of new patterns of medical staffing which are less heavily reliant on practitioners in the training grades.

Contact Lenses

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether prescriptions from opticians can include the prescribing of cleaning fluids for contact lenses.

Mr. Newton: Opticians are not permitted by their terms of service under the general ophthalmic services to write prescriptions for cleaning fluids for contact lenses. Patients have to purchase such fluids, like the lenses, privately.

The position in the hospital eye service is different, in that where contact lenses are prescribed because they are clinically necessary the HES also supplies the cleaning fluids.

Consultants and Junior Doctors

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number of consultants and junior doctors employed in each district health authority in England and Wales in each year since 1979 to the last date for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: Information is not collected centrally for all medical staff groups in the form requested. Information about doctors is collected by employing authorities, which for consultants are regional health authorities, district health authorities designated for undergraduate teaching purposes, and special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals; for senior registrars are regional health authorities and special health authorities only; and for other junior doctors are district health authorities and special health authorities. Because district health authorities were established only in 1982, comparable data about the staff groups mentioned are not available for the period requested. Information about medical staffing in each region at 30 September is published annually in "Hospital Medical Staff—England and Wales: Regional Tables", copies of which are in the Library.

Benefit Fraud Investigations

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East on 20 June, Official Report, column 402, he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's research which provides the basis for the assumption that a person voluntarily withdrawing a claim to unemployment benefit following a fraud investigation refrains from claiming benefit for an average of 22 weeks.

Mr. Portillo: The study which determined the basis for the calculation of benefit savings arising from anti-fraud activity was conducted by the Department's operational research services. A copy of its report, entitled "Evaluation of Specialist Claims Control and Comparison With Other Types of Anti-Fraud Work" was placed in the Library on 12 June 1985, together with a detailed statement of the conclusions reached on the recommendations made.

Sickle Cell Disease and Thalassaemia

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department is taking to improve public awareness of, and screening, counselling and treatment for, sickle cell disease and thalassaemia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: In view of the importance Ministers attach to work in this area, I met representatives of The Sickle Cell Society, the Organisation of Sickle Cell Anaemia Research (OSCAR) and the Sickle Cell Anaemia Relief Foundation (SCARF) on 23 June to discuss a number of matters which included

—the uptake of the haemoglobinopathy card (that is the cards for those with sickle cell anaemia or Thalassaemia, or with the trait for those diseases) launched in April this year

—a letter which the Department is today issuing to health authorities, seeking information about the screening and counselling they provide for people at risk from these diseases, to give us a baseline of information for a review of policy in these areas. (A copy of this letter is being placed in the Library)

—public and professional awareness of these serious blood disorders and the need for a future programme of work to increase this

—future co-ordination of voluntary work on the haemoglobinopathies

—future grant aid for the voluntary bodies.

The SCS and OSCAR already receive grants of £15,000 pa. I am glad to announce that the grant to the Thalassaemia Society, which is to have a meeting with me later this year, is being increased to £15,000 to help with their important work in providing information about the condition and support for sufferers and their families.

Fluvoxamine Maleate

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the adverse side effects of the drug fluvoxamine maleate; if any fatalities resulting from its use have been reported to him; if he proposes to take any action to restrict its use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Reports by doctors of suspected adverse reactions to fluvoxamine maleate were summarised by the Committee on Safety of Medicines in "Current Problems 22", issued to doctors in May (a copy is in the Library). To date the committee has received six reports of suspected reactions to fluvoxamine where the patient has died from that event. However, subsequent analysis suggests that while two of the deaths may be attributable to recognised side effects of other drugs, none appears to have been caused by fluvoxamine. The manufacturers of fluvoxamine were informed and have written to all doctors to tell them of these findings.

After discussion with the licensing authority, Duphar Laboratories has amended the data sheet for fluvoxamine to limit the indications for this drug to "the treatment of depressive illness", and to contain an up-to-date description of the known side effects. The revised data sheet was sent to general practitioners in April. While fluvoxamine has a different mode of action to most other anti-depressants—and therefore a different adverse reactions profile—there is no evidence that the drug is less safe than alternative anti-depressants.

Social Security Acts

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what provisions of the Social Security Acts 1986 and 1988 are not yet in force; and what are the expected commencement dates.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 17 June 1988]: There are no provisions of the 1986 Act yet to come into force. The provisions of the 1988 Act which are yet to come into force are as follows:

		Expected commencement date
Section 2(i)-(2)	Retirement Allowance	April 1989
Section 4	Young persons	12 September 1988
Section 5	Annual Review of Child Benefit	No commencement is planned
Section 6	Short-term Benefits	2 October 1988
Section 7	Unemployment Benefit and Occupational Pension	1 January 1989

Dental Services

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action his Department takes to monitor the service provided by dentists to their patients.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Monitoring of the general dental service is primarily undertaken by the Dental Estimates Board, which is responsible for the approval of treatment and authorisation of payment. The board may approve treatment or authorise payment only if it is satisfied that that treatment is or was proper and necessary to secure the patient's dental fitness or to maintain dental health, and that it has been completed to a satisfactory standard. In considering requests for its prior approval, or claims for payment for treatment provided, the board may seek further information from the dentist or may ask an officer of the Department's dental reference service to examine the patient. The dental reference is also responsible for checking the quality of treatment provided through the examination of a random sample of patients who have recently received treatment under the general dental service. Dental Officers examined 28,143 patients in 1987-88.

Clause 12 of the Health and Medicines Bill proposes increased powers for the Dental Estimates Board which will assist it in monitoring general dental practice for the purpose of preventing and detecting unnecessary treatment or other abuse; the clause also proposes a change of the Board's name—to the "Dental Practice Board"—so as to better reflect its functions.

In addition, family practitioner committees may also seek the examination of a patient by a dental officer if a complaint is received from a patient about general dental services.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many patients are covered by family practitioner committees in (a) Sheffield, (b) Liverpool, (c) Manchester, (d) Birmingham and (e) Leeds;

(2) if he will list the amount allocated for administrative purposes to family practitioner committees in (a) Sheffield, (b) Liverpool, (c) Manchester, (d) Birmingham and (e) Leeds.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Following is the latest available information, as requested:

Family Practitioner Committee (FPC)	[1] Allocation £000	[2] No. of patients 000
Sheffield	471·8	549·3
Liverpool	594·2	535·8
Manchester	560·6	511·2
Birmingham	951·1	1,104·5
Leeds	653·6	738·4

[1] Revenue allocations for administrations, 1988-89.

[2] Patients registered with a doctor in contract with the FPC in 1986-87.

Revenue allocations, by agreement with representatives of FPCs, are not made on the basis of the number of patients registered with doctors nor on figures specifically related to population.

Allocations are based, historically, on expenditure by health authorities before 1 April 1985 on administration by FPCs of services provided not only by doctors but also by dentists, pharmacists and opticians. The historical figures have subsequently been adjusted:

a. to reduce the effect of any anomalies in the original figure negotiated with the local health authorities';
b. to reflect staff savings after computerisation;
c. in respect of movements in pay and prices;
d. in respect of changes in rent or the effect of purchasing new offices; and
e. to allow, in the current year, for growth at an average rate of 5½ per cent. in real terms.

ENVIRONMENT

Surrey Docks

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the price paid for land vested in the London Docklands development corporation in the Surrey docks.

Mr. Trippier: There are outstanding compensation issues in relation to this land. The total price has not yet therefore been established. I will write to the hon. Member when these matters are finally settled.

Planning Decisions

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning decisions taken by local authorities have been sustained, and how many have been overruled, on appeal to him in each of the last five financial years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The number of planning appeals decided and allowed in each of the last five financial years was as follows:

Year	Appeals decided	Appeals allowed
1983-84	11,119	3,612
1984-85	12,714	4,166
1985-86	14,130	5,581
1986-87	15,613	6,208

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent women have been under-represented in the higher grades of his Department; what measures he has taken to reduce that under-representation; when such measures were taken; and what results they have produced.

Mr. Ridley: About one third of the administative staff in my Department at executive office level and above are women but the proportion reduces in the higher grades. Measures taken to reduce under-representation over the last few years include advertising opportunities for part-time working, job-sharing and career breaks; women-only development training; encouragement of women to become promotion and recruitment board members; and participating in a central training review and promotion monitoring projects.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent black and Asian staff have been under-represented in his Department; what measures he has taken to reduce that under-representation; when such measures were taken; and what results they have produced.

Mr. Ridley: The Department completed its staff-in-post ethnic origin survey in March 1988. Analysis of that survey and the recruitment monitoring survey which began in July 1987 is being carried out to see whether, and if so where, under-representation occurs. Measures already taken during 1987 and 1988 to reduce possible under-representation include using the ethnic minority press for advertising local vacancies; participating in feature articles to publicise the Department's work; taking part in schools liaison; using inner-city job centres and other outreach work; and participating in a central training review and promotion monitoring projects.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring exercises he has carried out in accordance with the codes of the Equal Opportunities Commission and of the Commission for Racial Equality, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has carried out monitoring exercises in the area of part-time working and job-sharing; reinstatement; special leave; selection for training; recruitment; and the ethnic origin of staff.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advertisements he has placed in the ethnic minority press; when; and with what results.

Mr. Ridley: My Department does not maintain a central record of recruitment advertising. For those campaigns for which details are readily available, the results were as follows:

Campaign date	Newspaper	Applications mentioning the newspaper	Total applications
September 1987	The Voice	155	859
	Garavi Gujarat	17
April 1988	The Gleaner	22	66

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have appointed two equal opportunity officers, one for the Property Services Agency and one who serves the rest of my Department and the Department of Transport.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Ridley: Numbers and percentages of women are as follows, as at 31 May 1988:

Grade band	Number	per cent.
1 to 4	6	7
5	18	9
6	19	5
7	119	8
8 and 9	662	10
10	946	15
11 and 12	5,552	68
TOTAL	7,292	31

Numbers and percentages of ethnic minority staff are available, as at 31 March 1988, only for those staff who have responded to the voluntary monitoring surveys. Figures are as follows:

1 to 6	8	1½
7	17	1½
8	41	2
9	81	3
10	171	4
11	282	9
TOTAL	777	3½

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to ensure that there is equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Ridley: The policy of equal opportunities is well established. Specific steps include publicity for the Government policy statements on the subject; the appointment of equal opportunities officers; provision for part-time working and job-sharing; special leave arrangements for maternity, domestic and other reasons; conduct of surveys of ethnic origin; management and special skills training courses for women; and measures to reduce the risk of discrimination in recruitment and promotion procedures.

Town and Country Planning

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities and local authority associations concerning the effect of the Town and Country Planning General Development (Amendment) Order 1981.

Mr. Waldegrave: We published consultation papers in January 1987 and February 1988 about the amendment and consolidation of the General Development Order 1977 as subsequently amended. Local planning authorities have made a number of representations about permitted development rights for householders. We intend to lay an amended and consolidated order later in the year.

Incinerated Sewage Sludge

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any information on plans to import incinerated sewage sludge from the United States for dumping in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no information that there are any plans to import incinerated sludge from the United States.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the tonnage of hazardous waste imported into the United Kingdom for dumping in 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: Figures for special waste imported in 1987 are not yet available.

Disabled People (Property Reform)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what safeguards he proposes under the provisions of the Housing Bill for disabled and housebound tenants of local authority properties, to vote in any possible ballot concerning proposed change in the ownership of such properties; and whether, in the event of such tenants being unable to vote, they will have been deemed to have given their assent to the proposed change in ownership.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend intends to provide in regulations made under clause 95 of the Housing Bill that tenants consulted on a proposal for transfer under tenants' choice should, if they wish, be able to vote by post. We intend as far as possible to ensure that all qualifying tenants are put in a position to cast their vote, and to do so on a fully informed basis. The means by which we propose to achieve this include an informal, preliminary phase of tenant consultation to be run by the Housing Corporation; a code of practice, compliance with which would be a condition of the applicant's approval, requiring applicants to inform tenants as key points in the procedures were reached; prescribing in regulations the form in which information is put to tenants during the formal consultation under clause 95; and a requirement on both applicants and the independent tellers that they will be obliged to employ to use best endeavours to see that the material is received and its significance understood by tenants eligible to vote. Applicants would be able to proceed with an acquisition unless the number of tenants voting to continue as tenants of their existing landlord exceeded 50 per cent. of those eligible to be consulted under clause 95. No secure tenant will be obliged to change landlord under tenants' choice against his or her will.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quantities of (a) chlorofluorocarbons and (b) chlorofluorocarbon substitutes have been used annually during the last five years.

Mr. Moynihan: In regard to the use of chlorofluorocarbons 11, 12, 113 and 114 I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 29 March at columns 367 and 368. Figures for the use of other chlorofluorocarbons and of substitutes for them are not available.

Hurricane Damage

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, columns 138-42, he will show for each outer London borough not listed (a) whether a claim for hurricane damage has been submitted and (b) whether such a claim is expected by his Department.

Mr. Howard: The outer London boroughs referred to in my answer of 14 June were the only ones to have submitted claims up to 23 June 1988 at columns 138-42. The Department has knowledge of no other claims for hurricane damage.

House Prices

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the average percentage rises in house prices, by region, annually in the last 10 years and the current average house price for each region.

Mrs. Roe: The average annual percentage rises in house prices and the average house prices in the first quarter of 1988, the latest available period, are given in the following table.

Annual Average Percentage Increases in House Prices

Green Belt (Chigwell)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to support the efforts of Epping Forest district council in any planning appeal to protect the green belt against encroachment made on land at Chigwell owned by a developer, and occupied by caravans and squatters.

Mr. Waldegrave: If an appeal is lodged in respect of the Chigwell site it will be determined on its merits, with regard to all material considerations, including the Government's commitment to protect the green belts from inappropriate development.

Publicly Owned Land

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land remains on the registers of unused and under-used publicly owned land; and how much land was added to and removed from the registers during 1987.

Mr. Trippier: At the end of May 1988, there were some 88,400 acres of land on the land registers. During 1987, some 7,700 acres were added to the registers, and some 15,500 acres were removed. On 18 May, following my answer to a question about regional assistance from my hon. Friend, the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Hicks) at column 931-2 I told the House that almost half the land added to the register during 1987 was directed by the Department to be sold. In fact, as the figures show, the land added to the registers during 1987 was equal to almost half of all the land that was removed during that year, which included land sold as a result of directions.

Housing Associations (Lettings)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the total number of housing association dwellings for letting which have been made available through a combination of housing association grant and private sector funding.

Mrs. Roe: The figures available are for schemes approved by the Housing Corporation in 1987-88, the first year of the pilot programme of mixed funding. These schemes will provide 1,258 units for letting and 579 bed spaces in hostels or other shared accommodation.

Housing Associations (Subsidies)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the total cost of subsidies to housing associations in the form of *(a)*housing association grant, (b) revenue deficit grant and (c) hostel deficit grant in each of the years from 1985 to 1987, and the estimated recovery of subsidy through grant redemption fund in the years for which the information is available.

Mrs. Roe: The information requested is as follows:

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Housing association grant	919·1	809·4	750·1
Revenue deficit grant	10·7	11·4	12·2
Hostel deficit grant	4·5	6·6	9·5
Grant redemption fund payments	(5·2)	(9·5)	(14·7)

Homelessness

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the number of homeless households accepted by local authorities in England whose homelessness resulted from mortgage arrears, and (b) the percentage of all homeless households which these represented, in each of the years from 1979 to 1987.

Mrs. Roe: Latest estimates are as follows:

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities where more than 20, 50 and 100 homeless households, respectively, were living in bed and breakfast hotels in England, at the end of June 1979, December 1981, December 1983, December 1985 and at the latest date for which information is available.

Mrs. Roe: The information reported by local authorities is in the following table:

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on how many mortgagors (a) with a building society mortgage and (b) with another source of mortgage, were estimated to be (i) at least one month in arrears with their mortgage repayments, (ii) at least six months in arrears with their mortgage repayments and (iii) subject to repossession action by the mortgagee in each of the years from 1979 to 1987.

Mrs. Roe: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. Figures for building societies and local authorities are below. The corresponding information is not available for other lending institutions.

Housing Association Dwellings

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the total number of housing association dwellings completed, including newly-built and rehabilitated dwellings for letting (a) on a fair rent, (b) on a shared ownership lease and (c) as an assured tenancy for each of the regions and for England as a whole in the years 1976-77 to 1987-88.

Mrs. Roe: Information on housing association completions available on the basis of standard statistical regions does not distinguish between homes for rent and for other tenures. The table therefore shows total completions for England, and fair rent completions funded by the Housing Corporation broken down by corporation region. Prior to 1987-88 registered housing associations did not provide homes to let on assured tenancy terms so the number of assured tenancy completions in the period was negligible. Provision for housing associations to build or rehabilitate homes for sale on shared ownership terms was first introduced following the Housing Act 1980 and, although no regional breakdown is available, information on total sales since 1981-82 is also shown below.

Rents

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the average level of (a) local authority rents, (b) fair rents registered for unfurnished housing association lettings, (c) fair rents registered for other unfurnished lettings and (d) fair rents registered for all unfurnished lettings in England in each of the years from 1979 to 1987, indicating the percentage increase in each on an annual cumulative basis; and how these increases compare with the movement of the retail prices index over that same period.

Mrs. Roe: The figures on local authority rents, the average rents registered by rent officers and the movements in the retail price index from 1979 to 1987 are as follows:

(a) Average weekly unrebated rents at April for local authority dwellings

	Average rent £	Percentage increase over year
1979	6·41	—	—
1980	7·70	20	20

1986	21·44	19·85	20·69	3	80
1987	22·87	20·60	21·81	4	87

[1] Service charges, if any, are included.

[2] Registered rents for private regulated tenancies only.

The mix of properties for which rents are registered varies from year to year for a number of reasons: for example, extension of decontrol in 1981; the reduction from 3 to 2 years in the minimum period for re-registration which led to re-registrations in 1983 of rents previously registered in 1980 and 1981. Therefore, comparison of averages for consecutive years do not properly reflect rent movements. Better estimates of rent movements are derived from previous and new registered rents for tenancies where there has been no material change in terms or in the physical condition. For properties with rents fixed in 1979, 1982, 1984 and 1986, the estimated percentage increases are:

	per cent. increase in period	per cent. increase annualised	per cent. increase in period	per cent. increase annualised	per cent. increase in period	per cent. increase annualised
1979-82	48	14	50	14	49	14
1982-84	18	9	19	9	18	9
1984-86	15	7	17	8	16	8

The estimated annualised increases for properties with rents fixed in 1987 were 8 per cent. 9 per cent. and 9 per cent. respectively for unfurnished housing association tenancies, other unfurnished tenancies and all unfurnished tenancies.

Housing Revenue Account Dwellings

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the value of the Exchequer subsidies and rate fund contributions, respectively, to English local authority housing revenue account dwellings in total and on a per dwelling basis for the years 1978-79 to 1987-88.

Mrs. Roe: Housing Subsidy up to 1980-81 was paid under a different system. Information for the years 1981-82 to 1987-88 inclusive, has already been given in answer to the hon. Member's question on 10 June, column 736. My hon. Friend, the Minister for Housing and Planning, wrote to him on 20 June to correct two computer-produced errors in that answer. The corrected information is reproduced below.

Note: Not all local authorities in receipt of Exchequer subsidy are also making contributions from the general rate fund. Note also that the figures for main housing subsidy are those for authorities' total entitlement each year; they exclude any adjustments in respect of prior years.

Assured Tenancies

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many assured tenancies of (a) newly built and (b) newly improved properties have been created in each of the years since 1981 in England.

Mrs. Roe: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of assured tenancy lettings of newly built property on 1 April each year since 1983 was:

	Number
1983	44
1984	224
1985	405
1987	2,993

The assured tenancy scheme was extended in January 1987 to include newly refurbished property. By 1 April 1987, five refurbished dwellings had been let under assured tenancies. A survey to establish the number of assured tenancies at 1 April 1988 is currently taking place.

Council House Sales

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the value of discounts to tenants acquiring council housing under the right to buy (a) in England and (b) in each region, in each year from 1981 to 1987.

Mrs. Roe: The available information is given below.

House Purchase

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the average incomes of first-time house buyers and the average prices of houses in (a) England and (b) each region, in each of the years from 1979 to 1987.

Mrs. Roe: The average income of first-time house buyers and the average price of houses in England in each year from 1979 to 1987, based on a survey of building society mortgages, were as follows:

	Average income of first time house buyers £	Average price of houses £
1979	6,276	20,068
1980	7,760	23,957
1981	8,268	24,590
1982	8,599	24,019
1983	8,924	27,040
1984	9,803	29,881
1985	10,553	31,984
1986	11,846	37,591
1987	12,680	41,961

Figures for each region from 1979 to 1986 appear in table 10.11 (a) of "Housing Construction and Statistics 1976-1986", a copy of which is available in the Library. Corresponding figures for 1987 are as follows:

	Average income of first time house buyers £	Average price of houses £
Northern	10,185	27,275
Yorkshire and Humberside	10,107	27,747
East Midlands	10,854	31,808

Incomes (Statistics)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his latest estimate of the average annual income of (a) home owners who own their own home outright, (b) owner-occupiers buying their homes with a mortgage, (c) council tenants, (d) housing association tenants and (e) tenants of private landlords;

(2) if he will publish a table giving the most recent information available on the gross average household income of local authority tenants, housing association tenants, private tenants and owner occupiers, with and without mortgages (a) for households in employment, (b) for pensioner households and (c) for other households.

Mrs. Roe: The most recent estimates of gross average household income are from the 1986 family expenditure survey. The estimates for England are shown in the table.

Council Houses

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average cost of a newly built council dwelling in England in 1987, and what were (a) the annual debt charges for the average dwelling and (b) the average rent charged for new dwellings completed.

Mrs. Roe: Figures for the overall costs of providing a council house in 1987 are not available, but the average construction cost, excluding land costs, site works and estate costs, of a council dwelling in 1987 is provisionally estimated at £22,000. No figure is available for the annual debt charges for the average new council dwelling. According to information provided by local authorities to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, the average rent in April 1987 charged for new council dwellings completed in 1986-87 was £19·20 a week.

Housing Revenue Accounts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the total cost of subsidies to local authority housing revenue accounts for each year from 1967-68, at 1987 prices (a) from the Exchequer and (b) from the general rate fund.

Mrs. Roe: The annual cost of housing subsidy and of rate fund contributions for the years 1971-72 onwards (at prevailing prices) can be found in the White Papers "The Government's Expenditure Plans", starting in 1976-77.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the most recent estimate of the number of homeless households occupying bed-and-breakfast accommodation who have been placed there by local authorities; and what is (a) the average weekly cost of the accommodation and (b) the estimated total annual cost.

Mrs. Roe: Latest estimates of the number of households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation appear in table 4(a) of "Local authorities' action under the homeless provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the first quarter of 1988. Supplementary Tables", which is in the Library.

For estimates of the average costs per household day I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 21 January at column 826.

The estimated total expenditure on bed-and-breakfast accommodation by English local authorities in 1986-87 is £97 million gross and £75 million net.

Local Authority Rents

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the average annual rents for local authority dwellings for each year since 1967, shown at 1987 prices.

Mrs. Roe: Estimates of financial year average unrebated rents for English local authorities, revalued to 1987 prices using the retail prices index, are as follows:

1967-68	579
1968-69	600

Home Ownership

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the average annual prices of dwellings purchased by owner-occupiers for each year since 1967, shown at 1987 prices, by region.

Mrs. Roe: The figures requested, based on building society mortgage completions, are only available since 1969 and are shown in the table.

Mr. Maurice Tucker

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what terms and conditions Mr. Maurice Tucker, a civil servant at his Department is seconded indefinitely to Thamesmead Town Ltd., to act as company secretary and a non executive director; and at what cost to the Exchequer this secondment is made.

Mr. Ridley: Mr. Maurice Tucker was seconded to Thamesmead Town on 1 December 1986 and returns to the Department on 31 December 1988. While on secondment, Mr. Tucker remains a civil servant and is paid the salary applicable to his grade—grade 7. The company has leased a car for his use during the secondment. From 1 December 1986 to 26 July 1987, before Thamesmead Town was fully operational, Mr. Tucker was paid by the Department as a grade 7 Officer. Since 27 July 1987, his salary costs have been reimbursed to the Department by Thamesmead Town.

Canary Wharf

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the nature of the proposals made to the London Docklands development corporation by various interested developers for the Canary wharf site, other than the first Canary Wharf Development Company until the signing of the option agreement with the latter company in May 1985.

Mr. Trippier: Prior to the signing of the option agreement, two existing buildings on Canary wharf had been occupied. Three other proposals had been made, two of which were office schemes which have since proceeded on other sites. The third was for an hotel, negotiations for which scheme were terminated.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the nature of the land use proposal made by developers of the site of Canary wharf, other than the first Canary Wharf Development Company, at the time when the interest in the main development was taken over by Olympia and York, stating the number of proposals concerned and the likely employment consequences for the site of those alternative possibilities.

Mr. Trippier: When Olympia and York took over the Canary wharf scheme there were no other proposals for the site.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state any expenditure or financial obligation entered into or discharged by the London Docklands development corporation with any developer, other than the first Canary Wharf Development Company, in respect of commitments or agreements made during May 1985; and if he will state their nature and amount.

Mr. Trippier: There were none.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate in the Official Report details of each chief executive of the London Docklands development corporation and all principal officers directly responsible to him from 1 April 1987 to date, including all acting and temporary appointments, and for each post or appointments, as relevant, the principal duties and responsibilities, the period over which the appointment was held and the reasons for the post being vacant.

Mr. Trippier: The LDDC's staffing and organisation are matters for the board.

Local Authorities (Company Interests)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was paid to Coopers and Lybrand for its specialist advice commissioned in connection with the consultation paper on local authorities' interests in companies.

Mr. Ridley: Thirteen thousand, eight hundred pounds plus VAT.

Sport (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the fact that the British Sports Association for the Disabled was not on the list of persons and bodies consulted about the paper "Competition in the Management of Local Authority Sport and Recreation Facilities", what provisions he is now making for the disabled to take part in the consultation process.

Mr. Moynihan: The list of consultees attached to the Consultation Paper were those to whom the document was sent on publication in September 1987. Included on that list were the Central Council of Physical Recreation, as the umbrella body for governing bodies of sport, and the Sports Council. Subsequently, on 2 October 1987 copies of the paper were sent to over 60 individual governing bodies including the British Sports Association for the Disabled (BSAD). If we decide to proceed with competition in the management of local authority sport and leisure facilities we shall be undertaking further consultation on the necessary order before it is laid in Parliament. The BSAD would then be consulted again.

Blue Dolphin Fish Restaurants Ltd.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the implications for the operation and effectiveness of part II of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954 of certain leases granted to Blue Dolphin fish and chip shops in north Devon and other parts of the United Kingdom by Blue Dolphin Fish Restaurants Ltd.; what response he has made to those representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: My hon. Friend's representations have been received, but no others. The terms of a commercial lease are a matter for free negotiation between prospective landlord and tenant, preferably with the aid of professional advice. Our 1985 review of part II of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954 concluded that there were no pressing reasons to amend the legislation which was generally working well. If a party to a lease has reason go suppose that the other party is acting outside the general law the appropriate action is through the courts.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Copeland of 13 May, Official Report, column 267, he will now publish full community charge exemplifications for 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: I did so on 23 June 1988.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is still intended that community service volunteers who live-in with disabled people to enable them to live at home will have to pay the community charge.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 24 June 1988]: A Government amendment to the Local Government Finance Bill, which would exempt voluntary care workers from the personal community charge, was tabled on 24 June.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

All-night Sittings (Costs)

30. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the cost in overtime payments to staff of the House as a result of the all-night sitting during the Housing Bill on Tuesday 14 and Wednesday 15 June.

Mr. Beith: It is too soon after the event for all applications for overtime worked as a result of that all-night sitting to have been received. Moreover, this information is not normally available centrally in the form requested because responsibility for overtime lies not with the Fees Office but with individual Heads of Department. Authorised submissions to the Fees Office for payment of overtime, whilst specifying the duration of work, do not indicate the period covered. In the case of the exceptionally long sitting on 14 June, however, I have asked the Fees Office to provide me with as much information as it is able to put together, and I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Licensing Act 1964

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will seek to repeal sections 66 and 67 of the Licensing Act 1964.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have at present no plans to do so.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims are received annually under the criminal injuries compensation scheme; how many of these claims are successful; and what is the average length of time for processing such claims.

Mr. John Patten: The latest annual report of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board (Cm. 265), a copy of which is in the Library, shows that in the year 1986-87 the board received 42,301 applications and resolved 29,605 in the main applications made in earlier years, 21,925 by monetary award. The board does not calculate the average length of time taken to deal with applications, but the report shows the percentage of cases resolved within certain periods: half of those resolved in 1986-87 were resolved within a year of application.

Jurors

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to provide support and protection to jurors who are subjected to intimidation during and following trials, in the light of the recent incidents at the trials of football hooligans.

Mr. John Patten: Protection of jurors is an operational matter for chief officers of police. They are aware of the dangers, and if necessary seek the authority of the trial judge to provide police protection to prevent interference. Acts calculated to prejudice the administration of justice are punishable as contempt of court, or may amount to attempts to pervert the course of justice. We are satisfied that the police and judges have the necessary powers.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes were operating in Waveney in (a) 1983-84 and (b) 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the chief constable of Suffolk that there were no neighbourhood watch schemes in Waveney in 1983-84, the first scheme having been established there in October 1986. This was also the first scheme to be established in Suffolk. By the end of March 1988 there were 87 schemes in Waveney, and the total has now risen to 100, an increase I greatly welcome.

Magistrates (Travelling Allowances)

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review magistrates' travelling allowances.

Mr. John Patten: The allowances are reviewed each year, and are varied in line with those payable to local authority members. The basis for the payment of these and other allowances is under consideration, and I have discussed the issue with the chairman of the Magistrates Association, Mr. John Hosking.

Passports

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which countries it will be possible to read the machine-readable page in the new British European Community passports.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 21 June 1988]: All the information contained on the machine-readable page of the new British passport in the European Community common format will be readable by the human eye as well as by optical character recognition equipment. I understand that the United States of America has begun to install passport-reading equipment at ports of entry, and other countries are expected to follow suit. The United Kingdom immigration service is using passport-reading equipment in a pilot project at Dover. It is not intended to machine-read the passports of United Kingdom nationals routinely at United Kingdom immigration controls, but the capability to do so will exist.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Promotion

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will report on the progress being made by his Department's central policy unit in its review of export promotion; and when he expects the review to be completed.

Mr. Alan Clark: An internal review of export promotion by the Department's central unit has been completed.

Companies Registration Offices

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the costs and revenues for each of the services provided by the companies registration offices and indicate the effect on them of the proposed fee increases.

Mr. Maude: Fee income received by the companies registration offices is applied to meeting the costs of a system of regulating companies and developing the law relating to them.

In 1987-88, the costs of CRO search services were £8·5 million against fee income of £4 million. The costs of incorporating companies and registering documents at CRO amounted to £12·6 million. The balance of fee income, £23 million, was applied to these costs and to those of running other parts of the system. These include companies investigation work and the branches of the Department's companies division which are concerned with the development of company law.

Our forecasts indicate that the average annual income over the next public expenditure survey period, without the increase in fees, would amount to just over £30 million. Total costs, however, are forecast on the same basis to be in excess of £36 million. The shortfall of around £6 million is the amount which is expected to be covered by the increase in search and related fees and needed to balance income and expenditure.

Company Liquidations

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what investigations have been carried out on behalf of or by his Department since 1979 into companies which have gone into receivership or liquidation, or under any other legislative power of administrative procedure, listing, in each case, whether any of the companies or associated companies was registered in Jersey, Guernsey or the Isle of Man.

Mr. Maude: This information is not readily available and the cost of the necessary research could not be justified. If the hon. Member will write to me about his specific concerns, I will see what relevant information can be given.

Research Establishments

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those organisations consulted by his Department in the recent review of the four Department of Trade and Industry research establishments.

Mr. Butcher: Officials consulted a wide range of customers and potential customers of the research establishments. They spoke to a number of the Department's external advisors on research and development. They contacted organisations in the United Kingdom which themselves carry out research to find out how their work was commissioned and organised. Officials also sought information from a number of Her Majesty's diplomatic posts overseas on research in those countries.

Skin Lighteners

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will seek with his EEC counterparts a ban by the EEC on the manufacture, sale and export of all skin lightening soaps and creams; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: We shall inform the Commission of the EC that we have banned exports from the United Kingdom of soap containing mercury salts, and that we are suggesting that exports from the United Kingdom of skin-lightening creams should meet the same conditions as are required for sale within the EC. It will be for the Commission, in consultation with member states, to consider what action should be taken by the EC collectively.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will arrange for health warnings to be displayed on all skin-lightening soaps and creams sold in, and exported from, the United Kingdom, and if he will list the brand names of such products and the British companies by which they are manufactured.

Mr. Butcher: We are stopping the export from the United Kingdom to the Third world of soap containing mercury salts. Skin-lightening creams containing hydroquinone with a maximum concentration of 2 per cent. may be sold within the EC, provided certain warnings are clearly displayed. We shall ask industry in the United Kingdom to limit the hydroquinone content to 2 per cent. and to put the same warnings on these products when they are exported outside the EC.

Financial Services Act 1986

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has as to how many firms requiring to be licensed under the provisions of the Financial Services Act 1986, are trading without licences; and what action has been taken to ensure that unlicensed firms comply with their statutory duty.

Mr. Maude: Section 3 of the Financial Services Act prohibits any person from carrying on investment business unless authorised or exempted under the Act. The relevant provisions were commenced on 29 April and it is too early to make a meaningful estimate of the extent of unauthorised investment business. However, the publicity which the new requirement has received, the substantial penalties which can be incurred if this section is contravened and the resources which the SIB, which is responsible for taking the lead in enforcing this provision, are allocating to following up complaints, mean that I do not expect widespread non-compliance.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on how many occasions inspectors have been appointed under section 106 of the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Maude: Eleven authorities have been given by my Department under section 106 of the Financial Services Act. The power to give such authorisation is also exercisable by the Securities and Investments Board. Questions about the SIB's exercise of its powers are a matter for the board.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what date his Department was first notified by the National Association of Security Dealers and Investment Managers of its concern over the operation of the Barlow Clowes partnership; and what was the precise nature of those concerns.

Mr. Maude: While the facts of my Department's handling of the Barlow Clowes case are under investigation I do not believe that it would be appropriate to answer specific questions relating to the case.

Defence Goods (Exports)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has introduced any new arrangements in respect of large contracts for export of defence goods insured by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: While most contracts for defence goods will continue to be accommodated within ECGD's normal arrangements, the current procedures under which ECDG provides cover under section 2 of the Export Guarantees and Overseas Investment Act 1978 have not proved entirely suitable for handling certain large defence contracts. These are often very large in relation to the limits set by ECGD to control its exposure on individual overseas countries and, in addition to economic factors, involve special strategic and political considerations.

I have, therefore, authorised new arrangements to be introduced in connection with such contracts. Initially a ceiling of £1 billion has been set for business underwritten in this category. All cases will be subject to approval by Ministers. Where in future ECGD's normal limits for individual countries cannot easily accommodate specific contracts, cover will, where appropriate, be made available under these new arrangements outside the country limit, but within the overall £1 billion ceiling. In all other respects, ECGD's normal underwriting criteria, as well as its financial objective, will apply to business entered into under these arrangements.

The arrangements which will be made under section 2 of the Export Guarantees Act 1978 will conform with previous assurances given to the House that ECGD will not support unduly hazardous risks. The repayment record in the defence sector has, in the past, generally been a satisfactory one.

The outturn of guarantees given under these arrangements will be separately recorded in ECGD's trading accounts by way of a note. These changes will enable ECGD more effectively to support business in a highly competitive environment where keen prices and fast decisions on credit are playing an increasingly important part in winning orders.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Council of Industry Ministers' meeting on 24 June.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Council marked the very welcome end of the European Coal and Steel Community steel production quota system, which had been in place under article 58 of the treaty of Paris since 1980. The quota system will come to an end on 30 June.

The quota system was introduced at a time of crisis in the European steel industry, but it is clearly no longer suitable for current market conditions. The quota system has prevented the British steel industry from fully exploiting its competitive position in the European market, and the outcome of the Council will therefore be of significant benefit to both United Kingdom consumers and steel producers.

The Council also agreed on the importance of maintaining strict rules on the granting of state aid for steel companies, and on the need for social measures to accompany restructuring.

I am placing a copy of the full conclusions of the Council in the Library of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Water Pollution

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Attorney-General what recent steps the Lord Chancellor has taken, in his capacity as chairman of the Magistrates Association, to review policy in sentencing those responsible for causing water pollution through farming operations; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor does not review the policy in sentencing of those responsible for causing water pollution through farming operations. However, as indicated in a previous answer to my hon. Friend, Official Report, 26 October 1987, column 14, the Lord Chancellor, as president of the Magistrates Association, on occasion expresses his personal views on the approach to sentencing for certain offences. When speaking to the Buckinghamshire magistrates on 18 April 1986, Lord Chancellor Hailsham drew attention to the need to impose in this category of offence fines high enough to establish that this type of illegal act can be seen not to pay.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

GCSE

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what representations have been made to him regarding (a) the issue by the various examination boards of written notices of corrections to the sample on the actual General Certificate of Secondary Education examination papers, and (b) the extent to which those notices were available to schools in time for the mock or actual General Certificate of Secondary Education examinations;

(2) what representations have been made to him about misprints and factual mistakes in (a) the sample General Certificate of Secondary Education examination papers and (b) the actual General Certificate of Secondary Education examination papers which were issued to schools;

(3) what representations have been made to him regarding (a) failure and (b) delay by the various examination boards in England regarding queries from schools on the General Certificate of Secondary Education examination syllabus and papers.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I have received some 50 letters since July 1987 about alleged administrative failures on the part of the independent examination boards and examining groups. The Secondary Examinations Council and the examining groups are collaborating to review the experience of the first GCSE examinations this summer and to make any necessary administrative improvements quickly.

Health Education Authority AIDS Pack

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what (a) health and (b) other grounds the Health Education Authority's pack on AIDS and HIV was vetoed; and on what criteria such publications are rejected.

Mr. Dunn: The HEA pack has not been vetoed. The Government suggested certain changes—all of which have been accepted—to reflect developing medical knowledge on HIV and AIDS, to see that teachers and school governors were fully aware of the legal context before mounting teaching programmes, and to ensure the educational suitability of the material, especially for younger pupils.

City Technology Colleges

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what basis pupils will be selected to attend city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: CTCs will cater for students of widely differing abilities. Selection will be based on aptitude, commitment and the ability to benefit from what the college has to offer.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what powers the governors of city technology colleges will have in the development of the curriculum within their schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The overall shape and balance of the curriculum will be determined by the governors after consultation with the principal, but they will be required as a condition of grant to implement the substance of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether parents will be represented on the governing bodies of city technology colleges; and how far industry will be represented when colleges are funded by private capital.

Mrs. Rumbold: The scheme of government for each city technology college, which will need to be approved by my right hon. Friend, will provide for representatives of the sponsors, of parents and of individuals from the local community who are committed to the good government of the college, to serve on the governing body. The latter may also include members of the local business and industrial community.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if it will be possible for pupils at city technology colleges to study arts and humanities at A-level.

Mrs. Rumbold: The shape and balance of the city technology college curriculum post-16 will be determined by the college governors in consultation with the principal. It is anticipated that arts and humanities subjects will be available in the post-16 curriculum, although the emphasis overall, and for individual students, will inevitably remain on science and technology.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision will be made for pupils with special needs who attend city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: City technology colleges will admit students of differing abilities, including some with special educational needs. We expect that CTCs will develop appropriate provision to meet these needs. The building and refurbishment of the premises of the first two CTCs, at Kingshurst and Nottingham, will include adaptations to meet the particular requirements of physically handicapped students.

PRIME MINISTER

Angola

Q161. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister what is her assessment of recent diplomatic initiatives to reach a settlement in Angola and of the current situation in Angola.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

We welcome current negotiations for peaceful solutions in Angola and Namibia. We support all efforts to secure the withdrawal of Cuban and South African forces and national reconciliation in Angola and to implement the United Nations plan for Namibian independence. We believe that these are essential steps to restore stability in the region.

Rover Group

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Prime Minister whether, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East on 23 June, her letter to Jacques Delors concerning the proposed takeover of the Rover Group will be covered by the 30-year rule; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

Records will continue to be dealt with in the normal way in accordance with the provisions of the Public Records Acts.

Engagements

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 June.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 June.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 June.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 June.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 June.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend is in Hanover for a meeting of the European Council.

ENERGY

Electricity Consumption

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is, for each year since 1974, the average domestic consumption of electricity (a) per head and (b) per household in the United Kingdom; and what are the comparable figures for France, the Netherlands, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Denmark.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Average domestic consumption of electricity per head in the United Kingdom, France, the Netherlands, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Denmark for 1975 to 1986 is shown in the table. The table also includes average domestic consumption of electricity per household in the United Kingdom for the same years, and in the other countries for those years for which estimates of the number of households are available.

CEGB

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what subject will be discussed.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends meeting the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss the privatisation of the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the CEGB from time to time to discuss various matters relating to the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the latest developments in his Department's preparations for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Detailed work on preparing the industry for privatisation is continuing.

Anti-radiation Tablets

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy for what reason anti-radiation potassium iodate tablets have recently been issued to people living and working near the Berkeley nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No potassium iodate tablets have been issued to people living and working near Berkeley nuclear power station. Current arrangements provide for the distribution of tablets by the Gloucestershire constabulary in the unlikely event of an accident having significant offsite radiological effects.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy towards the international transport and commerce in nuclear explosive materials such as plutonium or highly enriched uranium.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom's policy on the export of nuclear materials remains as set out in the statement by the then Foreign Secretary, James Callaghan on 31 March 1976 at columns 514-16. All movements of nuclear materials are made in compliance with the regulations of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Sizewell B

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the full calculations carried out by his Department's economists and statisticians referred to in his decision letter of 12 March 1987 to the chairman of the Central Electricity Board regarding the board's applications to construct Sizewell B, with particular regard to calculations and their background bases referred to in paragraphs 3.6 and 4.4 of that letter.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 11 May 1988 at columns 111-12.

SCOTLAND

Jurors (Vetting)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the total numbers of jurors who have been vetted against police records, the number that have failed selection because of the vetting procedure and the reasons why they failed.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: None has been so vetted.

Community Programme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those community benefit schemes under the community programme in the Glasgow and Clydebank area which (a) do and (b) do not meet the requirements of the programme; and if he will make funds available to enable those schemes listed under (b) to continue.

Mr. Lang: The Training Commission is currently considering applications from organisations to participate in employment training. It is too early to say how many of the existing community programme schemes will continue under the new programme. I hope that those bodies which have operated successfully under the community programme and have yet to apply will consider adapting to the requirements of employment training.

Scottish Health Service Planning Council

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the current members of the Scottish Health Service planning council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The current members of the Scottish Health Service planning council are as follows:

Chairman

Dr. W. Keith Davidson CBE

Members representing Health Boards

Mr. J. D. Ryan CBE	Argyll and Clyde
Mr. W. S. Fyfe OBE	Ayrshire and Arran
Mr. J. Gibb OBE	Borders
Mr. J. McIntyre	Dumfries and Galloway
Mrs. A. H. Ferguson	Fife
Mr. L. J. M. Hynd OBE	Forth Valley
Mr. C. W. Ellis	Grampian
Dr. T. J. Thomson CBE	Greater Glasgow
Mr. J. McWilliam OBE	Highland
Mrs. B. M. Gunn OBE	Lanarkshire
Mr. R. B. Weatherstone TD	Lothian
Mr. J. D. M. Robertson OBE	Orkney
Mrs. F. B. Grains	Shetland
Mr. D. B. Grant TD	Tayside
Mrs. M. A. Macmillan	Western Isles

Members representing Universities

Professor D. Ogston	Aberdeen
Professor P. D. Griffiths	Dundee
Professor R. D. Kendell	Edinburgh
Professor D. Campbell CBE	Glasgow

Members appointed by the Secretary of State

Mr. D. MacQuaker	Chairman, CSA
Mr. W. K. Reid CB	Scottish Office
Dr. I. S. Macdonald CB	Scottish Office
Mrs. Y. Moores	Scottish Office
Mr. N. K. Colquhoun	Scottish Office
Professor R. D. Weir OBE	Scottish Office
Miss P. A. Cox	Scottish Office

Scottish Bus Group

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that all employees will have adequate opportunities to participate in buy-outs of Scottish Bus Group companies.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has already told the House that assistance will be given in the form of help with advice and consultancy to management and employees wishing to seek to acquire their employing undertakings. Steps will be taken to ensure that all employees are informed about the opportunities available.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish Bus Group companies one purchaser will be allowed to acquire on privatisation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The detailed basis on which bids for companies will be considered has yet to be decided but in any event will take account of the objective of introducing greater competition into the Scottish bus market.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what safeguards there will be to prevent the regrouping of several Scottish Bus group companies under single ownership, after privatisation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: After privatisation Scottish Bus Group companies will be in the same position as all other private sector bus companies in the United Kingdom and any proposals for mergers between companies will be a matter, where appropriate, for the Office of Fair Trading to consider in the light of the mergers provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973 and to advise my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry as appropriate.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that Scottish Bus Group companies do not become foreign-owned on privatisation;

(2) what safeguards there will be on privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group companies to ensure that ownership does not fall into non-Scottish hands.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am aware of the substantial interest that has already been shown by management and employees in the Scottish Bus Group in acquiring the constituent companies. We shall encourage such buy-outs, as a means of promoting local control.

Registered Establishments (Scotland) Act 1987

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made towards the implementation of the Registered Establishments (Scotland) Act 1987; and when a date for the completion of implementation will be reached.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Consultations are in progress on the upper limits on fees to be charged by local authorities in connection with registration and inspection. Subject to the outcome, I hope to introduce orders dealing with maximum fees and the commencement of the Act at an early date.

Fish Farming

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provisions there are to monitor or regulate the environmental effects of pesticides used for the treatment of salmon lice which are licensed under the Medicines Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The possible impact on the safety of species other than the target species is taken into account when considering any application under the Medicines Act 1968, where it is proper to do so. Adverse reactions to the use of licensed veterinary medicines are routinely monitored and considered so that, where necessary, appropriate action could be taken.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provisions are made routinely to monitor the chemicals, used by fish farmers in the flesh of salmon; who is responsible for such monitoring; where the results of such monitoring are published or available for scrutiny by members of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for ensuring that food for sale to the public is wholesome rests with district and island councils under the terms of the Food and Drugs (Scotland) Act 1956. So far as I am aware, no routine monitoring of salmon for chemicals is carried out by local authorities but research work in this area is being carried out at both the Torry research station and marine laboratory. A survey is also being undertaken by the working party on veterinary residues in animal products, a sub-group of the interdepartmental steering group on food surveillance charged by Ministers with the function of keeping food contamination problems under review, assessing the needs for analytical surveys of food and, where appropriate, making arrangements for these surveys to be carried out. The report by the working party on veterinary residues in animal products will be published in due course.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what extra resources are being made available by the river purification boards so that they can perform their statutory duties under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 in relation to the growth of the marine fish farming industry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The river purification boards are responsible for determining the priorities for action in their areas and for setting the levels of their expenditure accordingly.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any recent representations regarding the decision of the Clyde River Purification Board not to issue consents for fish farms in its area; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such representations have been received. I shall, however, write to the hon. Member about this matter and arrange to place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of consents for fish farms issued by each of the river purification boards in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the statutory provisions on the control of pollution from marine fish farms; if he has any plans to seek to amend this legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Provisions for preventing and controlling water pollution from any source are contained in the Rivers (Prevention of Pollution) (Scotland) Acts 1951 and 1965, part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 and part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. The provisions of part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 are under review.

Ministers (Substitutes)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the occasions in the last year when someone other than another Minister, hon. Member or civil servant has substituted for a Minister at an invitation issued to him or another Minister.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ministers (Engagements)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the engagements of Scottish Office Ministers on 21 April.

Mr. Rifkind: I attended Cabinet in the morning of 21 April and attended several ministerial meetings later in the day. In the evening I was principal guest at a dinner for the Institute of Civil Engineers.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State (Commons) attended both the morning and evening sessions of the Committee on the British Steel Bill and held meetings with ministerial colleagues and officials.

My noble Friend the Minister of State (Lords) met the chairman of the Women's Farming Union. Later he attended the Third Reading of the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Bill.

My hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for Home Affairs and the Environment attended the School Boards (Scotland) Bill Committee and later held a meeting with ministerial colleagues and officials.

My hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for Education and Health attended the School Boards (Scotland) Bill Committee and later held a meeting with ministerial colleagues.

Business Success Conference

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Scottish Information Office issued a press notice about the expected attendance of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Lang), at the business success conference at the Scottish money show on 21 April.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Employment Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his meeting with the Scottish Council of Voluntary Organisations on 22 June to discuss employment training; and what proposals he has for action.

Mr. Lang: I met a delegation including representatives from the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations. We discussed the effect of the change to employment training on the voluntary sector and on community care projects. I invited the voluntary sector to continue to consider adapting its various projects so that they might take advantage of funding under employment training.

Fishing Industry

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries (Scotland) discussion document on the Scottish fishing fleet's capacity and on possible changes in the pressure stock licensing system; and what facilities he proposes to offer for negotiation with relevant organisations, and in particular the Scottish Fishermen's Federation and the Sea Fish Industry Authority.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We would expect to publish the consultation documents from the Fisheries Departments on capacity and licensing early in July. We will naturally be consulting the main bodies concerned and these will include the Scottish Fishermen's Federation and the Sea Fish Industry Authority.

Schools (Discipline)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to instigate an investigation, similar to the Elton investigation in England and Wales, into discipline in Scottish schools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. We commissioned the Scottish Council for Research in Education in October to carry out a major study aimed at identifying effective practical strategies for maintaining discipline in schools and classrooms. We do not consider that a further independent inquiry in Scotland at this time is warranted; but we shall study the Elton report, when it is received, for any implications it may have for Scotland.

Forestry

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he took, prior to the announcement of his approval for further planting by the Forestry Commission in Caithness and Sutherland, on the environmental effects of this planting other than from the Nature Conservancy Council; on what grounds he overruled the Nature Conservancy Council's advice; and whether he will place in the Library maps showing the areas approved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In addition to advice from the Nature Conservancy Council, my right hon. and learned Friend had the benefit of the views of the Scottish Development's ecological adviser and the Forestry Commission's wildlife and conservation officer, who had inspected the five sites concerned. His decision to allow planting to take place on 1,059 hectares out of the total area of 2,485 hectares was a carefully balanced one which took account not only of nature conservation needs but also of the desirability of the Forestry Commission maintaining its planting programme and thus providing continued employment for its local work force.

I shall arrange for maps showing the areas to be planted and those to be left unplanted to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the health boards in which the cytology laboratories post directly to women the results of cervical smear tests that are (a) positive and (b) negative.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Both laboratories in Tayside health board send the results of positive and negative cervical smear tests directly to women. The laboratories in the following boards send results to the source of the smear, whether general medical practitioner, well-woman clinic or other clinic:

Health board
Argyll and Clyde
Ayrshire and Arran
Dumfries and Galloway
Fife
Forth Valley
Grampian
Greater Glasgow
Highland
Lanarkshire
Lothian

In these areas it is the responsibility of the clinician or practitioner to make the result of the test available to the women.

Sheltered Homes

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheltered homes are located within the grounds of hospitals in Scotland; and of these how many are (a) entered in the rating roll as separate domestic hereditaments and (b) treated for rating purposes as a part of the hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information held by the Scottish Home and Health Department indicates that there are no sheltered homes on hospital land owned by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Water Supplies (Radioactivity Monitoring)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what routine monitoring of public water supplies for radioactivity has been done in Scotland since the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a full statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A programme of routine monitoring was begun in February 1987. A total of 98 samples from 42 public water supply sources throughout Scotland has been analysed over a period of 14 months, some supplies being sampled at regular monthly intervals and others less frequently. In every case the levels of radioactivity found were within the guideline values recommended by the World Health Organisation, below which water can be considered potable without further radiological examination. The analyses also covered numerous individual radionuclides and only three samples showed isolated values slightly above the limit of detection. These did not recur in later samples. A further monitoring programme is now in progress.

East Kilbride Development Corporation

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the last 12 months the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Lang), met officials of the East Kilbride development corporation; and what was discussed on each of those occasions.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 June 1988]: I have visited East Kilbride on a considerable number of occasions in the last 12 months and invariably met development corporation officials on these visits, when we discussed a range of issues. Discussions have mainly focused on the continuing success of the development corporation in attracting new industries and employment.

WALES

Penfedw Farm Riding School, Swansea

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is now in a position to announce his decision on the public planning inquiry held on 12 January at Penllergaer regarding Penfedw Farm riding school, Rhydypandy, Morriston, Swansea.

Mr. Grist: No. My right hon. Friend is aware of the need to reach speedy decisions on all planning matters which come before him. I hope that it will be possible to make progress on this complex enforcement notice appeal in the near future.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to what extent the cultural effects, and in particular the possible effect on the Welsh language, are a material factor in his determination of a planning application.

Mr. Grist: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave the hon. Gentleman on 24 November 1987 at column 112.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department has undertaken any study as to the effect of holiday housing developments on the Welsh language in the surrounding localities; and if he has any evidence indicating the causes of any decline in Welsh language speakers.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department has not undertaken any specific research, but is aware that the Welsh language is affected by many factors.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure the use of Welsh on all appropriate Cadw publicity material, in particular for letter headings.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is already policy that Cadw publicity material should use Welsh where appropriate and practical. In particular, Cadw's letterheadings are already bilingual.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the number of disabled unemployed people and (b) the number of places available on assessment and rehabilitation courses for unemployed, disabled people in Wales.

Mr. Grist: At 8 April 1988, there were 4,216 unemployed people in Wales whose prospects of finding and/or keeping jobs were recorded as restricted by health or disability; of these, 1,901 had elected to register as a disabled person under the Disabled Persons Employment Act 1944. Between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 the Training Commission proposes to make 1,816 assessment course places and 860 rehabilitation course places available in Wales.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the total grants to the Council of Museums in Wales for every year since 1978-79 up to and including that planned for 1988-89.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Grants to the Council of Museums in Wales were as follows:

	Grants
1978-79	50,000
1979-80	54,000
1980-81	77,000
1981-82	126,533
1982-83	145,742
1983-84	150,000
1984-85	218,000
1985-86	230,000
1986-87	280,000
1987-88	292,382
1988-89	305,000

Head Teachers (Vacancies)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total, and list the schools, of vacant head teacher posts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No statistics are collected centrally of vacant head teacher posts.

Education Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is taking steps to ensure that head teachers and governors are adequately trained for their expanded duties under the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In 1989-90 the Government propose to extend the national priority areas for head teachers' management training to include training to implement local education authority schemes of financial delegation to schools. The Government also propose that education support grant should be made available for the training of governors. Grant is expected to be available to support expenditure of £420,000 in 1989-90 to enable LEAs to develop their training strategies and materials for school and college governors.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to what extent he proposes to impose tests in Wales at the age of seven years; if the results will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Secretaries of State for Wales and for Education and Science have decided, in the light of the favourable reception to the recommendations of the task group on assessment and testing, and after subsequent consultations, to adopt the main principles, including the setting of attainment targets for seven-year olds, and for performance in relation to those targets to be assessed and reported on. In Wales, pupils receiving instruction in the medium of Welsh will be assessed in Welsh.

It is not intended that individual's results will be published, but aggregated results at the ages of 11, 14 and 16 should be, so that the wider public can make informed judgments about attainment in a school or LEA.

Departmental Employees (Aberystwyth)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to transfer employees from the Welsh Office agriculture department, Aberystwyth, Ceredigion, to the Cardiff office: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department proposes to transfer one middle management post from the agriculture office, Aberystwyth to Cardiff and to delete two more junior posts from the staff complement at Aberystwyth. No redundancies would be involved. In parallel, the head of division post in Aberystwyth is being substantively filled, and I envisage a substantial departmental presence in the area for the foreseeable future.

Agricultural Department (Staff)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are currently employed at the Welsh Office Agricultural Department in Aberystwyth Ceredigion; and what were the corresponding figures for 1974, 1978, 1982, and 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 27 June 1988]: My Department assumed responsibility for agriculture in Wales in 1978, since when the number of Welsh Office staff in post at Aberystwyth and Trawsgoed at the other dates requested was as follows:

Year	Number
1 June 1978	150
1 June 1982	127
1 June 1987	101
1 June 1988	95

A reduction of 55 since 1978. Over the same period the staffing of the Welsh Office Agriculture Department as a whole reduced by 204.

Local Authority Capital Expenditure

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the underspend on local authority capital expenditure returns for 1987-88.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Capital provision was not underspent.

THE ARTS

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are women and from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Luce: The number, and percentage of women officers in each grade, and overall, in the Department are given in the table:

	Number of women in grade	Percentage
Grade 2	—	—
Grade 5	1	25
Grade 6	1	100
Grade 7	3	27
Senior Executive Officer	1	50
Higher Executive Officer	5	56
Executive Officer	5	56
Administration Trainee	1	100
Administrative Officer	3	30
Administrative Assistant	2	100
Senior Personal Secretary	1	100
Personal Secretary	3·5	100
Departmental Total	26·5	49

Note: Part-time staff counted as 0·5.

According to the questionnaires on ethnic origin completed by staff in post on 1 October 1987, none of the Office's then staff (total 54·5) was a member of the ethnic minorities.

Arts Council

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Arts by how much the Arts Council grant has increased in real terms since 1979.

Mr. Luce: The grant has increased from £61·476 million in 1979-80 to £150 million in 1988-89, including a sum in part replacement for arts funding by the metropolitan counties. This represents an increase of some 33 per cent. in real terms.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Payments)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the United Kingdom's net payments to the EEC in 1987; and what were the net figures for the first quarter of 1988 at an annualised rate.

Mr. Brooke: The United Kingdom's net contribution to the Community budget in 1987 was £1,713 million. The provisional figure for the first quarter of 1988 at an annual rate was £1,683 million.

VAT (New Construction)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to introduce value added tax on new construction at a rate equal to the current rate of stamp duty.

Mr. Lilley: No. The hon. Member's proposal would not be lawful under the sixth VAT directive. I refer him to my statement on 21 June at column 957.

Civil Service Unions

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current state of relations between the Crown employer and the Civil Service trades unions.

Mr. Brooke: Pay settlements for 1988 have recently been reached with the two largest Civil Service unions, the CPSA and NUCPS, and discussions have begun with both unions on longer-term arrangements for settling pay, with a view to reaching agreement by the end of this year. Formal agreements on long-term pay arrangements have already been concluded with other Civil Service unions. Discussions and negotiations with the unions continue in accordance with normal arrangements on a range of other matters.

Charities (Payroll Deduction Scheme)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many employees have opted to make charitable donations through the payroll deduction scheme;

(2) if he will make a statement on the progress of the payroll deduction scheme for tax-free donations to charity since April 1987.

Mr. Brooke: Since the scheme started in 1987, a total of 17 charity agencies have been approved to run it and more than 2,700 individual schemes have been set up. By April 1988, some 40,000 employees had joined. The number of employers and employees taking part in the scheme is increasing all the time.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to monitor the progress of profit-related pay.

Mr. Brooke: The Inland Revenue reports to me on particular points as they arise. I receive statistical and monthly reports from the Revenue. These show that to the end of May, 694 schemes covering 103,000 employees had been registered by the profit-related pay office in Cumbernauld. This is satisfactory progress. Now that PRP is becoming established, I have decided to supplement these reports with a study which I have commissioned from IFF Research Limited. The terms of reference for the study are being placed in the House Library. This will be an early stage of a continuing programme of monitoring. It will seek information about the way employers view and use PRP.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact on the insurance industry of the value added tax extensions proposed by the European Economic Community Commission in its case before the European Court under the sixth directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 21 June 1988]: I refer my hon. Friend to my statement on the European Court's judgment on 21 June at columns 957-58. The measures which I announced to mitigate the effects of the judgment mean that the increase in the VAT borne by the insurance sector should be in the region of £75 million in a full year at 1988-89 prices. Without this mitigation the increase would have been about £200 million.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each of the top (a) 1 per cent., (b) 5 per cent., (c) 10 per cent. and (d) the remaining 90 per cent. of taxpayers (i) the total amount of income before tax and (ii) the total amount of income after tax for each of the years 1978-79 to 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 12 April 1988, c. 66]: I regret that the tables provided with the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 12 April 1988 at columns 65-68 contained factual errors. The correct figures are in the following tables.

Estimates are given in the tables for 1978-79 and 1983-84 to 1987-88. Information for other years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. All estimates are based on information reported to tax offices and collected through the annual surveys of personal incomes. For years before 1985-86, estimates exclude employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and some investment income on which tax is deducted at source.

EMPLOYMENT

Workfare

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration has been given to the introduction of a workfare scheme, along the lines of those introduced in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to introduce a workfare scheme. With the continuing fall in unemployment and some 70,000 unfilled jobs vacancies in the economy, the priority must be to ensure that unemployed people have the appropriate skills to take up the jobs which are available to them.

Unemployment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his best estimate of the net cost of the employment training scheme taking into account the cost of benefits which would otherwise have to have been paid.

Mr. Nicholls: In the seven months of the current financial year in which employment training is to operate, the estimated expenditure of the programme is £491 million. Of this, the estimated cost of training allowances, including premiums over and above benefit levels, is £228 million. Expenditure in a full year will of course be substantially more.

Community Programme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has held discussions with trade unions or others with a view to making participation on the community programme compulsory; whether he intends to increase the financial inducements of participation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The community programme will be replaced by employment training from 5 September. There are no plans to change the financial arrangements relating to the programme before then or to make it compulsory. There have been no discussions with trade unions or others on these matters recently.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he has taken to encourage the participation of voluntary organisations in the community programme; and whether he will seek means of further encouraging such participation.

Mr. Nicholls: The community programme will be replaced by the new adult training programme, employment training, from 5 September 1988. The voluntary sector has played an important part in the success of the community programme and I hope that most existing managing agents and sponsors will move forward into employment training.

Elderly Unemployed People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what schemes currently exist to provide jobs for unemployed people over 50 years of age; and whether he will bring forward proposals to increase the help available for this age group.

Mr. Nicholls: The community programme provides temporary jobs for unemployed people, including people over 50 years of age. From 5 September, a new training programme, employment training, will replace the community programme and other programmes for unemployed adults. Employment training, which will also be open to people over 50 years of age, will offer high-quality training to meet individual needs and to help all participants compete more effectively for the increasing number of jobs now becoming available. In addition, the Department and the Training Commission have a wide range of services and programmes which are available to people aged over 50.

Construction Sites

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions have resulted from the Health and Safety Executive's campaigns on construction sites in 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Small Firms

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to encourage the spread of information concerning the opportunities provided by venture capital through the small firms service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Small firms service counsellors are always willing to advise their clients on venture capital, on which a number of counsellors have specialist expertise. Counsellors keep up to date with developments in this field and bring them to the attention of clients seeking funds.

Travel Time Payments

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will consider introducing legislation to provide travel time payments to workers who have long distances to travel back and forth to their workplace; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No. To do so would put an unacceptable burden on employers and discourage the creation of new jobs. This is a matter for employers and employees to settle on a voluntary basis.

Mineworkers (Health)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now instruct the Health and Safety Executive to undertake research regarding the health damage caused by humidity levels and high temperatures to mineworkers working at great depth; and if he will consider introducing legislation to safeguard men working under such conditions.

Mr. Nicholls: A research project on working in hot conditions in mining has already been undertaken on behalf of HSE by the Institute of Occupational Medicine. A report will be published later this year and its conclusions will be taken into account in the course of the revision of existing mining legislation. Section 55(3) of the Mines and Quarries Act 1954 currently requires that > "the manager of a mine shall have regard . . . to securing . . . the maintenance in the mine of working conditions that are reasonable so far as regards the temperature and humidity of the atmosphere."

Mines and Quarries

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer of 27 May, Official Report, column 392, when he expects to be in a position to lay before Parliament the first sets of regulations designed to replace the Mines and Quarries Act 1954; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to receive very soon from the Health and Safety Commission the first two sets of regulations which they have approved in the programme to renew the safety legislation relating to mines and quarries. They deal respectively with safety of exit from mines and the use of explosives at quarries. He hopes to bring them before Parliament shortly thereafter.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the number of YTS places designated for September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Training Commission plans to have some 345,000 places available for the 269,000 young people who they expect to begin their YTS training between April and September this year.

Disabled People

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons are currently working in his Department; how many were recruited in the current year; and what percentage of both totals relate to people with disabilities.

Mr. Lee: The staff in post as at 7 June 1988 were 61,605. Included in this figure are 1,525 registered disabled staff, equivalent to 2·48 per cent. of all staff. The number recruited between 1 January 1988 and 31 May 1988 was 453, of whom 10 were registered disabled people—2·2 per cent.

EC Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the European Community Labour and Social Affairs Council held in Luxembourg on 9 June.

Mr. Cope: I represented the United Kingdom at the Council. The Council adopted a directive on the proscription of four named carcinogens and reached a common position, by qualified majority, on draft directives on the protection of workers from risks related to exposure to benzene at work and on the protection of workers from the risks related to exposure to chemical, physical and biological agents at work. The United Kingdom supported these proposals.

The Council agreed a timetable, proposed by the current presidency and the next two presidencies, Greece and Spain (the "troika") for further work on proposals for health and safety at work.

Progress reports on the draft directives on the protection of workers from risks related to exposure to carcinogens at work and on equal treatment for men and women in social security were considered.

There was a general discussion about the direction of future progress on the draft framework directive on health and safety in the workplace and on the associated draft workplace safety directive.

Safety at Work

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions were made under the Health and Safety at Work Act etc. 1974 as a result of investigations undertaken in each region by the Health and Safety Executive for each year from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: [holding answer 27 June 1988]: The table shows the available information for the whole of Great Britain:

Number of Informations Laid by Health and Safety Executive Inspectorates[1]

Year	All	Factory and Agriculture Inspectorates

1987-88	Not yet available

[1] Includes informations laid in prosecution cases taken under the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974, associated regulations and other relevant acts such as, the Factories Act 1961, the Explosives Act 1923 etc.

[2] From 1986 statistics have been prepared on the basis of a 12 month period running from 1 April to 31 March.

[3] Provisional.

A regional breakdown of informations laid is available for the factory and agricultural inspectorates only but will take more time to produce. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Elderly People

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of day centre places for elderly people in Northern Ireland, the number of home helps, the number of meals provided to the elderly and the number of residents together with the expenditure after allowing for general inflation and expenditure after allowing for personal social services inflation for each year from 1976-77.

Mr. Needham: Day centres are used by various client groups and it is not possible to identify separately the number of places for the elderly nor the expenditure incurred thereon. The other information requested is as follows:

	1976-77 £	1977-78 £	1978-79 £	1979-80 £	1980-81 £	1981-82 £	1982-83 £	1983-84 £	1984-85 £	1985-86 £	1986-87 £

NHS

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give day case rates for National Health Service acute sector hospitals in Northern Ireland and for each area board, expressed as a rate per 10,000 population, for the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986
Northern Ireland	77	93	103	134
Eastern Board	111	132	146	169
Northern Board	53	78	88	109
Southern Board	59	51	58	142
Western Board	48	64	68	78

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the new out-patient rates for National Health Service acute sector hospitals in Northern Ireland and for each area board, expressed as new out-patient attendances per 10,000 resident population.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986
Northern Ireland	4,424	4,627	4,727	4,806
Eastern Board	6,058	6,309	6,469	6,387
Northern Board	2,856	3,065	3,120	3,327
Southern Board	3,508	3,607	3,740	3,897
Western Board	3,664	3,871	3,860	4,064

Compensation Payments

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to bring into force the provisions of section 12 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1987, concerning compensation payments under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I have made an order bringing section 12 into force on 1 July 1988. This has the effect of introducing time limits for the bringing of applications for compensation for actions done under the 1978 Act. The time limit will be four months but is extensible to 12 months in individual cases sanctioned by myself or, on appeal, by the county court.

Irish Language

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the total teacher training population in Northern Ireland study Irish/Celtic as part of their teacher training course.

Dr. Mawhinney: Approximately three per cent.

Arthur Andersen and Co.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress with his claim for damages against Arthur Andersen and Co., formerly auditors of De Lorean Motor Cars Ltd.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 21 June 1988]: On 15 February 1985 the Department of Economic Development filed a complaint against Arthur Andersen and Co. in the United States federal court, southern district of New York. On 10 May 1985 Arthur Andersen filed a memorandum in support of a motion to dismiss the complaint. In its decision and order dated 8 March 1988 the court accepted jurisdiction of the Department's complaint. Subsequently, a request by Arthur Andersen for interlocutory appeal against the decision of the court was denied. The court has not yet set a trial date.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Georgia

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to install a fishing zone around South Georgia.

Mr. Eggar: There are currently no plans to do so. Fishing around South Georgia is subject to the conservation provisions of the convention for the conservation of Antarctic marine living resources.

Foreign Ministers Council

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his colleagues in the European Community Council of Foreign Ministers; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mrs. Chalker: The next Foreign Affairs Council will be held in Brussels on 25-26 July. At present, the agenda includes the renegotiation of the Lomé convention; progress in the negotiations with Czechoslovakia on trade industrial products; the appointment of judges to the European Court of Justice; and the establishment of the court of first instance.

There may also be discussion of issues arising at the Hanover European Council.

Human Rights (USSR)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent talks in Moscow between his officials and the Soviet Foreign Ministry on human rights.

Mr. Mellor: The first round of official level talks on human rights, held on 23-24 June in Moscow, was useful and forward-looking. The British side raised a wide range of human rights issues including family reunification; individual human rights cases; freedom of conscience and religious belief, emigration, psychiatric abuse, legal reform an the CSCE process. The Soviet side raised a number of issues of concern to them about British legislation and practice. Both sides agreed that a regular dialogue on human rights should be established. Individual cases will be followed up as appropriate.

Romania

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statement on relations with Romania.

Mr. Mellor: United Kingdom-Romanian relations are cool. The main bilateral problem is the Romanian authorities' unwillingness to deal satisfactorily with marriage cases involving British citizens.

Romania's poor human rights record and her disappointing and unhelpful attitude at the CSCE follow-up meeting in Vienna are the other main factors inhibiting an improvement in bilateral relations.

Sharpeville Six

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to make any further representations to the South African Government in regard to the threatened execution of the Sharpeville Six.

Mrs. Chalker: Further appeals on behalf of the Sharpeville Six were made by Foreign Ministers of the Twelve on 14 June, by the Security Council on 17 June, and by the Heads of Government at the Toronto summit on 20 June. We have also raised the issue again direct with the South African Government.

Mandela Concert

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has received from the South African Government about the BBC's decision to transmit the recent Wembley concert for Nelson Mandela; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The South African ambassador raised the matter with us shortly before the concert took place. The BBC has full editorial responsibility for the programmes it broadcasts.

Iran

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of Her Majesty's Government's relations with Iran.

Mr. Mellor: We are well aware of the strategic, political and economic importance of Iran. We have followed closely the events in Iran since the Islamic revolution in 1979. We respect the right of the Iranian people to have the form of government of their choosing. We remain critical of the Iranian Government's record on human rights and respect for other international conventions. For example, two British citizens, Roger Cooper and Nicolas Nicola, have been detained in Tehran, without trial and without consular access, in breach of the Vienna convention on consular relations. In addition, Iran continues to make unlawful attacks on unarmed merchant vessels, including British ships in the Gulf.

Furthermore, violations of diplomatic immunity such as the detention of a British diplomat, Mr. Chaplin in May 1987 represent deliberate flouting of the Vienna convention on diplomatic relations. We did not seek the deterioration in relations which took place from May 1987. We stand ready to build a more constructive and businesslike relationship with Iran. However, as I told the House in response to a question from the hon. Member for East Lothian, (Mr. Home Robertson) on 1 July 1987, constructive dialogue can only prosper on a basis of reciprocity and provided we receive credible assurances on the security of British diplomats in Tehran.

Anguilla (Wild Dogs)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the governor of Anguilla regarding the control of wild dogs on the island; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have had no discussions on this subject. The control of pests on Anguilla, including wild dogs, is a matter for the Anguilla Government whom, we understand, are already carrying out programmes to control the numbers of wild dogs on the island.

Western European Union

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state his policy priorities during his forthcoming year of presidency of the Western European Union Council of Ministers.

Mr. Mellor: We shall have four main priorities for our presidency of the WEU. They are:

- — to elaborate the commitments in the WEU platform in order to make practical contributions to the common defence;
- — to use the WEU as a forum for frank discussion of key European security issues;
- — to develop the WEU as a forum for co-ordinating European approaches to out of area issues;
- — to secure a satisfactory outcome to the enlargement negotiations with Spain and Portugal.

Disarmament

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy to implement the suggestions made by Prime Minister Carlsson of Sweden at the United Nations special session on disarmament, concerning the world naval arms build-up.

Mr. Mellor: We are fully supportive of arms control measures that genuinely enhance stability and improve security, but we shall continue to resist proposals that would have the effect of constraining freedom of action on the high seas, an area in which the Alliance has a particular interest given the need, which the Warsaw pact does not have, to reinforce Europe by sea in times of crisis. Moreover, given the legal, definitional and other problems involved, it is difficult to see how a viable regime covering the movement of naval vessels could be constructed.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, following the progress made in inspection of land-based missiles, agreed between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact, he will make it his policy to pursue similar agreements for sea-based missiles.

Mr. Mellor: There is no agreement between NATO and the Warsaw pact on the inspection of land-based missiles. The bilateral United States/Soviet agreement on INF missiles contained verification provisions covering the elimination of ground-launched missiles of intermediate range and the United States and the Soviet Union are currently considering verification arrangements for sea-launched nuclear missiles in the START negotiations.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement following the third United Nations special session on disarmament, 31 May to 25 June.

Mr. Mellor: The special session which ended on 26 June provided an important opportunity for the consideration of arms control issues. We regret that it was not able to agree a final document. The United Kingdom delegation played a full part in the debate and negotiations and put forward a number of specific proposals. The United Kingdom position was outlined in a memorandum dated 23 May which was printed and distributed as a United Nations document.

In my right hon. and learned Friend's speech to the special session on 7 June he pressed for wider accession to the 1925 Geneva protocol, which bans the use of chemical weapons in war, and proposed measures to enable immediate investigation of CW use and international action against violators. We shall pursue these proposals in the appropriate fora.

As my right hon. and learned Friend also made clear in his speech, we have a full and practical arms control agenda in the nuclear, conventional and chemical fields. Despite the disappointing outcome at the special session we shall press ahead with this work with the aim of achieving balanced and verifiable agreements which are consistent with the maintenance of the United Kingdom's security.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Research and Development

Mr. Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on how his Department calculates agricultural research and development funding; and how such calculations are made in other European Community countries.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The figures given by my Department in the annual review of Government-funded R and D are composed of the payments made to external contractors and the full costs of in-house research and development calculated to include salaries, superannuation, national insurance, materials, equipment, accommodation and other overheads. I understand that figures on central Government funding provided to the statistical office of the European Communities by other member states are on a comparable basis.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give for each standard planning region of England (a) the number of employees of his Department, (b) the amount spent on wages and salaries and (c) the proportion of total expenditure in each region by his Department which is represented by personnel costs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of staff (including temporary staff) employed by my Department in each standard planning region of England on 1 June 1988 was as follows:—

	Number
Northern	439
Yorkshire and Humberside	640
North West	333
East Midlands	345
West Midlands	917
East Anglia	1,565
South East	4,659
South West	1,157

Pay costs for some 81 per cent. of staff in my Department are decentralised partly to the regional organisation and partly to line management commands on a national or HQ basis. A breakdown of expenditure on the basis requested is not available.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has carried out monitoring exercises in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has completed the ethnic origin surveys of staff in post. In respect both of ethnic minorities and women we are monitoring our recruitment exercises and shall start to monitor promotions and allocation to duties this year.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has taken any positive action in accordance with the code of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Language training is made available in my Department for staff from ethnic minorities where the need arises. We have also contributed to the Cabinet Office (OMCS) training review which will identify areas where developmental or skills training could be arranged for black and Asian staff. As regards recruitment, we have advertised staff vacancies in inner city job centres. Further steps will be considered in the light of the results of our monitoring of recruitment and promotion.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has had an equal opportunities officer since 1984.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps to further consider equal opportunities for black employees, in accordance with the code of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has completed the ethnic origin surveys of staff in post. Last year we began monitoring the progress of ethnic minorities through all stages of recruitment competitions that we run. The monitoring of promotions and allocation to duties will be starting this year. Further steps will be considered in the light of the results which emerge.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many and what percentage of women and black people, respectively, are employed in each grade of his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Information by grade level equivalents in groups follows:

Staff in post and responses to ethnic surveys as at 1 May 1988

Waste Imports

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the danger to the United Kingdom pig industry posed by the accidental import of (a) swine vesicular disease and (b) Aujeszky's disease from infected organic material contained in United States domestic waste proposed to be dumped in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Swine vesicular disease has never been recorded in the United States of America. Aujeszky's disease does occur in the United States, but is not transmitted in meat.

Minister for the Marine (Ireland)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to meet the Irish Minister for the Marine.

Mr. Gummer: I met the Irish Minister for the Marine at the Fisheries Council in Luxembourg on 23 June. I took the opportunity to discuss with him the report of his Government's salmon review group and he undertook to keep me fully informed of developments relating to the recommendations contained in the report.

Fish (Chemicals)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions are made routinely to monitor the chemicals, used by fish farmers in the flesh of fish; who is responsible for such monitoring; where the results of such monitoring are published or available for scrutiny by members of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The steering group on food surveillance in my Department is responsible for monitoring the food supply and they have carried out a pilot survey of farmed trout, the results of which have been published in its food surveillance paper No. 22 (a copy of which is in the Library of the House) and in the scientific literature. As part of its forward programme the steering group on food surveillance has in hand further surveys of farmed salmon and trout, to be carried out jointly by the Department's food science laboratory and Torry research station.

Water Pollution

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent action he has taken to warn farmers in England and Wales about the danger of water pollution from farming operations, and the penalties involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: On 6 June, I announced the publication of the 1987 report on water pollution from farm waste in England and Wales—and at the same time urged farmers to take a really tough line in getting to grips with this problem. Members of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service routinely point out to farmers the damage that pollution can cause to the environment. They also offer free advice on what steps should be taken to minimise the risk of pollution.

Milk and Dairies Regulations

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the scrutiny of the arrangements for the enforcement of the Milk and Dairies Regulations in England and Wales has yet been completed.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have now received the examining officer's report. I am placing a copy in the Library of the House and I am arranging for publication. This will facilitate consultation with interested parties on the report's recommendations.

Cereal Seed

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements have been made for exempting certified cereal seed from the cereal co-responsibility levy.

Mr. MacGregor: Certified cereals seed is exempt from the cereals co-responsibility levy, but levy will be payable on a proportion of cereals delivered under a contract for seed certification to reflect the fact that not all the grain so delivered will ultimately be certified and sold as seed. For the 1988-89 cereals marketing year (1 July-30 June) this proportion will be 16 per cent. for all types of cereals.

A minimum level of certification will also be set. If the percentage of the total quantity of cereals delivered to a seed merchant under seeds contracts that is finally certified and sold as seed falls below this level, co-responsibility levy will be payable on all cereals for which the merchant is unable to provide proof of certification and sale on seed. For 1988-89 the minimum level of certification will be 75 per cent.

Regulations will shortly be laid before Parliament implementing these arrangements.

Rhizomania

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking in the light of the discovery of rhizomania in soil imported from Holland to prevent an outbreak in the United Kingdom sugar beet crop; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 27 June 1988]: Since the rhizomania virus was discovered in the wrapped root base of Acers imported from the Netherlands I have been in close contact with the National Farmers' Union and the Dutch Minister of Agriculture over measures to prevent recurrence of this incident. the Ministry's plant health inspectoreate has already taken steps to trace as many of the plants in the same consignmment as it can where there might be a risk of further infection for analysis by MAFF's plant health laboratory. My officials are also seeking information from the Dutch plant health authorities as to any other consignments of similar material sent to the United Kingdom from the Dutch nursery where the Acers originated.

TRANSPORT

BREL (Pensions)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guarantees will be available to employees of British Rail Engineering Ltd. in respect of their full pension entitlement in the event of the privatisation of British Rail Engineering Ltd.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail intends that employees of BREL will have the choice of preserving the accrued benefits which they have earned in the British Rail pension scheme, or of transferring those benefits to any new scheme set up by the new owner of BREL

Office Equipment (Cars)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the road safety implications of the use of facsimile machines and mobile computers in cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce legislation to regulate the use and position of office equipment in cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no plans to do so. Existing legislation already places the responsibility on drivers to have proper control of their vehicles at all times.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instigate an inquiry into the possible dangers to road safety posed by the use of facsimile machines and mobile photocopiers in cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no plans to do so. We are not aware that the use of such machines is particularly widespread or causes a road safety problem.

Road Schemes (Compulsory Purchases)

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are taken to avoid hardship to home-owners when property is acquired compulsorily for road schemes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department carefully examines potential and actual hardship cases resulting from compulsory purchase. It always helps out where it can. For example, with the agreement of the vendor, the Department will arrange early discussions with the district valuer if these could be helpful. Again, the local housing authority is alerted and has a duty to accommodate a displaced person where alternative accommodation is not otherwise available. Eviction is very rare.

When a compulsory purchase order is published in draft those with a legal interest have a right to object. Where the compulsory purchase order is later made, the Department serves a notice to treat on those whose property is required. The notice invites them to negotiate for the sale of their interest. The district valuer negotiates on behalf of the Department and assesses compensation on the basis of value, disregarding the road scheme. The Department then serves notice to enter, as it usually needs possession of the land before it could complete conveyancing. On entry to the land the Department offers the displaced vendor 90 per cent. of the estimated compensation, the balance being paid on completion.

The attention of inquirers is drawn to the information about compulsory purchase provided in the booklets on the land compensation code. Copies of these are always readily available from the Department.

Seafreight Freeway

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what hazardous goods were being carried by the Seafreight Freeway Channel ferry when it caught fire on 23 May.

Mr. David Mitchell: Seventy-nine drums of flammable liquid, one tank containing 22,100 kg of lacquer and two cartons of aerosols were declared under the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) Regulations as being dangerous goods.

M20

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he can now give details for the letting of the first of two major contracts for the construction of the M20 motorway between Hollingbourne and Ashford, Kent.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following the review referred to in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire), on 20 June, at column 455, the date for return of tenders has been extended to 5 September. We plan to let the first contract later this year.

Transport and Road Research Laboratory

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the number of people employed by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory on safety matters for each of the last five years, the amount of research spending at constant prices for those years and the proportion of such expenditure devoted to road safety improvement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of people employed by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory on safety matters for each of the last five years is as follows:

	Staff years
1983-84	79
1984-85	86
1985-86	109
1986-87	117
1987-88	112

The amount of research spending for the same period was:

	Safety Costs		TRRL Costs
	Cash	1987-88 prices	Cash	1987-88 prices
	£ million	£ million	£ million	£ million	Per cent.
1983-84	4·4	5·2	19·5	23·1	22·5
1984-85	5·3	6·9	20·6	23·1	25·5
1985-86	6·6	7·1	21·0	22·4	31·7
1986-87	6·0	6·2	20·6	21·3	29·1
1987-88	6·7	6·7	21·2	21·2	31·6

In the first year following the recommendation of the interdepartmental group on road safety to transfer funds from road safety publicity to research, £100,000 was transferred and spent on investigations into behavioural aspects of motor cyclist safety and motor cycle design. This is already contributing to policy making in the Department. In the current year the transfer is to be £600,000. Among new projects are major exercises to relate the design of road junctions to observations of the way safety depends on dimensions; the educational "Demonstration of Good (Educational) Practice"; work on retraining and rehabilitation of offenders proposed in the report of the North committee on traffic law and and further studies of behavioural approaches to traffic safety. Further transfers are being considered.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to introduce the revised orange badge scheme for disabled parking.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to make an announcement as soon as possible.

Plutonium

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether Glasgow airport will be required to make its facilities available should there be an emergency involving an aircraft carrying plutonium waste shortly after take-off from Prestwick airport;

(2) whether Strathclyde regional council will be consulted on any steps that may be needed to ensure that the roads leading to the Prestwick airport and the town of Prestwick itself, meet the requirement of the United States-Japan nuclear co-operation agreement for the safe shipment of plutonium from Europe to Japan;

(3) if Prestwick airport will need to be made militarily secure, in order to receive plutonium transports from Sellafield on their way to Japan.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No decision has yet been reached to use Prestwick airport for the transport of plutonium to Japan in the mid-1990s.

Before any such decision is taken, all necessary safety and security aspects will be carefully considered.

Motorways

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the traffic density on British motorways; and what are the comparable figures in Germany, France and Italy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1988, c. 257-8]: I made a mistake in my answer. The 1985 figures for each country are correct. The 1987 figure for Great Britain should be 44,400 vehicles per day, not 40,800 as quoted. I apologise for the error.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Rents (London)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the average weekly rent charged in hostel-type accommodation in London for a single person.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Twenty-one Hour Rule

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services under what circumstances 18 and 19-year-old unemployment benefit or income support claimants may study part-time under the 21-hour rule and retain their entitlement to benefit; and in what way will this differ from the entitlement of claimants aged 20 years and over to study part-time under the rule.

Mr. Portillo: The 21-hour rule provision contained in the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 applies only to claimants of income support. The general condition of the provision are that:

- the course at an educational establishment is not more than 21 hours a week; and
- the person is prepared to terminate the course immediately a suitable vacancy is available; and
- the person has received a qualifying benefit (income support, sickness benefit or unemployment benefit) or been on a YTS course for three months immediately before starting the course.

There is no difference in entitlement for claimants aged 20 years and over.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria are used to determine the levels of non-advanced part-time educational courses that unemployment benefit and income support claimants may participate in under the terms of the 21-hour rule.

Mr. Portillo: An educational course is assessed as non-advanced if it is of a standard below that of a course of advanced education as defined in regulation 61 of the Income Support (General) Regulation 1987.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what qualifying period employment training leavers who re-enter unemployment will have to fulfil before entry onto a part-time educational course under the provisions of the 21-hour rule; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: People who have been on a training course and receiving a qualifying benefit (unemployment benefit, income support or sickness benefit) for the previous three months before starting a course of part-time study will continue to receive income support provided they are prepared to give up the course of study immediately a suitable vacancy is available to them.

Terminal Care

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, in the light of the recommendations made in the discussion document entitled "No Second Chance" produced for the Trent regional health authority on the development of terminal care services, he will give consideration to providing resources for the establishment of a regional centre for palliative care for the terminally ill in Leicestershire.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the Trent regional health authority recently decided in principle to proceed with the planning of a regional centre for palliative care. It is for the region to decide whether and how such a centre should be funded from within its overall allocation and where it should be located. I suggest the hon. Member contacts the chairman of Trent regional health authority for any further information.

Family Credit

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much of the extra £220 million spending on family credit is accounted for by the notional element allocated for the payment of school meals.

Mr. Portillo: The net cost (after allowing for the cost of free school meals which would otherwise arise) of including cash in the children's rates in family credit in place of free school meals is around £45 million.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list the national and regional newspapers in which advertisements have been placed advising pensioners how to apply for transitional payments in respect of housing benefit increases, and the dates on which these advertisements appeared.

Mr. Portillo: Advertisments advising the public on housing benefit capital rule changes and transitional payment arrangements have appeared in the following papers:

Midwifery (Camberwell)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent the midwifery staffing for Camberwell health authority is below establishment; and what steps are being taken to deal with the shortage of such staff.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not held centrally and I would suggest that the hon. Member write direct to the chairman of Camberwell health authority, for the information he seeks.

Grandparents

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many grandparents are looking after grandchildren who had been taken into the care of social services departments.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally. However, it is estimated that at 31 March 1986 there were 4,600 children in care of local authorities boarded out with a relative or friend or already living in the relative's household when boarded out there by the local authority.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further research his Department proposes to carry out in respect of notifying bronchitis and emphysema as prescribed diseases; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: For research of this nature the Department looks principally to the Medical Research Council which is the main agency through which Government promote medical and related biological research, and which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. At their recent annual stocktaking meeting with the Medical Research Council, officials raised the question of further research in this field. I understand that the Medical Research Council will be considering this matter.

Pensions

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social services if he will list his reasons for not equalising the age of eligibility between men and women for the basic state retirement pension.

Mr. Scott: Changes to pension age for either sex would have economic and social consequences and potentially large costs or savings. We are not prepared to put forward specific proposals for change until all of the factors involved have been fully evaluated. However, equal treatment between men and women would be a major (though not the only) objective in any change to present pension age arrangements.

Deaf People (Social Workers)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date the study on social workers with the deaf was completed by his inspectorate; when it is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The report has now been completed and it will be published this week. A seminar to discuss the report's conclusions has been arranged for 12 July.

Ethical Committees

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to the reply of 14 June, Official Report, column 179, if he will now make it his policy to hold centrally details of the membership of local ethical committees;

(2) pursuant to the reply of 14 June, Official Report, column 179, if he will now make it his policy to hold centrally the names of all individuals involved in the use of foetal tissue for transplant purposes.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Foetal Tissue

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 14 June, Official Report, column 179, what information he has concerning the reasons given by the nursing home which supplied foetal tissue for transplant purposes for its failure to keep any records as to the precise information given to the mothers of the babies involved.

Mr. Newton: There is no requirement for nursing homes to keep this information.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 14 June, Official Report, column 179, what percentage of all aborted foetuses from the nursing home to which he refers are subsequently used for transplant purposes or other medical procedures.

Mr. Newton: From inquiries made of the nursing home in question I understand that approximately 6 per cent. of aborted foetuses are supplied for medical research under arrangements approved by the Department.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 14 June, Official Report, column 179, what information he has concerning the total number of aborted foetuses which were used for transplant purposes, other medical procedures, for scientific research or otherwise used in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement giving details of any authoritative published work of which he is aware that suggests that benefits might accrue to sufferers of Parkinson's disease by the injection into their brains of foetal tissue, and which was published prior to the performing of the operations to which reference was made in answer of 14 June Official Report, column 179.

Mr. Newton: I understand that this technique has not been fully written up in this country. However, recent publications in the field are listed in an article entitled "Embryos and Parkinson's Disease", The Lancet, 14 May 1988 and subsequent correspondence.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement giving the details of the mechanism by which evidence and comment can be submitted to the committee of inquiry into the use of foetal tissue in transplant operations.

Mr. Newton: This is for the committee to review the guidance on the research use of foetuses and foetal material, which is to have its first meeting shortly, to decide. I will draw the committee's attention to the interest of my hon. Friend.

Information Technology

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the composition of the senior information technology strategy committee in his Department; and how many times in the past year its meetings have been attended by Ministers.

Mr. Moore: The most senior committee in the Department is the departmental information strategy steering committee, composed of the principal establishments and finance officer in the chair, the director of social security operations, the director of NHS planning and information technology and the director of CCTA.

This committee of officials is supported by other information systems strategy steering committees, including one for the operational strategy for social security and another for the information systems strategy for the National Health Service. The chairmen of these committees consult Ministers as appropriate.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the staff of his Department at grades 1, 2 and 3 have attended courses or training on information technology awareness or management in the last 12 months.

Mr. Moore: In the 12 months up to 23 June 1988 one person at grade 1, three people at grade 2 and six people at grade 3 have attended courses or training on information technology awareness or information technology management.

Psychiatric Hospitals (West Midlands)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to speed up the closure of old psychiatric hospitals in the west midlands and improve the local comprehensive services.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has no intention of asking health authorities to speed up the closure of old psychiatric hospitals. This is the consequence of improving community care facilities in the area. Responsibility for developing comprehensive locally based services for mentally ill people in west midlands rests with the regional and district health authorities. It is for them to judge the pace at which change can be effected and especially the point at which new services are sufficient to enable existing institutions to be closed. We keep progress under careful review via the short-term planning and review systems. At the last review the region was asked to report in detail on progress for discussion at the next ministerial review.

Cosmetics

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence has been submitted on the damage to health caused by the use of skin-lightening soaps and creams sold in the United Kingdom or exported by British companies abroad.

Mrs. Currie: I assume the hon. Member is referring to soaps and creams containing either mercury salts or hydroquinone. No evidence has been submitted on the damage to health from the use of these products. However, the chronic and acute health effects from inorganic mercury which can be absorbed through the skin is well documented in the scientific literature. This includes evidence of harm in children in the 1950s when mercury was using in teething powders, dusting powders and ointments. Severe kidney damage and effects on the central nervous system have been reported in humans and experimental animals, and reproductive effects in the latter.

Hydroquinone has been shown to produce skin irritation, particularly at concentrations above 2 per cent. It has low acute toxicity, and has not given any evidence of carcinogenicity in animal studies.

Both these products are controlled by EC cosmetics directives implemented in the United Kingdom by the Cosmetics Products (Safety) Regulations 1984. The sale of soaps and creams containing mercury is prohibited. Creams for use in lightening discrete areas of the skin many be sold containing up to 2 per cent. hydroquinone. The packaging must contain the following warnings:

> "Not to be used by children under 12 years old, avoid eye contact, apply to small areas only, stop using if irritation occurs."

Also, the presence of hydroquinone must be stated.

The EC does not at present control export of cosmetics containing mercury to non-EC countries. However, a prohibition order under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 was served by the Department of Trade and Industry on a company in the United Kingdom which was exporting mercury soaps.

Single Payments

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payment applications were made to each local Department of Health and Social Security office in Bradford between 1 January and the date when the scheme ended; how much money was paid out between those dates; how many applications are still pending; how much money has been paid since the closing date for receipt of single payment applications, to date; when he expects all outstanding applications to be determined; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has three local offices in Bradford: Bradford east, south and west. Information is not available in the precise form requested. However details of the number of single payment decisions and expenditure between January and April 1988 and the number of outstanding cases on 31 May are given in the table:

Single Payment Decisions 13 January-8 April	Single Payment Expenditure 13 January-8 April £	Single Payment Cases Outstanding On 31 May
Bradford (East)
3,102	166,455	597
Bradford (South)
3,818	171,205	68
Bradford (West)
3,332	173,685	318

Between 11 April and 31 May expenditure amounted to:

	Number £
Bradford, East	65,956
Bradford, South	42,279
Bradford, West	78,884

Note: Data on Single Payments decisions and expenditure are provisional and subject to amendment.

Every effort is being made to clear all oustanding claims as soon as possible.

Benefits

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider further whether he can take steps to enable him to gather information on how many people have applied to each local office in Bradford for a grant since 11 April but were instead offered a loan.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not produced by local office social fund microcomputers and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, from a clerical scrutiny of each application received since 11 April.

Young People (Benefits)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many 16 and 17-year-olds in (a) each regional authority in Scotland and (b) Britain were in receipt of (i) income support and housing benefit, (ii) housing benefit only and (iii) board and lodgings payments for each year since 1984.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 14 June 1988, c. 178]: The numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds in receipt of housing benefit only are not available. The numbers in receipt of supplementatry benefit who are householders or receiving board and lodging payments in each of the years 1984, 1986 and 1987[1] are as follows:

	1984		1986		1987
	House-holders[2]	Boarders	House-holders[2]	Boarders	House-holders[2]	Boarders
Scotland[3]	1,000	2,000	1,000	1,000	2,000	1,000
Great Britain	9,000	12,000	11,000	9,000	14,000	7,000

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiries, 1984, 1986, 1987. All figures rounded to the nearest thousand.

[1] Figures for 1985 are not available.

[2] A householder normally received both supplemantery benefit and housing benefit.

[3] Figures in respect of individual regional authorities are not available.

Single Parents

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the number of single parents with children under five years who have been on supplementary benefit or income support for six months or longer;

(2) what is the number of single parents with children in full-time education who have been on supplementary benefit or income support for six months or longer.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 10 June 1988]: On 6 May 1987, the latest date for which information is available, 286,000 single parents with children under five years of age and 377,000 with children in full-time education, had been receiving supplementary benefit for six months or longer.

It is assumed that all children aged five years and over are in full-time education.

Source: 1987 annual statistical inquiry.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single parents are registered as unemployed; of those, how many have children under five years; and how many have children in full-time education.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 June 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. However on 6 May 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, 3,000 single parents registered as unemployed and getting supplementary benefit had children under the age of 5; and 16,000 had children in full-time education.[1]

[1] It is assumed that all children aged five years and over are in full-time education.

Source: 1987 annual statistical inquiry.

Incomes

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will identify the percentage contribution of family income supplement to the incomes of those below various percentiles of the income distribution in 1981, 1983 and 1985, in the same manner as table G in "Households Below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis".

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 June 1988]: The information requested cannot be provided on a statistically reliable basis.

SE Thames RHA (Empty Property)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual maintenance cost of all unoccupied property owned by South East Thames regional health authority and its constituent districts.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Property which is unoccupied because it has been declared surplus by the health authority ceases to be maintained. Information about the minimum maintenance required for security purposes or to meet statutory requirements is not held centrally.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the value of all empty and unused property in the South East Thames regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Health authorities provide an annual projection of land sales which showed that in the year 1987-88 South East Thames regional health authority was proposing to dispose of property whose estimated value was £35·9 million. The value realised at the time of sale will depend on the market. Information about the value of all empty and unused property in a regional health authority is not held centrally.

Care for the Elderly Research (University of Wales)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why his Department has withdrawn funding from the care for the elderly research team at the university of Wales college of medicine.

Mr. Grist: I have been asked to reply.

I have decided that the contract for the research team for the care for the elderly at university of Wales college of medicine should not be renewed as more cost-effective arrangements could be made.

This decision followed a review of the team's work led by the DHSS chief scientist assisted by a team of external academic assessors.

I intend that there should be no reduction in the amount spent on research into the problems of the elderly.

ENVIRONMENT

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Pike: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total rate support grant paid to local authorities in (i) the north-west, (ii) Lancashire, (iii) Cheshire, (iv) Greater Manchester and (v) Merseyside, in each year from 1978-79 to the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will express that figure in each instance as a percentage of the local government expenditure on the same basis and giving the figures in cash terms and on a comparative value basis.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Table 1: Rate Support Grant £ million (cash terms)

Notes to tables:

1. Rate Support Grant comprised Needs, Resources and Domestic elements in the years 1978/79-1980/81, and Block Grant and Domestic Rate Relief Grant in the following years. The grant figures are final for the years 1978/79-1984/85 and latest available estimates for 1985/86 and later years.

2. In table 2, Rate Support Grant figures have been converted to 1978/79 prices using the GDP deflator.

3. 'Total Expenditure' used in calculating the percentages in table 3 is the measure of expenditure used in the calculation of authorities' entitlements to Block Grant (except in 1981/82, where 1982/83 definitions of Total Expenditure have been used to produce the percentages on a consistent basis for 1981/82 and later years. Total Expenditure so defined is not available prior to 1981/82.

Cemeteries (Sale)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish a public inquiry into the sale of three cemeteries by Westminster city council.

Mr. Chope: No.

Rating Reform

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what special arrangement he proposes to make in respect of community centres and similar buildings with regard to the community charge.

Mr. Howard: Community centres, like other non-domestic properties, will be subject to the uniform national non-domestic rate. Those which are run by charitable trustees will, however, benefit from 50 per cent. mandatory rate relief; and almost all, apart from those run directly by local authorities, will be eligible for up to 100 per cent. relief at the discretion of the borough or district council.

Stockton-on-Tees

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much funding has been made available to the borough of Stockton-on-Tees for all functions or projects under the responsibility of his Department in the current financial year;

(2) how much Government funding has been made available to the borough of Stockton-on-Tees through each department in the current financial year.

Mr. Trippier: On current estimates, funding by the Department of the Environment to Stockton-on-Tees for the current financial year totals 9,213,279. Funding from other Departments is a matter for the Ministers.

USAF District Works Offices

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the locations of the nine dedicated United States air force district works offices that contain Property Services Agency staff.

Mr. Chope: The locations of the nine Property Services Agency district works offices dedicated to United States Air Force work are as follows, with their sub-offices shown in brackets.

RAF Alconbury (RAF Molesworth and RAF Upwood)
RAF Bentwaters (RAF Woodbridge)
RAF Chicksands (High Wycombe Air Station (Daws Hill))
RAF Fairford (RAF Kemble)
RAF Greenham Common (RAF Welford)
RAF Lakenheath (RAF Sculthorpe and RAF Feltwell)
RAF Mildenhall
RAF Upper Heyford (RAF Bicester and RAF Croughton)
RAF Wethersfield

Whitby Against Nuclear Dumping

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has recently received from the organisation Whitby Against Nuclear Dumping.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has received no recent representations from the organisation Whitby Against Nuclear Dumping. One representation was received in October last year.

Sport and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) of 28 March, Official Report, column 311, regarding the introduction of competition into the management of local authority sports and leisure facilities, he is now able to make a statement on the responses to the consultation paper regarding the possible application of the competition provisions of part I of the Local Government Act to sport and leisure facility management.

Mr. Moynihan: We shall be making an announcement shortly.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill on 20 June, when he expects to be able to make a statement on the location of the headquarters of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Moynihan: This is one of the matters on which the Government expect to receive advice from the National Rivers Authority advisory committee over the coming months.

DEFENCE

Defence Export Services Organisation

12. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the duties of the Defence Export Services Organisation's assistant regional marketing directors 2a, 2c and 4b with regard to sales of defence equipment and services to Syria, Libya and the Communist bloc countries, respectively.

63. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the duties of the Defence Export Services Organisation's assistant regional marketing directors 2a, 2c and 4b with regard to sales of defence equipment and services to Syria, Libya and the Communist bloc countries, respectively.

100. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the duties of the Defence Export Services Organisation's assistant regional marketing directors 2a, 2c and 4b with regard to sales of defence equipment and services to Syria, Libya and the Communist bloc countries respectively.

Mr. Sainsbury: Assistant regional marketing directors are allocated ranges of countries to concentrate on. The Government have imposed an embargo on new defence exports to Libya and Syria, and defence sales to the Warsaw Pact are not promoted. Assistant regional marketing directors are not therefore assisting British companies to market their products in these countries, but are advising companies of the restrictions which apply.

56. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the Defence Export Services Organisation's performance in export markets between June 1983 and June 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: As the Defence White Paper makes clear, the role of the Defence Export Services Organisation is to help United Kingdom defence manufacturers market and sell their products overseas. The DESO has made a valuable contribution to the increasing success of British defence companies in the defence export market over the period since June 1983.

Strategic Defence Initiative

14. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest information on the technical feasibility of the strategic defence initiative.

79. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest information on the technical feasibility of the strategic defence initiative.

86. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest information on the technical feasibility of the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest information on the technical feasibility of the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Sainsbury: This is a matter for the United States Government. The United Kingdom Government support the SDI research programme, and the involvement of United Kingdom entities in it. The programme's aim remains to determine the feasibility of ballistic missile defences.

Arms Trade

18. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the steps he is taking to ensure that Her Majesty's Government are accountable to Parliament for their arms trade policy.

84. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the steps he is taking to ensure that Her Majesty's Government are accountable to Parliament for their arms trade policy.

110. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the steps he is taking to ensure that Her Majesty's Government are accountable to Parliament for their arms trade policy.

Mr. Sainsbury: Her Majesty's Government are accountable to Parliament for all their policies, including those relating to the arms trade.

40. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the steps his Department is taking to ensure that British arms exports are not facilitating the continuation of wars.

81. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the steps his Department is taking to ensure that British arms exports are not facilitating the continuation of wars.

91. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the steps his Department is taking to ensure that British arms exports are not facilitating the continuation of wars.

Mr. Sainsbury: Before any licence is granted for the export of defence equipment most careful consideration is given to all relevant political, security and operational factors, including the effect the supply might have on a local conflict.

57. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the Government will not disclose any information on specific arms export contracts.

96. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the Government will not disclose any information on specific arms export contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the policy of successive Governments that information on specific arms export contracts is not normally disclosed because it is a commercially confidential matter between the supplier and the overseas purchaser.

Royal Dockyard, Devonport

19. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the proposed redundancies announced at the royal dockyard at Devonport.

34. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the proposed redundancies announced at the royal dockyard at Devonport.

44. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the proposed redundancies announced at the royal dockyard at Devonport.

50. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the proposed redundancies announced at the royal dockyard at Devonport.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since the announcement by Devonport Management Limited, we have received a number of letters.

Defence Policy

20. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision his Department makes for explaining Her Majesty's Government's defence policy to the public.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Ministry of Defence's provison for explaining Government defence policy to the public includes the annual publication, to accompany the defence estimates, of a White Paper and booklet on British defence policy. We also produce booklets, leaflets and videos for public distribution explaining aspects of our defence policy, as well as sponsoring presentation teams, which give public briefings, and a touring exhibition on Britain and NATO. In addition, we give regular briefings on defence matters to journalists, academics and other interested parties.

Nuclear Missiles

21. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to be in a position to announce specific decisions on the development and acquisition of new short-range nuclear and nuclear-capable missiles.

70. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to be in a position to announce specific decisions in the development and acquisition of new short-range nuclear and nuclear-capable missiles.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 21 June at column 496.

47. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current programme to update Britain's nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Work is proceeding on schedule with the modernisation of Britain's strategic nuclear deterrent through Trident. In addition, we are looking at options to replace the freefall bomb, which currently provides this country's sub-strategic nuclear capability; however, no procurement decisions in this area have yet been taken. Modernisation is vital to ensure the continuing effectiveness and survivability of our weapons; it will of course remain the Government's policy to maintain only the minimum forces necessary for credible deterrence.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the implications for the long-term future of the policy of Her Majesty's Government in regard to United Kingdom armed forces, in particular the Royal Navy, not to confirm or deny the presence of nuclear weapons in force deployments, of the requirements of intrusive verification techniques as part of arms control agreements.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are no arms control agreements either in force or in prospect which would cause us to change the policy neither to confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons in United Kingdom force deployments.

Estimates

22. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988."

36. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988."

71. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received in respect of the defence estimates White Paper.

80. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988".

90. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988".

93. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988".

Mr. Ian Stewart: No formal representations have been received, but a number of hon. Members and others have commented favourably on the presentation and content of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988".

Weapons Procurement

24. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further progress is being made with the French Goverment on a joint approach to weapons procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Co-operation between the British and French Governments is progressing well. Building on the successful collaborative programmes that the United Kingdom and France have undertaken together, both countries are developing closer links. Both countries now publish regular contracts bulletins, the sequence of equipment conferences will continue with a conference on air systems in November and there are regular and increasing contacts between procurement staffs at all levels.

Trident

23. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which action he proposes to take in the light of the conclusions of the Defence Committee in its recent report on the progress of the Trident programme, with particular reference to the allegedly inaccurate evidence given to the Committee by his Department.

107. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he proposes to take, in the light of the Conclusion, of the Defence Select Committee in its recent report on the progress of the Trident programme, with particular reference to the allegedly inaccurate evidence given to the Committee by his Department.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he proposes to take, in the light of the conclusions of the Defence Committee in its recent report on the progress of the Trident programme, with particular reference to the allegedly inaccurate evidence given to the Committee by his Department.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts).

53. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether construction of the first Trident submarine SSBN 05 by VSEL Barrow remains on schedule.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is currently a very slight delay caused by the industrial situation at VSEL. However, it is not expected that this will delay the overall programme.

76. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cumulative expenditure to date at 1988-89 prices on the Trident project.

Mr. Younger: Expenditure on the United Kingdom Trident programme to the end of March was some £1,590 million. A revised estimate at 1988-89 prices will be announced early next year.

105. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to accelerate the date for the new Trident system to be operational; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The in-service date of Trident remains the mid-1990s.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the effectiveness of the Trident programme.

Mr. Younger: No representations have been received recently about the effectiveness of the Trident programme.

Cruise Missiles

25. Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy not to acquire for British forces any warheads previously removed from cruise missiles under the terms of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty; and if he will make a statement.

27. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy not to acquire for British forces any warheads previously removed from cruise missiles under the terms of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty; and if he will make a statement.

103. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy not to acquire for British forces any warheads previously removed from cruise missiles under the terms of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo).

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies, involving how many departmental staff or consultant scientists to his Department, are presently undertaken by his Department into outstanding verification problems for sea-launched, submarine-launched and air-launched cruise missiles in advance of any arms control agreement involving such missile systems.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) on 10 February, at column 242. My Department keeps all aspects of nuclear arms control verification under review, but the United Kingdom does not deploy sea-launched, submarine-launched or air-launched cruise missiles, nor are we involved in any negotiations which would lead to arms control agreements involving such missiles.

Military Stores

29. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current total value of military equipment held in his Department's stores; and what resources his Department devotes to safeguarding these stocks against fire.

61. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current total value of military equipment held in his Department's stores; and what resources his Department devotes to safeguarding these stores against fire.

64. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current total value of military equipment held in his Department's stores; and what resources his Department devotes to safeguarding these stores against fire.

Mr. Freeman: The most recent estimate of the value of stocks held in major stores depots is approximately £10 billion. Fire prevention measures include: dispersal and segregation of stocks; provision of fire control equipment, such as fire mains and hydrants; automatic fire detection and suppression systems; and our own fire brigades where appropriate.

Northern Ireland

26. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present number of service personnel currently serving in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Freeman: As at 31 March 1988, the most recent available figure, 17,130 service men and women were serving in the security forces in Northern Ireland.

52. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the present role of the armed forces in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The role of the armed forces in Northern Ireland is to provide support to the Royal Ulster Constabulary in the fight against terrorism. Nine Regular battalions, one Royal Marine Commando and nine battalions of the Ulster Defence Regiment, together with specialist support from other units such as the Royal Engineers, are currently deployed in the Province. Elements of the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force also make an important contribution.

Chemical Weapons

28. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further discussions have taken place with the Soviet authorities about the implications of the recent visit by Soviet scientists to the Porton Down establishment for future exchanges of this kind in relation to chemical weapons.

75. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further discussions have taken place with the Soviet authorities about the implications of the recent visit by Soviet scientists to the Porton Down establishment for future exchanges of this kind in relation to chemical weapons.

82. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further discussions have taken place with the Soviet authorities about the implications of the recent visit by Soviet scientists to the Porton Down establishment for future exchanges of this kind in relation to chemical weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 21 June, at column 495-96.

Procurement Policy

30. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any further plans to improve the cost-effectiveness of procurement within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Efforts to improve the cost-effectiveness of procurement will continue unabated. We shall continue to stress the importance of competition and a more commercial approach to contracting, as well as maintaining our efforts to develop a fully professional approach to project management.

Nuclear Weapons Testing (Compensation)

31. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received seeking the establishment of a compensation fund to assist service men who claim that their health was adversely affected by their participation in nuclear weapons testing in the 1950s.

67. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received seeking the establishment of a compensation fund to assist servicemen who claim that their health was adversely affected by their participation in nuclear weapons testing in the 1950s.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received seeking the establishment of a compensation fund to assist service men who claim that their health was adversely affected by their participation in nuclear weapons testing in the 1950s.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay).

AIDS

32. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to change his policy with regard to the monitoring and surveillance of HIV infection and AIDS in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There are currently no plans to change the MOD policy on monitoring and surveillance of HIV infection and AIDS in the armed forces, which accords with the Government policy on employment. Within the services those who consider themselves to have been at risk are encouraged to undergo voluntary screening and to seek immediate confidential advice from their unit medical officers.

NATO (Expenditure)

33. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions have taken place within the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about possible changes in the relative share of the Alliance's military expenditure borne by the United States of America on the one hand and the remaining allies on the other.

39. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions have taken place within the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about possible changes in the relative share of the Alliance's military expenditure borne by the United States of America on the one hand and the remaining allies on the other.

60. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions have taken place within the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about possible changes in the relative share of the Alliance's military expenditure borne by the United States of America on the one hand and the remaining allies on the other.

Mr. George Younger: At the meeting of the defence planning committee last month Ministers confirmed their determination to play their part in improving our collective defence and in ensuring that each of us contributes in the most effective and equitable fashion.

British Army Equipment Exhibition

35. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the purposes for which the public money used to set up the British Army equipment exhibition will be spent; and if any of it will be reimbursed by those organisations taking part.

92. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the purposes for which the public money used to set up the British Army equipment exhibition will be spent; and if any of it will be reimbursed by those organisations taking part.

95. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the purposes for which the public money used to set up the British Army equipment exhibition will be spent; and if any of it will be reimbursed by those organisations taking part.

Mr. Sainsbury: The money spent on setting up the British Army equipment exhibition covers tentage, construction, hotel accommodation and catering for overseas official visitors, transport and so on. These costs will, as on all previous occasions, be fully recovered from the participating companies.

49. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received seeking the withdrawal of invitations to attend the British Army equipment exhibition from 26 June to 1 July issued to any country with a record of human rights abuses.

99. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received seeking the withdrawal of invitations to attend the British Army equipment exhibition from 26 June to 1 July issued to any country with a record of human rights abuses.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Eccles (Miss Lestor).

65. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why it is the Government's policy not to disclose who is invited to the British Army equipment exhibition.

106. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why it is the Government's policy not to disclose who is invited to the British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley).

109. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all overseas delegations will be allowed to see all the exhibits on display at the British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) on 23 June 1988.

Glenmoriston Estate, Inverness-shire

37. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet in a position to assess the defence implications of the proposed sale of Glenmoriston estate, Inverness-shire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing to add, at this stage, to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 25 May 1988, at column 159.

Overseas Students (Military Training)

38. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many overseas students at United Kingdom military training establishments entered in courses in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: The number of overseas students who attended courses at United Kingdom military training establishments in financial year 1986-87 was 5,480.

Air Cadets (Motor Gliders)

41. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to replace the Air Cadets' venture motor gliders with modern, less noisy, motor gliders which will be less expensive to maintain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We are aware of the problems with the air cadets' venture motor gliders and a review is currently under way with a view to determining the best way to rectify the problem.

Forces' Allowances

42. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implementation of the recently announced forces' allowances.

Mr. Freeman: The changes in armed forces allowances, which my right hon. Friend announced on 9 May, are to be introduced from 1 October 1988. Appropriate rules and regulations to give effect to the changes are currently being written.

SSN and SSBN

43. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the number of SSN and SSBNs which are expected to be de-commissioned in the next 10 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 13 April 1988, at column 137.

NATO-Warsaw Pact

45. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further studies are planned concerning the imbalance of conventional armaments between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The international staff of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation are currently engaged in an exercise to update the 1984 NATO force comparisons booklet outlining the balance of Warsaw pact and NATO forces in Europe. My Department continually updates its own estimates of conventional forces in Europe and unclassified figures indicating the broad numerical balance are published annually in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates".

Security Vehicle AMAC 1

46. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to allow Allivance International to exhibit the internal security vehicle formerly known as the AMAC 1 at the British Army equipment exhibition.

58. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to allow Allivance International to exhibit the internal security vehicle formerly known as the AMAC 1 at the British Army equipment exhibition.

89. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to allow Allivance International to exhibit the internal security vehicle formerly known as the AMAC 1 at the British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Sainsbury: The AMAC internal security vehicle manufactured by Allivance International, to which I believe the question refers, is not being exhibited at the British Army equipment exhibition.

Arms Export Industry (Employment)

48. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is proposing to initiate any studies into the possibilities for the conversion of military industry to civilian production to offset any fall in employment in the arms export industry.

54. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is proposing to initiate any studies into the possibilities for the conversion of military industry to civilian production to offset any fall in employment in the arms export industry.

104. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is proposing to initiate any studies into the possibilities for the conversion of military industry to civilian production to offset any fall in employment in the arms export industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. Fluctuations in employment in the defence industry are a commercial matter for the companies concerned. But, as this year's "Statement on the Defence Estimates" says, the general upward trend of United Kingdom defence exports has continued, and contracts signed in 1987 are expected to reach £3·5 billion, a sign of the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry in world markets.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

51. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Nature Conservancy Council to discuss sites of special scientific interest within Ministry of Defence land and training areas.

Mr. Freeman: I have not met the Nature Conservancy Council to discuss sites of special scientific interest on Ministry of Defence land. The Ministry of Defence conservation officer and PSA estate surveyors hold regular meetings with NCC officials representing the headquarters of Great Britain, England, Scotland and Wales. In addition, local NCC representatives attend MOD conservation group meetings to advise MOD officers on the management of the 179 sites of special scientific interest on MOD land.

The MOD and the NCC signed a mutual declaration of intent in January 1988 to establish a formal code of practice for SSSI management.

RAF Upper Heyford.

55. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to visit RAF Upper Heyford.

Mr. Freeman: I hope to visit RAF Upper Heyford shortly.

Air-Sea Rescue

59. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the search and rescue helicopter service in the south-west of England and south Wales; how many helicopters are involved; what is the approximate division of work time between supporting Her Majesty's forces and assistance to civilians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 18 February 1988, at column 741, giving the full costs of the military search and rescue service in financial year 1987-88 as approximately £57·7 million. It is not possible to make a reasonably accurate attribution of these costs to individual stations or areas.

There are eight search and rescue helicopters stationed in south-west England and south Wales, two at each of the Naval air stations at Portland and Culdrose and two each at RAFs Chivenor and Brawdy. The division of work time between military and civilian call outs varies from year to year, but nationally over the last fve years some 90 per cent. of those rescued by military helicopters have been civilians.

77. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the total numbers of air-sea rescue operations carried out by Royal Air Force air-sea rescue services during the last year; and what was the ratio of military to civilian rescues in the incidents involved.

Mr. Freeman: In the year ended 31 March 1988 elements of the Royal Air Force search and rescue service (comprising helicopters, fixed-wing aircraft and mountain rescue teams) responded to 1,384 call-outs, concerning 1,086 incidents in the United Kingdom and surrounding waters. 98 military personnel and 786 civilians were rescued, giving a ratio of 1:8.

RAF Pilots

62. Mr. Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the training of Royal Air Force pilots.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 9 June 1988, at column 663.

British Forces (Germany)

66. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representation he has received seeking measures to secure the employment of more dependants of British forces stationed in the Federal Republic of Germany in the light of the conclusions of Report No. 236 of the National Audit Office published in January; and what response he has made.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has received some representations covering a wide range of issues concerning dependants, including the scope for more employment of dependants in British forces Germany. These have been answered individually and in full. It is the MOD's policy to employ as many dependants as possible with the British forces in Germany.

NATO (Strategy)

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation last reviewed the relationship within its overall strategy between conventional and nuclear weapons; and what role Her Majesty's Government played in that process.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation last reviewed the relationship within its overall strategy between conventional and nuclear weapons; and what role Her Majesty's Government played in that process.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) and for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer).

French Minister

60. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his French counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Younger: I last met my French counterpart at the opening of the D-Day Memorial museum at Caen on 6 June. We discussed a number of matters of mutual interest.

Tucano

72. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessment he has made of the relative effectiveness of the Short Tucano in relation to the British Aerospace PC-9.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

98. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans to cancel the order for the Short Tucano aircraft so as to order the BAE PC-9.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

British Prisoners of War (Murder)

73. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to complete his review of the papers regarding the murder of British prisoners of war near Wormhoudt in May 1940.

Mr. Freeman: The review of the papers regarding the murder of British prisoners of war near Wormhoudt in May 1940 is being conducted as a matter of urgency. I shall give the hon. Gentleman a more detailed reply later today.

Nuclear Submarines (Sales)

74. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet able to make an announcement about the proposed sale of nuclear-powered submarines to Canada.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Sandhurst

78. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to relocate the royal military academy, Sandhurst, to the north of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There is no plan to relocate the royal military academy, Sandhurst to the north of England. The academy is ideally and conveniently situated; the buildings and accommodation form part of a heritage which could not readily be re-located. However, as and when relocations are considered, the north of England is always given due priority.

Type 23 Frigates

83. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many type 23 frigates he expects to be in service by the end of the current year.

Mr. Sainsbury: None, but the first of class (HMS Norfolk) is planned for acceptance next year.

Low Flying

85. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what response he has received to his proposals to extend the areas in which very low flying exercises will take place.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom low-flying system is continuously under review as efforts are made to spread activity more widely and evenly, thereby reducing disturbance in busier areas and contributing to overall safety. The changes about which I wrote recently to a number of hon. Members all have this aim in view.

87. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding his policy on low-flying aircraft over Quedgeley and Hardwicke in Gloucestershire.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1 December 1987 the residential development at Quedgeley and Hardwicke has been incorporated within the avoidance area afforded to Gloucester city. Aircrew will accordingly make every effort to avoid overflying this area wherever possible.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average weekly number of low-flying military aircraft using airspace in the Scottish Highlands.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available, but the average weekly number of low-flying military aircraft movements using airspace in the Scottish Highlands in 1987 was 324.

West German Minister

88. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his West German counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Younger: I last had formal discussions with my West German counterpart at the defence planning committee meeting in Brussels on 26 and 27 May. We discussed a number of matters of mutual interest.

Merchant Ships

94. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions his Department has had with the General Council of British Shipping regarding the availability of merchant ships for defence purposes.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My Department has frequent discussions with the General Council of British Shipping on this subject.

European Fighter Aircraft

97. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when a decsion will be made on the European fighter aircraft radar.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) on 17 March, at column 626.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs will be created in the north-west as a result of the decision to take part in the development of the European fighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: As my right hon. Friend said in his statement on 25 April, at column 21, we estimate that the decision to embark on full development of the European fighter aircraft will give direct long-term employment to between 3,000 and 4,000 people in the United Kingdom. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of this estimate by region, but a significant proportion would be employed at British Aerospace, Warton.

Ethnic Monitoring

101. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the results of the first year's survey into applications by persons of ethnic origin to join the services.

Mr. Freeman: A provisional analysis covering those who applied to join the services in 1987-88 will be available in summary form towards the end of this calendar year.

RAF Stations (Noise Insulation)

102. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force stations are now covered by noise insulation grant schemes.

Mr. Freeman: Noise insulation grant schemes have so far been introduced at 11 Royal Air Force stations around the country. These are as follows:

RAF Upper Heyford
RAF Alconbury
RAF Honington
RAF Marham
RAF Leeming
RAF Cottesmore
RAF Coningsby
RAF Lossiemouth
RAF Kinloss
RAF Leuchars
RAF Stornoway

Chieftain Tank

108. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has reached a decision concerning the replacement for the Chieftain tank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bridlington (Mr. Townend) on 12 January 1988, at column 200.

Westland

111. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last visited Westland plc; and what matters relating to defence procurement were discussed.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence visited Westland plc on 7 April 1987 for the EH101 helicopter roll-out ceremony. A range of issues concerning defence projects in which Westland is involved were discussed.

Removal Contracts

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning his Department's policy with regard to placing contracts for removals at its establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Since the introduction of the service contract scheme for furniture removal there have been a number of representations from companies which have either not been invited to tender for the work or who have felt that the scheme is aimed at the larger companies. It is not possible to invite every furniture removal company to tender because of the very large number involved but I am satisfied that those included gave a reasonable spread of firm by size and geographical location.

Any company can apply to tender provided they meet the financial and operational criteria for entry to the approved list. Contracts have been awarded to large and small companies on the basis of their ability to carry out the work and have not been restricted to members of the British Association of Removers.

Arms Register

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy towards the establishment of an arms register.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government have no plans to establish a national arms register.

HMS Hermes

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will announce his decision on when HMS Hermes is to be replaced.

Mr. Sainsbury: HMS Hermes has already been replaced in her ASW and AAW carrier roles by an Invincible class aircraft carrier. These ships have a secondary amphibious support role, but we are also addressing the case for dedicated helicopter lift in support amphibious operations. At a presentation given to industry earlier this month, my Department outlined the possible requirement for an aviation support ship. Companies have been asked to express their interest in competing for this ship. I envisage issuing formal invitations to tender later this year.

Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what criteria his policy for the location of Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve barracks is based.

Mr. Freeman: The principal criteria for the location of Territorial Army centres are that they are well placed for the recruitment and retention of volunteers and they are therefore mainly based in urban areas close to the reservists' homes and places of work and are easily accessible by public transport. The Territorial Army centres must also meet the military requirements of permitting access by military vehicles and be large enough to be capable of providing indoor training, storage spaces, administrative accommodation and adequate parking and garaging.

INF Treaty

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the working of mutual inspection arrangements under the INF treaty.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Five types of inspection are permitted under the INF treaty. The first of these will be the baseline inspections to verify data exchanged under the treaty, and which will be undertaken during July and August this year. Thereafter there will be short notice (16 hours) inspections at INF related facilities. Twenty such inspections may be carried out annually by each of the parties to the treaty for three years, by which time all treaty limited items must be eleminated; 15 in each of the next five years and 10 in each of the five years thereafter. No more than half his allocation of short notice inspections may be carried out in any one country. As missiles are withdrawn so each party will be entitled to conduct elimination inspections at the designated facilities to ensure that treaty limited items are destroyed in accordance with agreed procedures. The fourth type of inspection will occur when an INF related facility is declared no longer to contain treaty limited items. The other party may then conduct a "close-out" inspection to be assured that all such items have indeed been withdrawn. Finally, each party is entitled to establish a perimeter and portal monitoring system to inspect containers entering and leaving one missile production facility on the other's territory.

Of these inspections, baseline, short notice and "close-out" inspections will take place in the United Kingdom at RAF Greenham Common and RAF Molesworth with the full knowledge, consent and co-operation of the Government. Inspection activity will be co-ordinated by the United States On Site Inspection Agency based in Washington. The United Kingdom will play a full part in the conduct of inspections at RAF Greenham Common and RAF Molesworth and will escort Soviet inspectors throughout their stay. National sovereignty will be observed and maintained at all times. Precise details of inspection arrangements may be found in the inspection protocol to the INF treaty; in the basing country agreement between the United Kingdom, other NATO basing countries and the United States; and in the exchange of notes between the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union, copies of which are in the Library.

Contracts

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he achieves value for money on non-competitive contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: We seek to place work by competition wherever it is practical and sensible. Where work has to be placed without the benefit of competition we negotiate taut contract terms and conditions and make maximum use of incentive pricing under the government profit formula. We also encourage the greatest practicable line of competition for sub-contracts.

Irish Regiments

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the four Irish regiments in the Regular Army have served in Northern Ireland during the past 10 years.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The last so-called "Irish named" regiment to serve in Northern Ireland was the Queens Royal Irish Hussars, which deployed a squadron to Northern Ireland in 1982. The 5th Royal Inniskilling Dragoon Guards served in Northern Ireland in 1981. These have been the only deployments of formed units in the last 10 years. However, individual members of all four Irish named regiments have regularly served in Northern Ireland during the period.

Royal Ordnance plc (Agreement)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) why he has not hitherto been prepared to implement the heads of agreement signed between his Department and British Aerospace in April 1987 concerning the establishment of an agreement with Royal Ordnance plc for the supply of explosives, propellants and related products;

(2) whether it remains his policy to invest £12 million in assisting Royal Ordnance plc with its productivity improvement programme, as envisaged in the heads of agreement for the supply of explosives, propellants and related products signed in April 1987.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress on negotiations between his Department and Royal Ordnance plc over an EP(REP) agreement to supply explosives and propellants.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he anticipates completing the explosives and propellants and related end product agreement with Royal Ordnance; and if he will make a statement on the progress of negotiations.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the position regarding the award to Royal Ordnance of an EP(REP) agreement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Discussions with the company are still continuing and I am not yet in a position to make a statement on their outcome.

Naval Damage (Compensation)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the arrangements for dealing with claims from fishermen for compensation for damage to their boats or equipment by United Kingdom naval vessels; and whether the letter from Miss T. A. Buckingham to Callum Freeborn of 25 May represented any change in policy or procedure on this matter.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 20 May, at column 611. The cases referred to in the letter to which the hon. Member refers were dealt with in accordance with these procedures.

Nuclear Disarmament

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department is making to the achievement of multilateral naval nuclear disarmament.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My Department contributes to the formation of United Kingdom policies on the whole range of arms control issues. Among NATO's current priorities in arms control is a 50 per cent. reduction in United States and Soviet strategic nuclear arsenals in the negotiations on which submarine-launched ballistic missiles and submarine-launched cruise missiles are involved.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of his counterparts in other countries he has met recently; and with whom he has discussed, as appropriate to his office, matters of national security.

Mr. Younger: I met ministerial colleagues at the recent defence planning committee meeting in Brussels. I have also recently met the Australian and Malaysian Defence Ministers and the new French Defence Minister.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 29 June 1988

PRIME MINISTER

Interest Rates

Mr. Doran: To ask the Prime Minister what is the additional administrative cost to (a) the Treasury, and (b) other Government Departments of each half per cent. change in interest rates.

The Prime Minister: Little or none; and certainly too small to be identified within the administrative expenditure of Government Departments.

Daya Bay Nuclear Plant

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received any recent representations in opposition to the Daya Bay nuclear plant being built with United Kingdom assistance.

The Prime Minister: No.

Nuclear-free Asia-Pacific

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received any information from the Governor-General in Hong Kong over the outcome of the conference for a nuclear-free Asia-Pacific held in Hong Kong on 8-12 June.

The Prime Minister: No.

Scientific and Medical Research

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government propose to seek international co-operation in undertaking the scientific and medical research recommended in the second report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment, COMARE; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Ministers and officials have regular discussions with their counterparts in other governmental and international agencies. The EC radiation research programme in particular already supports relevant work in this field. The COMARE report has been drawn to the attention of relevant international organisations and its recommendations on research will be fed into future discussions of research needs and priorities.

Sir John Harvey Jones

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what approach Her Majesty's Government made to Sir John Harvey Jones about his possible chairmanship of the proposed Universities Funding Council; which Department made the approach; for what reasons Sir John was not appointed to the post; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science on 26 May, at column 238, announced the appointment of Lord Chilver to be the first chairman of the Universities Funding Council. It is not the practice to comment further on public appointments of this kind.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to increase the numbers of refugees accepted for settlement by the United Kingdom following the Chief Secretary of Hong Kong's statement on 15 June that Hong Kong is in greater need of resettlement places now than at any time in the last eight years.

Mr. Hurd: I have nothing to add to the reply given to the hon. Member on 26 April at column 86.

Visas

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the criteria used to decide whether to permit foreign nationals needing a visa to enter the United Kingdom to arrive at a port of entry without one and subsequently to gain entry.

Mr. Hurd: Except where a standard waiver applies to transit passengers, the normal course would be to refuse admission to those requiring a valid visa and not possessing one. However, each case is considered on its merits, and such a passenger may be admitted if there are particularly compassionate or compelling circumstances.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign nationals needing visas to enter the United Kingdom have been permitted to arrive at a port of entry without one and have been granted entry to the United Kingdom during the past year; and if he will list their country of origin.

Mr. Hurd: No separate total is kept of such arrivals, and the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pet Animals

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the United Kingdom will sign the European convention for the protection of pet animals without any reservation on article 10 concerning surgical operations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This will be decided when our consultations are completed.

Immigration

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average waiting time for interviews of sponsors living in the United Kingdom in relation to applications from relatives living in the Indian sub-continent after relatives have been interviewed abroad, for each of the offices that conduct such interviews.

Mr. Renton: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoner (Costs)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average weekly cost of keeping a male offender in (a) a dispersal prison, (b) a category B training prison, (c) a category C training prison, (d) an open adult prison, (e) a closed youth establishment, and (f) an open youth establishment;

(2) what is the average cost weekly cost of keeping a female offender in (a) a dispersal prison, (b) a category B training prison, (c) a category C training prison, (d) an open adult prison, (e) a closed youth establishment, and (f) an open youth establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The average weekly costs are based on a financial year and in 1986-87, the latest year for which information is available, the average weekly costs were:

Establishment for males	£
Dispersal prisons	467
Category B training prisons	253
Category C training prisons	208
Open adult prisons	171
Closed youth establishments	278
Open youth establishments	332
All female establishments	343

The available information relating to the cost of keeping female prisoners does not distinguish between the different types of establishment.

Probation (Costs)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the estimated annual cost of supervising an offender on probation;

(2) what is the estimated annual cost of a community service order supervising one offender.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is published annually in "Probation Statistics, England and Wales" (table 12.3 of the latest issue, for 1986), copies of which are in the Library.

Magistrates' Courts (Staffing)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of state for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that adequate levels of staffing are maintained in the magistrates court service.

Mr. John Patten: The numbers of court staff undergoing training to act as court clerks have been increased. As regards pay and conditions of service, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 16 June at columns 194-95.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of current court clerk vacancies within the magistrates court service.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that returns received from 95 of the 105 magistrates courts committees in England and Wales, in a survey conducted by the joint negotiating committee for magistrates courts staff, indicated that there were 76 vacancies for court clerks (including senior, principal and trainee court clerks) on 1 April 1988, the latest date for which information is available, as follows:

	Vacancies
Barking	2
Bedfordshire	2
Berkshire	3
Birmingham	1
Buckinghamshire	1
Cleveland	2
Coventry	1
Cumbria	1
Derbyshire	1
Dorset	1
East Sussex	1
Gloucestershire	1
Hampshire	1
Humberside	1
Isle of Wight	1
Kent	7
Kirklees	1
Lancashire	3
Leeds	1
Leicestershire	4
Lincolnshire	1
Liverpool	3
Merton	1
Newham	1
Norfolk	6
North Tyneside	1
North Yorkshire	1
Nottinghamshire	5
St. Helens	2
Sandwell	2
Sheffield	2
South Tyneside	1
Staffordshire	3
Stockport	2
Sunderland	1
West Sussex	4
Wigan	1
Wiltshire	1

In addition, I understand that the inner London magistrates courts service had 15 vacancies in comparable grades.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list area by area the number of magistrates court days lost through staff shortages in the past 12 months.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not available centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Industrial Disputes (London)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the total costs of, and man-hours devoted to, the policing of major industrial disputes in London in the last three years; and what proportion of these costs has been recovered.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The News International dispute at Wapping was the only industrial dispute in the last three years which has required the maintenance of public order on a large scale.

I understand that the additional cost to the Metropolitan police of policing the dispute was about £5·75 million and involved over 1,280,000 police man-hours. None of the cost was recoverable.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

1992 Hot Line

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor the Duchy of Lancaster what representations his Department has received regarding lack of response from his Department to phone calls to the 1992 hot line; what is the average time in responding to inquiries made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: A number of callers have experienced delays in receiving a reply from the 1992 hot line. These, however, represent a tiny proportion of the total of over 50,000 calls since the hot line opened in March. the overwhelming proportion of callers receive a response within a few seconds.

Telephone Meters

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will consider authorising the Director General of Telecommunications to designate standards for meters.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in exercise of his powers under section 24 of the Telecommunications Act 1984, has decided to authorise the Director General of Telecommunications to designate standards for meters for use within telecommunication systems.

This is a further extension of the Director General's powers in the area of standards designation and is in addition to his existing powers to designate standards for telecommunications apparatus.

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps will be taken to reassure telephone users that the metering of calls is accurate.

Mr. Butcher: I can announce that I have received advice from the Director General of Telecommunications that I should appoint the British Approvals Board for Telecommunications (BABT) as an approval authority for the meters within the public telecommunication systems run by British Telecommunications plc or Mercury Communications Ltd.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has considered this advice and is minded, subject to consultation with the public telecommunications operators concerned, to so appoint BABT under section 25 of the 1984 Telecommunications Act.

I welcome this proposed metering approval role for BABT and also the wider steps that the Director General of Telecommunications has in mind to safeguard users' interests in this area. These steps are covered in a parallel announcement by the Director General today, which I am sure will be received with interest by many consumers.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the report of the investigation into his Department's handling of matters relating to the Barlow Clowes Group to be completed and made available.

Mr. Maude [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1988, c. 647]: Sir Godfray Le Quesne has assured me that he will report as soon as is consistent with the completion of a thoroughgoing inquiry. From what he has seen so far he confidently expects to report before Parliament reassembles in the autumn.

Subject to there being no legal impediment, either as to content or to timing, I would propose to publish the report as soon as practicable thereafter.

Radio Licence Fee (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why the radio licence fee of Clwyd fire brigade will increase from £25 per annum to £2,000 per annum in 1988-89, rising to a maximum of £5,000 per annum in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Until the recent increases, police and fire service requirements had been serviced by the regulatory authorities for nominal fees for more than 34 years. The radio investigation service devotes significant resources to preserving the integrity of radio communications for the emergency services. The increase in licence fees is designed to reduce the losses involved safeguarding the interests of these essential services. The level of future charges will depend on the type of service required and will take the views of users into account.

WALES

Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new teachers in the primary and secondary sector he proposes to urge local education authorities to enrol to meet additional requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend will expect local education authorities to staff their schools broadly within the framework of present planned resources. Firm estimates of demand arising from the new curriculum will depend on reports from the relevant subject working groups. There are likely to be additional demands in some subjects, but not necessarily an increase in numbers of teachers needed overall.

Foreign Languages

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to encourage the teaching of foreign languages in Wales; if he is satisfied with the current level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 24 June at columns 761-62.

SCOTLAND

Motherwell Project

8. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for the expansion of the Motherwell project, in view of the present level of unemployment and the prospects for the Ravenscraig hot mill in 1989.

Mr. Lang: The number unemployed in Motherwell district has fallen by 25 per cent. since January 1987. My right hon. and learned Friend and I have nevertheless indicated to the Scottish Development Agency that we regard Lanarkshire as an area which continues to need its special attention, and I expect the agency to remain active there both through the Motherwell project and other initiatives.

Waiting List Initiative

19. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's National Health Service waiting list initiative.

20. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the latest initiatives he has taken to reduce National Health Service hospital waiting lists in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am currently considering the allocation of the £3 million which I have set aside for the current year to reduce waiting lists and waiting times. Health boards have reacted enthusiastically to this initiative and over 180 projects have been submitted for assistance. I hope to make the first allocations to boards very shortly.

Livestock Farmers

21. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional financial support he has given in the current year to livestock farmers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under current schemes £85·2 million has so far been paid this year to livestock farmers in Scotland. In addition, sheep producers will benefit this year from a £2·8 million back payment of sheep annual premium.

Rating Reform

22. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Scottish Confederation of British Industry regarding the proposed new unified business rate.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have discussed business rates reform with representatives of the CBI in Scotland on a number of occasions.

23. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by what date he now anticipates that there will be in Scotland a business rate uniform with that in the rest of Great Britain.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 14 January at column 367.

24. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimate of the number of students in Scotland who will qualify for the 80 per cent. community charge rebate.

Mr. Lang: The latest estimate of the number of students in Scotland who will qualify for the 80 per cent. reduction in community charge is approximately 96,000.

32. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent communications he has had with poll tax registration officers on the progress of the poll tax registration process.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 26 May at column 185.

37. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has yet made any assessment of the progress made in the compilation of community charge registers in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 25 May at column 307.

Consultants (Discipline)

23. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review the disciplinary powers available to health boards in relation to alleged clinical or other misconduct by consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A review of disciplinary procedures for senior hospital and community doctors and dentists was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services on 12 March 1987.

UK Nirex Ltd.

26. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet Mr. John Baker of UK Nirex Ltd.; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend met Mr. Baker on 14 June to discuss the progress UK Nirex Ltd. is making with its consultation exercise. He has no plans to meet him again in the near future.

Council House Sales

27. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in Scotland since May 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of local authority houses reported to date as sold to sitting tenants between May 1979 and March 1988 is 83,600.

GPT, Kirkcaldy

28. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the mangement of GPT concerning its operations in Kirkcaldy.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has been keeping a close watch on developments at Kirkcaldy. I have met Mr. Richard Reynolds, GPT's managing director. In addition, the Scottish Development Agency is working with local management, helping to seek opportunities for alternative products or activities for the plant and its work force. My officials in the industry department are in close touch with the Scottish Development Agency.

Manufacturing Productivity

29. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the increase in manufacturing productivity in Scotland between 1979 and the present.

Mr. Lang: Manufacturing productivity in Scotland increased by an average of 5·7 per cent. per annum between 1979 and 1987. This rate of growth was faster than that achieved by the United Kingdom, United States, West Germany, Japan, France, Canada and Italy.

Fish Farming

30. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on fish farming development.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Representations have been received from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other organisations about the procedures operated by the Crown Estate Commissioners in respect of marine fish farm developments. My right hon. and learned Friend is reviewing the operation of the consultation arrangements taking into account those representations.

In addition, a number of reports concerning the development of fish farming in Scotland have been received and are being considered.

NHS (Quality Control)

31. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to improve the quality of service to patients in the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have provided substantially more finance, capital investment and qualified staff for the Health Service in Scotland—all of which improve the quality of service. We have given priority to the services for those who have to stay in hospitals for long periods; and since an important element in quality is speedy treatment, we have made reduction in waiting times a priority. We shall also be publishing soon an important report on "Quality Assurance in Nursing" which will help health boards review their approach to quality issues in the nursing service.

Maternity and Neonatal Services, Grampian

33. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has now received the full submission from Grampian health board on the future of maternity and neonatal services in Grampian region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Rate Income

34. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the proportion of local authority revenues in Scotland coming from commercial and business rates in 1988-89.

Mr. Lang: The estimated proportion of local authority revenues in Scotland met by commercial and business rates in 1988-89 is 29 per cent.

Electricity Industry (Privatisation)

35. Mr. Millan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on his proposals for the privatisation of the electricity industry in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Buchan).

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with, and what representations he has received from, major industrial users of electricity in Scotland in connection with his proposals for the future of the electricity industry in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Representations from a range of organisations were received prior to the announcement of the Government's proposals on 2 March. The CBI (Scotland), the Scottish Council Development and Industry and the Chemical Industries Association have recently been invited to offer views on the regulatory aspects of our proposals.

Scottish Homes

36. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further steps his Department has taken to establish Scottish Homes; and whether he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The process of preparing for the establishment of Scottish Homes is a continuous task for the Scottish Development Department, which involves a wide variety of preparatory activities. In addition, the Scottish Development Department has, with my agreement, appointed consultants to carry out two specialised commissions. These are to assist with the recruitment of a chief executive and to produce proposals in relation to the task of advising the board and chief executive of Scottish Homes on possible options for its organisational structure and on an implementation and development plan in relation to the action necessary to enable Scottish Homes to establish itself as fully operational.

Roads

38. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had on the quality of the road network in north Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The road network, and in particular the A9 trunk road, were discussed when my right hon. and learned Friend met Caithness chamber of commerce and Caithness district council last week.

Inshore Fishing

39. Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete his review of inshore fishing arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At this stage, I cannot predict when the review will be completed. Comments on our recent consultation paper on the inshore fishing regime were requested by 3 June. A programme of consultation meetings at various locations around the coast is now under way. Thereafter time will be required for all concerned to consider and discuss the various new ideas which have been advanced. Our intention is to circulate a further consultation document setting out the Government's views on the best way forward.

Griffiths Report

40. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from (a) voluntary organisations and (b) public bodies in respect of the Griffiths report and its relevance to Scottish social work activities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Representations have been received so far from the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations, the Independent Hospitals Association and Lothian regional council. Highland health board has indicated that it will be commenting on the report shortly.

Hospital Waiting Lists, Tayside

41. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the most recent figures of waiting lists for hospitals in Tayside.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provisional figures show that on 30 September 1987, 5,851 people were awaiting in-patient treatment at NHS hospitals in Tayside.

Glasgow Royal Maternity Hospital

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the number of non-resident patients admitted to the Glasgow royal maternity hospital in April, including who authorised any such admissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Chronically Sick and Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure (a) that all the relevant local authorities in Scotland are financially able to discharge in full their statutory duties under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons (Scotland) Act, and (b) that their duties under the Act are being fully discharged by all local authorities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am satisfied that the terms of successive rate support grant settlements have been such as to enable local authorities to discharge their statutory duties. It is for individual authorities to ensure that they comply with obligations imposed by statute.

Prisoners (Escapes)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners have escaped from Scottish prisons in the last 10 years for which information is available; and from which prisons they escaped.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table.

An escape is defined as circumstances where any inmate, convicted or untried, leaves the precincts of an open or closed institution without authority, where this involves overcoming a physical security barrier, or breaking away from a close escort when outside the secure perimeter of a closed institution.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners have escaped from police custody in the last 10 years for which information is available; and which police forces they escaped from.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that this information is not available in the form requested. The table details the number of crimes of escape and rescue recorded by the police in Scotland by police force area. These figures include escaping from police custody or prison.

Legal Aid

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for legal advice and assistance under the Scottish legal aid scheme have been granted in the last 10 years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

	Applications granted
1978-79	65,132
1979-80	81,546
1980-81	95,380
1981-82	111,469
1982-83	120,811
1983-84	131,173
1984-85	140,647
1985-86	154,748
1986-87	170,596
1987-88	[1]226,760

[1] Includes assistance by way of representation, which was introduced by the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986.

Speed Limits

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many requests he has received from Fife regional council over the past five years for changing an existing speed limit; how many such requests have been granted; and how many have been refused.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The criteria for determining appropriate speed limits apply throughout Great Britain. They are set out in Scottish Development Department circular No. 18/80 and were issued after full consultation with various representative bodies, including the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland).

Four requests have been received from Fife regional council in the last five years. Two requests have been approved and two have been turned down. My right hon. and learned Friend has to be satisfied that the relevant criteria are fully met before he can grant approval for a change in speed limits.

Drug Squads

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police forces in Scotland have drug squads; what is the establishment in each case; and in how many cases the squads are operating below establishment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Specialist drug units operate in all eight police forces in Scotland. The complement of each drug unit is as follows:

	Complement
Central Scotland	2
Dumfries and Galloway	2
Fife	4
Grampian	9
Lothian and Borders	21
Northern	5
Strathclyde	34
Tayside	10
Total	87

None of these posts is currently vacant.

In addition, 21 officers attached to the Scottish crime squad are deployed in drug wings based in Glasgow and Edinburgh.

Schools (Staffing Review)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a date for the publication of the staffing review circular, in the light of the commitment in SE/40 that it would be published before the end of the current school year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) on 24 June at column 752.

Maternity Services (Moray)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received from the people of Moray about the case for retaining local general practitioners' maternity units and for establishing a specialist obstetric unit in Elgin.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have received 98 representations from people in Moray about the future of maternity services provision there.

Radiation

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have already been undertaken by his Department to implement the recommendations of the second report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment, COMARE.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Recommendations 1, 2 and 4(d) of the second report relate specifically to Scotland: their implementation was covered in my reply of 8 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker). United Kingdom Health Departments are collectively considering how to implement recommendations 3, 6, 7 and 8.

Peterhead Prison

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to announce a decision on the future of Peterhead prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) on 27 January at column 285. My right hon. and learned Friend will announce a decision when he has completed his consideration of the complex factors involved.

Bathing Waters

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will announce the publication date of the report on the quality of Scottish bathing waters mentioned in his written answer on 5 May, Official Report, column 536.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department published today the report "Bathing Waters in Scotland, Results of Monitoring: 1986 and 1987."

I should emphasise that the report deals with the quality of the 23 waters in Scotland identified in terms of the EC bathing waters directive. It does not deal with the condition of beaches nor with the provision of facilities such as changing accommodation, toilets and catering.

The report describes the main provisions of the EC directive and the way in which the 23 Scottish waters were identified in 1987. It goes on to tabulate and discuss the results of monitoring by the river purification boards in the 1986 and 1987 bathing seasons.

In 1987, the first full season of monitoring, 19 of the 23 waters met the directives quality standards. In addition, the failure at Turnberry was the result of temporary circumstances and is being followed up by the river purification board; and further monitoring is required at Ayr to establish whether improvements to the sewerage system are necessary. There is no doubt, however, that the waters at Irvine and Girvan do not meet the directive's standards and that Strathclyde regional council will have to improve the sewerage systems in order to comply with the standards of the directive.

A success rate of over 80 per cent. in identified bathing waters is nevertheless encouraging. The general standard of Scottish coastal and estuarial waters is excellent, including those bathing waters which are not identified under the directive. We can look forward to the improvement of problem areas through further investment by industry, and by the regional councils which have plans for expenditure of £60 million on sewerage schemes over the next five years.

I wish to pay tribute to the work of the river purification boards. Their efforts have contributed greatly to the improvement of water quality generally over the years, and their independent status means that we have reliable information on bathing waters and the rest of the aquatic environment.

Bruntsfield Hospital

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional resources he made available to Lothian health board for the upgrading of the Bruntsfield hospital following his predecessor's decision in 1985 to keep the hospital open.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Special allocations to cover backlog maintenance of the National Health Service estate are made annually to health boards. It is for individual boards to decide, in the light of competing priorities, on which schemes the resources should be used.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has on the per capital amount, in pounds sterling, spent on overseas aid by each member state of the EEC, the USA, Canada, Sweden, Norway and Japan, in the most recent financial year for which information is available;

(2) what information he has regarding the percentage of gross national product spent on overseas aid by each member state of the EEC, the USA, Canada, Sweden, Norway and Japan in the most recent financial year for which information is available.

Mr. Chris Patten: Comparative figures are available only on a calendar year basis and, in so far as member states of the European Community are concerned, in respect of the eight EC countries which belong to the OECD's development assistance committee (DAC). The information for 1987 is as follows:

Net official development assistance 1987

	[1]Per capita [2]£ sterling	As a percentage of GNP
Belgium	43	0·49
Canada	45	0·46
Denmark	102	0·88
France	73	0·75
Germany	44	0·39
Ireland	9	0·20
Italy	26	0·32
Japan	37	0·31
Netherlands	88	0·98
Norway	130	1·10
Sweden	97	0·85
United Kingdom	20	0·28
United States of America	22	0·20

[1] The population figures used are those for 1986, as given in the DAC 1987 Development Corporation Report.

[2] OECD figures are published in dollars and have been converted to sterling at the 1987 annual average exchange rate of $1 = £0·6102.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

European Awareness

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to increase European awareness in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Recognising the need for a real awareness of the European dimension in education, the Department is supporting a pilot project designed to encourage selected local education authorities to develop cohesive and comprehensive policies on this throughout their areas, in co-operation with surrounding authorities. The dissemination of the outcomes of the pilot will contribute towards the implementation of the resolution on this subject adopted by the EC Education Ministers' Council on 24 May. There will be scope, under our proposals for the national curriculum, for topics such as European awareness to be taught through the relevant foundation subjects, where appropriate, or among the non-foundation subjects.

Trade Union Training

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much grant aid was given in the financial year 1987-88 to (a) the Trades Union Congress to cover trade union training and (b) non-Trades Union Congress affiliated unions to cover trade union training; and whether he will list those non-Trades Union Congress affiliated unions that have claimed grant aid in 1987-88.

Mr. Dunn: The position on grant aid for trades union education and training which took place in the financial year 1987-88 is as follows:

a. Unions Affiliated to the Trades Union Congress
i. grant paid	457,653·42
ii. claims under consideration	1,257,790·57
iii. balance of grant available and yet to be claimed	£33,556·01
Total	£1,749,000·00
b. Unions not affiliated to the TUC
i. grant paid	38,439·71
ii. claims under consideration	61,016·82
Total	99,456·53

The following unions not affiliated to the TUC have claimed grant for education and training courses held during 1987-88:

Society of Radiographers
Association of National Health Service Officers
Sun Life Staff Association
Nationwide Building Society Staff Association
Halifax Building Society Staff Association
British Dental Association
Natwest Staff Association
Corporation of London Staff Association
Professional Association of Teachers
Association of Clinical Biochemists
Staffordshire Building Society Staff Association
Chartered Society of Physiotherapy
Anglia Building Society Staff Association
Royal College of Midwives
National Association of Head Teachers
Royal College of Nursing
National and Provincial Building Society Staff Association
Union of Democratic Mineworkers
British Medical Association

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any evidence of dissatisfaction among (a) heads and (b) other teachers leading to early retirement or transfer to other careers.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have no evidence to suggest that dissatisfaction with their work is leading greater numbers of heads or other teachers to retire early from teaching or to take up other careers. The number of premature retirements each year has not varied substantially over the last five years. Evidence presented to the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions by the local authorities conditions of service advisory board indicate that only a very small proportion of wastage in the teacher force related to teachers leaving to take up other employment—equivalent to about 0·4 per cent. of primary teachers and 1 per cent. of secondary teachers in the financial year 1985-86.

School Governors

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further representations he has had on the expanded roles of school governors; what assessment he has made of the extent to which suitable people are likely to come forward as governors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: A number of letters received by my right hon. Friend have commented upon school governors' new roles and responsibilities. The Government believe that many people will be attracted by this expanded role; and, in order to ensure that potential governors are aware of the new opportunities, we are giving greater publicity to the functions of school governors and the means of becoming a governor.

ENERGY

Coal Dispute

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what further representations he has received asking him to seek discussions with British Coal regarding the reinstatement of miners sacked during the 1984-85 coal strike; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. Friend on 28 March 1988 column 293.

Mining Industry (Coats and Jackets)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now issue a direction to British Coal instructing it to maintain long-standing contracts with British cloth manufacturers for the production of coats and jackets used in the mining industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. This is a matter for British Coal management.

Coal Imports

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy from which countries Britain has imported coal in the last 12 months; how many tonnes have been imported from each respective country; and what information he has on the price per tonne from each country listed at the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The latest information on imports of coal by country is as follows. For the data on price of coal per tonne I would refer the hon. Member to my answer of today's date.

1987

Country (of origin)	Quantity thousand tonnes
Australia	3,459

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list information available to him on the price per tonne of coal for each country from which Britain has imported coal in 1984, 1985 and 1986 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested is as follows:

Average value per tonne £

Country (of origin)	1984	1985	1986	1987
Australia	45·41	46·30	39·00	33·28

NUM (Back Pay)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now issue a direction to British Coal instructing it to make back payments to members of the National Union of Mineworkers from 1 November 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. This is a matter for the management of British Coal.

Concessionary Coal

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now issue a direction to British Coal instructing it to seek amendments to the concessionary coal and smokless fuel agreements to provide benefit for mineworkers who, with at least 20 years' service, have been declared redundant and are not in full-time employment.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. Concessionary fuel is a matter for British Coal.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies are being undertaken or sponsored by his Department to investigate the likely changes in the event of a Severn barrage being constructed, in tidal regime, sediment deposition and area of intertidal silts exposed by the tide at Bridgwater bay and the upper Severn.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Studies on tidal regime, sediment deposition, and area of intertidal silts exposed by the tide, are currently being carried out by the Severn tidal power group as part of the £4·26 million Severn barrage study jointly funded by the Severn tidal power group, the Central Electricty Generating Board and my Department.

In addition, we are commissioning a computer modelling generic study of intertidal and flat areas with Hydraulics Research Ltd. at Wallingford.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the annual amount of electricity that would be generated by the most favoured tidal barrage scheme currently being proposed for the Severn estuary; and if he will express this as a percentage of the electricity demand forecast for England and Wales in (a) 1987 and (b) 2000.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Severn tidal power group estimates that the most favoured barrage proposed for the Severn estuary on the line seaward of Cardiff to Weston-super-Mare would produce about 14·4 Terawatt hours per year, or 6 per cent. of current electricity demand for England and Wales. The percentage in the year 2000 will depend on the growth in demand.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies have been undertaken by his Department as to the impact upon bulk users of electricity in the United Kingdom of any increase in electricity prices; whether he will take special account of the position of bulk users when considering representations about the level of any such increases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cecil Parkinson: I am fully aware of the impact of bulk users of increases in electricity prices. The contracted load schemes and the qualifying industrial consumers scheme operated by the electricity supply industry continue to provide significant reductions in the price of electricity to bulk users.

Dinorwig Pumped Storage Facility

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated replacement cost at current prices of the Dinorwig pumped storage facility.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the Central Electricity Generating Board, that the estimated current replacement cost of the Dinorwig pumped storage station is £840 million in 1987-88 prices.

ENVIRONMENT

Departmental Facilities

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those hon. and right hon. Members and Members of the House of Lords other than Government Ministers who are entitled to use his Department's secretarial facilities and stationery.

Mr. Ridley: These facilities are occasionally made available to Parliamentary Private Secretaries when doing work on behalf of departmental Ministers, and to my noble Friend, Lord Hesketh, who is a Whip for my Department. In addition, my noble Friend, Lord

Crickhowell, as chairman of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee, has his secretarial facilities and stationery provided by my Department.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for each standard planning region of England (a) the number of employees of his Department, (b) the amount spent in wages and salaries and (c) the proportion of total expenditure in each region by his Department which is represented by personnel costs.

Mr. Ridley: The information is not readily available in the format requested. The latest numbers and approximate salary costs of employees in my Department (including the Property Services Agency) broken down by DOE(C) and PSA administrative regions are as follows:

	Number of staff as at 1 June 1988	1988-89 forecast salaries expenditure[1] £ million

The requested analysis of salaries compared with total Departmental expenditure in each region is not readily available.

District Audit Service

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what proportion of local authority audits is undertaken by the district audit service and what proportion is contracted out to private firms of accountants.

Mr. Chope: In its annual report for 1987-88 the Audit Commission recorded that the district audit service carried out some 70 per cent. of local authority audit work and that the remaining 30 per cent. was carried out by private firms. I understand that these figures relate to the proportion by value of work done.

Homelessness

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for each local authority area in England the total number of people (a) registered as homeless, and (b) in bed and breakfast accommodation.

Mrs. Roe: The number of households which authorities reported accepting as homeless in January to March and the numbers temporarily in bed and breakfast accommodation at the end of March, appear in table 7 of "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the first quarter of 1988 Supplementary Tables", which is available in the Library.

Rating Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much, to whom and by which mechanisms he intends to allocate additional resources in this and the next financial year with regard to work preparatory to the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Howard: The findings of the Price Waterhouse report indicate that authorities have been provided with sufficient resources for 1988-89. Charging authorities will be provided with resources for preparation costs in 1989-90 through the RSG settlement and capital allocations. Final announcements on the actual provision will follow the usual consultation with local authority associations on RSG and in the specification for capital allocations following the Chancellor's autumn statement.

Waste Tips (Explosions)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish immediately the report prepared by Her Majesty's pollution inspectorate on waste tip gas explosion dangers; and if he will make a statement on the scale of danger of methane gas explosions and waste tips and the remedial measures he proposes to take.

Mr. Moynihan: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is analysing the replies from waste disposal authorities to its letter of December 1987 on landfill gas. It will report their conclusions to the Secretary of State in due course. It plans to issue advice in the autumn on the remedial action to be taken in cases where the disposal authority identifies a risk.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what negotiations he intends to introduce to enforce a higher standard of safety of rubbish tips generating a build up of methane gas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Control of Pollution Act 1974 places a duty on waste disposal authorities to license disposal facilities so that operations do not present a risk to public health. This enables waste disposal authorities to take whatever action is necessary to ensure the generation of landfill gas is fully controlled. However, further advice is being prepared as a matter of urgency to guide the disposal authorities in licensing the management of landfill gas. This will be published in the form of a waste management paper in the autumn.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions the Government have reached following the public consultation exercise on waste disposal law amendment.

Mr. Ridley: My Department and the Welsh Office have announced today the Government's conclusions on the amendment of waste disposal law in the light of comments received on the public consultation paper issued on 15 September 1986. Copies of those comments whose authors agreed to publication are being placed in the Library of the House, together with copies of the 1986 consultation paper, a detailed statement of the two Departments' conclusions and a compliance cost assessment estimating the costs of these measures for industry.

The Government intend to enact all the main proposals set out in the 1986 consultation paper.

A statutory duty of care will be imposed on both producers and holders of waste. Guidance on the duty will be set out in a code of practice.

Carriers of waste will be obliged to register with a waste disposal authority, and there will be provision for the revocation or refusal of registration to persons with unspent convictions for relevant offences.

I will be able to make regulations empowering waste disposal authorities to refuse, revoke, suspend, or refuse the transfer of waste disposal licences to unfit persons. The regulations will be able to specify, as grounds for judging fitness, an applicant's previous unspent convictions, financial resources or technical competence (once a suitable certificate of competence has been introduced in the industry).

Goods vehicle operator licensing authorities will be enabled to take account of convictions of relevant pollution offences in operator licensing.

Waste disposal authorities will be empowered to impose conditions requiring pollution control measures at licensed waste disposal sites to continue as long as may be necessary to make each site safe. Licence holders will no longer be able to surrender a licence until they have satisfied the authority that their site is safe.

Other amendments will be made to the Control of Pollution Act 974 to enable prosecutions for the breach of any waste disposal licence conditions, to permit the licensing of mobile plant, to provide for appeals against delay by authorities in modifying licences and to empower me to direct the disposal of particular waste.

The Government will introduce nationally prescribed charges by waste disposal authorities for the issue of site licences and the registration of waste carriers. The burden of licensing and enforcement will therefore be lifted from local government which will recover its reasonable costs by these charges. There will be some increase in central Government work under new provisions for appeals to me. The main burden of these proposals will fall on industry, either directly through the additional care to be required or indirectly through charges. The estimate in the compliance cost assessment is that these might add some £22 million to industry's annual costs. I believe that this is a price worth paying for increasing the effectiveness of waste regulation.

These measures command a wide measure of support from industry and pollution control bodies. The Government will introduce legislation embodying them when parliamentary time permits.

Since the 1986 consultation exercise a number of further possible improvements to waste disposal law have been considered. My Department and the Welsh Office are preparing a short additional consultation paper on these new proposals which will be issued shortly.

Waste Disposal Authorities

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the report of the working group considering the information needs of waste disposal authorities, the setting up of which was announced on 10 December 1985.

Mr. Moynihan: I have today placed copies of the report in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities.

[2] In accordance with the Department's Code of Practice governing the use of ethnic data, figures for ethnic minorities have been rounded to the nearest 5 to preserve confidentiality; an asterisk denotes less than 3. The percentages have been calculated on the basis of unrounded data.

[3] Equivalent information on ethnic origins of industrial staff is not available.

[4] Because of [3] above, the percentage quoted is based on the figure for non-industrial staff only.

Alcohol (Duties)

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest estimated receipts in 1987-88 and 1988-89 from duties and from value added tax on spirits, beer, wine, made-wine, cider and perry, respectively; and to what factors he attributes any differences.

Mr. Lilley: The information is as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE

Sir Michael Quinlan

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service why, in the "Civil Service Year Book" for 1988, the title of Sir Michael Quinlan KCB was given only as grade 1, in the Department of Employment; whether he was the senior civil servant in that Department; and whether Sir Michael had no other description or title.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 June 1988]: Revised grading classifications for senior posts were introduced in 1984. Permanent Secretary—the senior Civil Service post, became grade 1 and this title has been used in the "Civil Service Year Book". Sir Michael Quinlan was the senior civil servant in the Department of Employment. The titles "Permanent Secretary" and "Head of Department" are sometimes used in other documents.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what recent steps have been taken to increase employment opportunities in Government Departments for people with disabilities; and if he will make a statement on current variations in the percentages of jobs filled by disabled people in Government Departments.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 28 June 1988]: Civil Service policies to increase employment opportunities for people with disabilities are set out in the code of practice published by the Cabinet Office in 1985. In the last 12 months, my Department has taken a number of steps to increase the effectiveness of these policies. These include:

(i) developing direct links with voluntary organisations involved in training and employment projects for people with disabilities; recent contacts include Outset, Lambeth Accord, and the Royal National Institute for the Deaf;

(ii) work to develop appropriate training to help Departmental Disabled Persons Officers to implement policies more effectively;

(iii) improving the quality of information about the posting and career development of staff with disabilities to allow statistical monitoring and the identification of barriers to equality;

(iv) publicising within the Civil Service the work of the Department of Employment Disablement Advisory Service and encouraging participation in the Sheltered Placement Scheme and the Remote Work Unit Scheme.

The most recent figures showing departmental variations in the employment of registered disabled staff were published in the January 1988 edition of "Independent". A copy is in the Library. the Civil Service is committed to increasing job opportunities for people with disabilities and all Departments are encouraged to increase their employment of registered disabled staff to at least 3 per cent. of the work force.

THE ARTS

Welsh Arts Council

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts what were the total grants to the Welsh Arts Council for every year since 1978-79 up to and including that planned for 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is as follows

1978-79	4,004,200
1979-80	4,664,000
1980-81	5,147,000
1981-82	5,705,000
1982-83	6,809,350
1983-84	6,649,150
1984-85	7,222,620
1985-86	7,378,725
1986-87	7,901,500
1987-88	8,045,200
1988-89	8,683,000

The figures comprise grants from the Arts Council, the Crafts Council and the British Film Institute.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts when the Office of Arts and Libraries proposes to issue a press notice giving information laid before the House, in accordance with section 9(6) of the National Heritage Act 1980, specifying disposals and transfers of property accepted in lieu of capital transfer tax and inheritance tax carried out during the financial year 1987-88, and including particulars of the bodies or institutions to whom transfers were made and the amount of tax satisfied in each case.

Mr. Luce: The statement is being prepared and will be laid shortly. A press notice will be issued on the same day.

Books for the Blind

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) of 9 May, Official Report, column 33, whether the free basic public library service includes the provision of large print books for those with impaired sight and talking books for the blind.

Mr. Luce: Library authorities have discretion to provide talking books free and can make no charge for lending large print books. I have at present no plans to change either arrangement, but I shall, of course, take account of the responses to my library consultative document.

Library Charging Methods

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister for the Arts what studies have been undertaken by his Department concerning the use of library charging methods in New Zealand, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have obtained information about the public library book rental subscription scheme run by some library authorities in New Zealand and the United States. Some West German library authorities charge for their normal book lending services, but I am not aware that any provide a premium book subscription scheme.

Works of Art (Sales)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many works of art from (a) the National gallery, and (b) other publicly owned galleries have been sold in the last year.

Mr. Luce: The National gallery is at present barred by its governing legislation from selling pictures from its collection. The other national art galleries for which my Department is directly responsible—the Tate gallery, the National Portrait gallery and the Wallace collection—are also prevented by statute or otherwise from selling any of the works of art in their collections.

The position for local authority museums and galleries varies according to their constitution. Information on sales from their collections is not held centrally.

Library Services

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister for the Arts what responses he has received to the Green Paper on library services from (a) local authorities, (b) professional organisations, and (c) individuals; and how many of those gave support to the proposals outlined in the Green Paper.

Mr. Luce: I have received about 850 responses so far to the library Green Paper, predominantly from individuals, but many from library authorities. I can, I understand, expect to receive comments before 30 June from all the major professional library organisations. The task of analysing and considering the responses will follow.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kuwait

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth of 16 June, Official Report, column 220, if he will list the subjects which have been, and are likely to be discussed by members of the United Kingdom and Kuwaiti Governments.

Mr. Mellor: It is not our practice to reveal the detail of communications between Governments. The House may be assured that they cover regional questions and matters pertinent to the relationship between the two countries.

Taiwan

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any representation from the Taiwanese Government seeking United Kingdom technical assistance in the safe relocation of its stored nuclear waste at Lanyu Island off the east coast of Taiwan.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Daya Bay Nuclear Plant

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has circulated to independent experts for peer review the report by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for the Government of Hong Kong on contingency planning for the Daya Bay pressurised water reactor nuclear power plant.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's report on contingency planning was published in Hong Kong on 5 May. The Hong Kong Government are formulating their contingency plans on the basis of the report. They do not intend to circulate it to independent experts for review.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current arrangement for financial and industrial partnership in the Daya Bay nuclear plant.

Mr. Eggar: The Daya Bay nuclear power station is a 75 per cent.-25 per cent. joint venture project between the Guangdong Nuclear Investment Company and the Hong Kong Nuclear Investment Company. The nuclear steam supply system for the power station will be supplied by Framatome of France while the turbines and generators will be supplied by General Electric Company of the United Kingdom. In addition, the General Electric Company, in a consortium with the Shangdong Electric Power Company, has received letters of intent for the civil works contracts associated with the conventional island.

Falkland Islands (Fisheries)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about vessels arrested and other measures taken against contravention of the regulations governing fishing in the Falklands interim conservation and management zone.

Mr. Eggar: Vessels from the Republic of Korea were arrested on four occasions in April and May 1988 for fishing illegally in the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone and were fined a total of £260,000 by magistrates in Port Stanley. A Polish vessel received an administrative penalty of £1,000 for unlicensed transshipment of fish.

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which United Kingdom trawler operators are now engaged in Falkland Islands and South Georgia waters, respectively; what is the effect on employment in those territories and in the United Kingdom, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The following United Kingdom trawler operators and licence holders are currently engaged in Falkland Island waters:

Berkeley Sound Shipping Company
Caley International Limited
Coalite
Fishing Explorer Limited
International Fisheries Investment Limited
Marr (Falklands) Limited
Seaboard Offshore
SPF Atlantic Fishery
Witte-Boyd Holdings

None is at present engaged in South Georgia waters.

There is negligible unemployment in the Falkland Islands. British companies are training islanders in fisheries-related skills. There is no indigenous population in South Georgia.

The Falklands fishery has created welcome job opportunities for British seamen and others involved in fisheries activity.

UN Security Council Resolution 453

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 8 June, Official Report, column 604, what response has been received from the South African Government to pressure from Her Majesty's Government to agree to the implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 453.

Mrs. Chalker: South Africa is well aware of our position. It is participating in discussions with the United States, Angola and Cuba on withdrawal of foreign troops from Angola and the implementation of UN Security Council resolution 453 for Namibian independence.

Diplomatic Service

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many serving staff of the diplomatic service in the administrative group were recruited from polytechnics; and what numbers were so recruited in each of the years 1985 to 1987, inclusive.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a breakdown of the university degree in terms of subject held by serving staff of the diplomatic service in the administrative group.

Mrs. Chalker: The records are currently subject to a computer modernisation programme. According to present information, serving staff of the diplomatic service in the administrative group hold the following university degrees:

Subject	Number
Anthropology/Archaeology	7

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will provide a breakdown of the type of secondary school attended by serving staff of the diplomatic service in the administrative group.

Mrs. Chalker: This information can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a breakdown of the universities from which serving staff of the diplomatic service in the administrative group have been recruited indicating in each case the numbers recruited in each of the years 1985 to 1987, inclusive.

Mrs. Chalker: The records are currently subject to a computer modernisation programme. According to present information, serving staff of the diplomatic service in the administrative group have been recruited as follows:

Iranian Nationals

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and representatives of the Church of England regarding the entry into the United Kingdom of Iranian nationals not possessing a valid entry visa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the Church of England concerning the entry of any Iranian national not in possession of a valid entry visa.

Iran

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the state of relations between the United Kingdom and Iran; whether any special consideration has been given to any member of those families connected with the Iranian Government with regard to entry to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 28 June to a question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing). All visa applications are considered on their merits and are measured against the requirements of the immigration law.

DEFENCE

Procurement

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the growth in real terms of the defence procurement budget in 1988-89.

Mr. Sainsbury: Planned defence procurement expenditure in 1988-89 allows for a real increase of some 19 per cent. compared with the outturn for 1978-79, using a measure of inflation based on movements in the price of defence equipment.

HMS Abdiel

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will reconsider urgently the decision to pay off and scrap HMS Abdiel.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the acquisition of a new air-launched nuclear missile.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Studies into a replacement for the United Kingdom's free-fall nuclear bomb are continuing. A number of options remain open to us. No procurement decisions have yet been taken, nor are any likely before the end of next year.

Army Exercise (Heathrow)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purpose and function of the British Army exercise on 9 April at Heathrow airport.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No such exercise took place.

United States Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the planned deployment of United States air national guard A-7 aircraft to RAF Wittering in June 1988.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Twelve United States air force (USAF) A7 aircraft deployed to RAF Wittering during the period 4 to 8 June for exercise Coronet King. This formed part of an annual programme of short-term deployments designed to provide experience for USAF reservist aircrew of locations in which they might have to operate in time of war. During this deployment, the aircrew took part in exercises in the United Kingdom and in continental Europe.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the planned deployment of United States-based United States Air Force A-10 aircraft to RAF Woodbridge in June 1988 in exercise Coronet Spear;

(2) if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the planned deployment of United States Air Force F-111 and EF-111 aircraft to Boscombe Down in July.

(3) if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the planned deployment of United States marine corps AV-8 aircraft to Edinburgh airport in September.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No such deployments are planned.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the planned deployment of United States Air Force reserve C-130 aircraft to RAF Benson in September;

(2) if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the planned deployment of United States marine corps F-18 aircraft to Edinburgh airport in September.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Planning for these deployments is not yet complete. Appropriate notifications will be issued in due course.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the planned deployment of United States Air Force B-52 aircraft to RAF Marham in June;

(2) what facilities have been established at RAF Marham for support of United States Air Force B-2 aircraft.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Further to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member on 13 June at columns 70-71, the main purpose of the deployment of these aircraft, which was at the invitation of the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force, was to participate in an exercise involving conventional missile attack upon a target hulk. This took place successfully on 21 June. The aircraft made use of existing facilities.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the withdrawal of six F-111F aircraft and supporting personnel from the 48 Tactical Fighter Wing, announced by the United States Air Force in February 1986 will take place.

Mr. Ian Stewart: This routine redeployment took place during the first half of 1987.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the cost to Her Majesty's Government of the movement of two United States Air Force A-10 squadrons from RAF Bentwaters to RAF Alconbury; and if any of this cost will be reimbursed;

(2) what is the cost to her Majesty's Government of the movement of the United States Air Force 527th Aggressor squadron from RAF Alconbury to RAF Bentwaters; and if any of this cost will be reimbursed.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No such costs are currently foreseen.

United States Forces

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the increase in a number of United States military personnel at Glen Douglas since 1981.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There has been no increase in the number of US military personnel at Glen Douglas since 1981. I regret that there was an error in the figures for 1979 to 1981 in the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) on 3 December 1987 at columns 709-10. There have been 18 US military personnel located at Glen Douglas during each year of the period 1979 to 1987, consisting of two personnel stationed there on a permanent basis (hence the figures for the years 1979 to 1981 in my earlier reply) and a further 16 personnel on tours of detached duty on a rotating basis.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the increase in number of United States military personnel at Machrihanish between 1981 and 1987.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The number of United States military personnel at RAF Machrihanish increased in 1981 with the arrival of a United States navy special warfare unit. Fluctuations in the numbers since then result from the composition of the unit which has a small permanent staff and additional personnel on detachment from the United States for periods of about six months.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the 1973 United States-United Kingdom lines of communication arrangement provides for logistic support to be supplied to United States forces that are not acting in support of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation operations.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No.

HMS Conqueror

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will launch an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the damage sustained by HMS Conqueror during exercises earlier this month.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. The damage, which was superficial and readily repaired, occurred during controlled weapon trials and there are no unknown circumstances which require investigation.

US European Command

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list those facilities in the United Kingdom that are used in support of the United States European command;

(2) if he will list those facilities in the United Kingdom that are used in support of the United States central command.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I understand that all the bases and facilities in the United Kingdom which have been made available for use by United States forces (which were listed in the reply which I gave to the hon. Member on 20 June at columns 431-32) are used in support of the United States European command and that none of them is used in support of the United States central command.

North Pole Rendezvous

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the estimated cost of the rendezvous of HMS Turbulent, HMS Superb and two RAF Nimrods at the north pole in May; if any of this cost will be reimbursed by Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Limited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The surfacing at the north pole by Her Majesty's submarines Turbulent and Superb formed part of a programme of Royal Navy trials and experiments in the Arctic ocean. Similarly, recording of the event by RAF Nimrod aircraft was undertaken as part of a normal training sortie. Consequently, any additional costs associated with the rendezvous would have been small and cannot be identified accurately in isolation from the costs of the exercises as a whole. The rendezvous was not undertaken on behalf of Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Limited and no financial contribution is therefore being sought from that source.

Exercise Elder Forest

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what liquid was sprayed from the Hawker Hunter that undertook mock chemical attacks on air defence bases during Exercise Elder Forest; how much of this liquid was used during Exercise Elder Forest; if this liquid was non-toxic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: During Exercise Elder Forest, a total of some 1,600 gallons of ordinary mains water was used to simulate chemical attacks upon a number of Royal Air Force stations in order to test the effectiveness of their defences against this threat.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the strength of the Ulster Defence Regiment and the Regular Army for each year from 1980 to 1988.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The figures as at 31 March each year are as follows:

	UDR	Regular Army
1980	7,373	159,046
1981	7,479	165,990
1982	7,130	163,151
1983	7,135	159,069
1984	6,777	161,539
1985	6,449	162,399
1986	6,562	161,399
1987	6,506	159,686
1988	6,373	158,105

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, following the recent changes in housing benefit, how many households now receive housing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: Our latest estimate for 1988-89 is that 6,150,000 claimants will receive some form of housing benefit from local authorities. This figure excludes those who will receive only a transitional payment from the Department.

Earnings Taper

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many social security recipients experience a 100 per cent. taper on their earnings under the provisions of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 25 March at columns 244-46, which stated that no full-time workers now experience combined income tax and benefit withdrawal rates of 100 per cent. or more as a result of benefit reductions when earnings rise. Similar figures for part-time workers reflecting the provisions of the Social Security Act 1986 are not yet available.

Clostridial Infection

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the danger to human health from clostridial infection as a result of handling imported United States domestic waste.

Mrs. Currie: The Department is having discussions with other Government Departments about this matter.

Departmental Civil Servants

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for The Wrekin of 20 June, how many civil servants in his Department are employed at grade 3 and above; and what is the estimated cost of discovering whether they were educated at state or private schools.

Mr. Moore: There are about 60 civil servants at grade 3 and above employed in my Department. The estimated cost of providing the information requested would probably be in excess of £500.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the uptake of private medical insurance of people over the age of 65 years.

Mrs. Currie: So far this year we have received some 25 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and from the public and have pointed to the special low-cost schemes that are now available for people over 65. We welcome this development of health insurance designed to meet growing public demand.

Social Fund (Wales)

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in how many offices of his Department in Wales crisis loans only are now being paid from the social fund.

Mr. Portillo: Details of social fund applications and payments for the month ending 31 May (the latest date for which information is available) are in the Library.

Chronically Sick and Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to ensure (a) that all local social services authorities in England are financially able to discharge in full their statutory duties under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act, and (b) that their duties under the Act are being fully discharged by all local authorities.

Mr. Scott: Between 1978-79 and 1986-87, gross current expenditure by local authorities on personal social services overall increased by over 26 per cent. in real terms. Responsibility for implementing the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act lies with local authorities, and it is not practicable to identify separately the amount spent on services under that Act. The Department does, however, receive regular returns on certain services including those provided under the Act, in addition to information from the social services inspectorate and other sources.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications were received for mobility allowance in the last five years for which information is available in the United Kingdom, in Scotland, in Fife, and in north-east Fife; and how many of these were granted.

Mr. Scott: The available information is as follows. It relates to decisions given in Great Britain in the relevant years, not to the results of claims made in those years. I regret that these figures cannot be broken down to provide the further information requested. The information relating to Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

	Number of claims decided	Decided in claimant's favour
1983	126,300	86,300
1984	132,000	93,500
1985	157,250	101,890
1986	175,010	109,220
1987	177,250	110,460

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications were received for attendance allowance in the last five years for which information is available in the United Kingdom, in Scotland, in Fife, and in north-east Fife; and how many of these were granted.

Mr. Scott: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The information which is available is set out in the table.

Attendance allowance: Claims, decisions and awards in Great Britain and in Scotland 1983 to 1988

	Great Britain			Scotland

Hospital Closures

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the procedures that have to be completed before a hospital can be closed; and whether there are any circumstances in which the procedures can be bypassed.

Mrs. Currie: The Community Health Councils Regulations 1985 (S.I. 1985, No. 304) require a district health authority to consult a community health council on proposals to make any substantial variation in the provision of the health service in the council's district. Where the CHC supports the proposed variation, then it may go ahead. If the CHC objects, the proposal is forwarded to the regional health authority which may refer it back to the DHA, or, where it supports the proposal, refer it to Ministers for a final decision. Provision is made for urgent proposals to be implemented without consultation.

Bloomsbury Health Authority

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will monitor the emergency plans being prepared by the general manager of the Bloomsbury health authority; if he will seek to ensure the preservation of facilities and services that have a national role; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have asked Bloomsbury health authority to inform us of any decisions which involve a substantial variation in the service it provides, including those facilities and services which have a nationally recognised role. It is, however, for the authority to decide in the first instance how to allocate resources within its budget.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to make any funds directly available for research, education and other measures related to the combating of solvent abuse.

Mrs. Currie: The Government have funded a study under the direction of Professor Anderson of St. George's hospital medical school to investigate the effects of various teenagers' activities, including solvent misuse, on their health and educational performance. We are considering carefully the outcome of that study before deciding whether further research is necessary. We are also funding a data collection exercise to ascertain the numbers and causes of deaths from solvent misuse in the United Kingdom.

In addition to the range of measures which have been taken directly in line with the Government's policy of education, persuasion and the encouragement of local initiatives, the Government are currently funding drug education co-ordinators in every local education authority, whose work includes activities aimed at preventing solvent misuse.

Private Acute Sector

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the total number of (a) surgical patients other than termination of pregnancy, (b) elective patients, (c) emergency patients, and (d) urgent patients treated in the private acute sector in 1986-87;

(2) what was the number of deaths and discharges in the private acute sector in 1986-87;

(3) what was the total number of*(a)* operations, and (b) day cases treated in the private sector in 1986-87;

(4) what proportion of patients in the private acute sector were discharged to National Health Service hospitals in 1986-87;

(5) what was the total number of (a) obstetric and gynaecological patients other than termination of pregnancy, (b) elective obstetric and gynaecological patients other than termination of pregnancy, (c) emergency obstetric and gynaecological patients other than termination of pregnancy, and (d) urgent obstetric and gynaecological patients other than termination of pregnancy treated in the private acute sector in 1986-87;

(6) what was the average length of stay for non-day cases for patients treated in the private acute sector in 1986-87;

(7) what percentage of costs was attributable to administration in the private acute sector in 1986-87;

(8) what was the average bed occupancy in the private acute sector in 1986-87;

(9) what was the total number of (a) patients, (b) in-patients and (c) out-patients treated in the private acute sector in 1986-87;

(10) what was the total number of (a) medical patients, (b) elective medical patients, (c) emergency medical patients and (d) urgent medical patients treated in the private acute sector in 1986-87.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients in the private acute sector were treated on contract to district health authorities in 1986-87.

Mrs. Currie: I assume the question relates to the number of private patients in National Health Service hospitals. I cannot give the hon. Member precisely the information requested. In 1986, the latest year for which information is held currently, a total of 63,893 private in-patient cases and 28,225 day cases were treated in National Health Service hospitals. There were also 253,499 private out-patient attendances and 2,067 regular day patient attendances.

Retail Prices Index (Error)

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 3 May, Official Report, column 422, if the arrangements for local organisations to apply for funding from the NCVO, Charities Aid Foundation and the ITV Telethon Trust have been announced.

Mr. Scott: The National Council for Voluntary Organisations and the Charities Aid Foundation have issued press releases setting out their arrangements for funding local voluntary groups. As a result of the wide publicity given to the Telethon appeal, the Telethon Trust has already received some 10,000 applications from local organisations. Consequently, the trust will not be inviting further applications.

I have arranged for copies of the press releases and of the terms and conditions agreed with the three organisations to be placed in the Library.

Computer Work Stations

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many computer work stations there are in his Department; what is the ratio of work stations to civil servants; and how he expects this to change over the next five years.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 28 June]: At present there are about 8,000 computer work stations in the Department which represents one for every 12 members of staff. This figure includes linked terminals and stand-alone microcomputers, but excludes word processors and portable text processors. Within the next five years the operational strategy for social security, linking all our local offices to mainframe computers, will be fully implemented. By 1993 the Department will, on current plans, have approximately 40,000 work stations—a ratio of one to every two staff.

Income

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the index of average income for 1981, 1983 and 1985 broken down by (a) family status and (b) economic status in tables A1, 2, 3; C1, 2, 3; D1, 2, 3, and F1, 2, 3 in "Households Below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis."

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 June]: I regret that a reply can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Murton Colliery (Accident)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement concerning the accident at Murton colliery on Sunday 5 June which led to several injuries and one subsequent fatality.

Mr. Nicholls: I note with regret the death on 18 June 1988 of a 37-year-old fitter who had been employed by British Coal at Murton colliery. This man had been involved with three other workmen in an accident which occurred at 03.00 hours on Monday 6 June 1988. The accident happened when one wall of a steel chamber at the exit from a borehole collapsed. Three other men suffered injuries. Two of them are still absent from work, while one was fit enough to resume duty.

The accident was reported to the Health and Safety Executive's mines and quarries inspectorate who inspected the site on the same day. Discussions with British Coal management to prevent a recurrence are under way.

Waste Imports

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the impact on tourism in the north-west caused by the proposed importation of 7·5 million tons of United States domestic waste into the area for dumping.

Mr. Lee: None.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations his Department has made in the last 12 months, at planning inquiries, regarding matters relevant to his Department's responsibilities.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional health and safety inspectors will be needed to enforce the control of substances hazardous to health regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: No additional Health and Safety Executive inspectors will be needed specifically to enforce the proposed control of substances hazardous to health regulations as currently drafted. Enforcement of the regulations will be integrated into normal inspection arrangements.

Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspector hours were spent enforcing the reporting of injuries, diseases and dangerous occurrences regulations in the last 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls: Enforcement of the reporting of injuries, diseases and occurrences regulations is dealt with during inspections and investigations, and the time spent on drawing the attention of employers to the need to report such incidents is not recorded separately.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many overseas visitors to the north of England arrived through Manchester airport in 1987; and if he will make a statement on his Department's plans to encourage the use of Manchester airport by tourists.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to say how many overseas visitors to the north of England in 1987 landed at Manchester airport. But the international passenger survey indicates that around 328,000 overseas visitors landed at the airport during the year. The Government are committed to the airport's continued development and have so far approved investment of over £66 million.

Health and Safety

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations he has had to review the penalties available for contraventions of health and safety legislation.

Mr. Nicholls: It has been suggested that the maximum fines available to magistrates courts for breaches of health and safety legislation are not high enough. I have sought the views of the Health and Safety Commission and am now considering with colleagues whether there is a case to be made for reviewing these penalties.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many accidents and incidents were investigated by factory inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive in each region, for each year from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 27 June 1988]: The Health and Safety Executive cannot identify, without disproportionate cost, the number of accidents and incidents investigated by factory inspectors from 1 January 1980 to 31 March 1982.

The table shows the total number of accidents and incidents by Health and Safety Executive area investigated by factory inspectors for each 12-month period from 1 April 1982 to 31 March 1987.

Notes:

The figures include investigations of accidents and dangerous occurrences.

The figures for 1987-88 also include investigations of gas incidents.

Workfare

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration has been given to the introduction of a workfare scheme, along the lines of those introduced in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 28 June 1988]: I regret that there was an error in the original reply. The number of unfilled vacancies in the economy should read 700,000. The full text of the reply is as follows:

> My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to introduce a workfare scheme. With the continuing fall in unemployment and some 700,000 unfilled job vacancies in the economy, the priority must be to ensure that unemployed people have the appropriate skills to take up the jobs which are available to them.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rhizomania

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there have been further discoveries of the incidence of rhizomania in East Anglia.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Some infection by rhizomania virus has been discovered in the wrapped root balls of Acers imported from a nursery in the Netherlands. Scientific advice is that infection is unlikely to spread from this source. But immediate action is being taken by the Dutch authorities and ourselves to follow up this discovery.

Intervention Food

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of European Economic Community intervention food held in (a) Dagenham, (b) Hornsey, (c) Leyton and Stratford, (d) Tottenham Hale and (e) Hackney.

Mr. Donald Thompson: At 31 May 1988 stocks were as follows:

Tonnes

	Beef	Butter	Skimmed milk powder	Cereals
Dagenham	7	87	0	0
Hornsey	38	0	0	0
Leyton and Stratford	0	147	0	0

Fruit and Vegetables (Imports)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list the tariff and non-tariff measures applied by the EEC in respect of each type of fruit and vegetable imported into the United Kingdom from third countries.

Mr. Gummer: The wide range of EC tariff measures applying—customs duty, concessionary rates, and tariff quotas—are set out in the United Kingdom tariff, available in the Library of the House. The non-tariff measures in respect of each type of fruit and vegetable are as follows:

(a) the reference price system: a form of minimum import price, applied seasonally to 20 products: artichokes, aubergines, cabbage lettuce, courgettes, cucumbers, endives, tomatoes, apples, apricots, cherries, nectarines, peaches, pears, plums, table grapes, clementines, mandarins, lemons, satsumas and sweet oranges.

(b) Import licences: apples are currently subject to import licences which were introduced earlier this year as a means of surveillance. The European Commission has now extended these arrangements by introducing quantitative limits on supplies from third countries up to 31 August 1988. Certain third countries have exceeded their quantitative restrictions and import licences for supplies from these countries have been suspended.

(c) Quality Standards: products for which quality standards are laid down in Community legislation may be imported only if they conform to the quality standards for "Extra" class, class I or class II or to standards at least equivalent. The products are apples and pears, artichokes, apricots, asparagus, aubergines, beans, brussels sprouts, cabbages, carrots, cauliflowers, celery, chicory, cherries, citrus fruit, courgettes, cucumbers, garlic, table grapes, leeks, lettuces, curled-leaved endives, broad-leaved (Batavian) endives, onions, peaches, peas, plums, strawberries, spinach, sweet peppers and tomatoes.

Imported Animal Products

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the number of outbreaks of swine fever in the United Kingdom considered to be due to meat products imported in the last year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The outbreak of classical swine fever in Hampshire in August 1987 is believed to have been caused by imported infected material. However, the evidence for that was circumstantial and the actual origin of the infected material could not be proved.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to refuse a licence under the Animal Products and Poultry Products Order 1980 for the import of any United States wastes which contain animal products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As my hon. Friend knows from replies to his earlier questions about imports of domestic waste from the United States, my officials are assessing possible animal disease risks. No import licence under the Immigration of Animal Products and Poultry Products Order 1980 will be granted unless we can be satisfied that there are adequate safeguards against such risks.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the dangers to United Kingdom livestock of the transfrontier shipment of wastes containing animal residues infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have received no reports of bovine spongiform encephalopathy having been recorded outside the British Isles.

Milk Industry

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what liaison takes place between his Department and the Dairy Trades Federation regarding restructuring of the milk industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The current rationalisation of butter manufacturing capacity is taking place under the terms of a scheme negotiated between the Dairy Trade Federation and the Milk Marketing Board. My Department has not been involved in the scheme other than to seek the necessary clearances from the European Commission to the arrangements proposed. Detailed implementation of the scheme is entirely a matter for the parties to the agreement and the dairy companies concerned.

Animal Medicines

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the workings of the system of animal medicines record keeping and bring forward proposals for the reduction of paperwork on the part of livestock farmers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Statutory animal medicines records were introduced in June this year after full consultation with representative organisations and with the support of the National Farmers Union. I therefore see no need for a review.

ADAS

Mr. Wall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of staff currently employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Currently there are 3,920 professional, scientific, technical and industrial staff (excluding temporary staff) employed in the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service of my Department.

TRANSPORT

Severn Bridge

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of his Department's toll projections of November 1986 and January 1988 for the Severn bridge, as referred to in the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General (HC 388, 1987-88, page 18).

Mr. Peter Bottomey: Yes. I have today arranged for copies of these toll projections to be placed in the Library.

Motorways (Traffic Load)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average traffic load for all types of vehicle on each motorway in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Estimates of flow of traffic averaged across all sections of each motorway are as follows.

Motorway	Average 24-hour flow for all motor vehicles (1987)
M1	62,600
M10	40,200
M11	37,900

London Underground (Fires)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish a list of reported fires in the London Underground between January and June showing (a) the date, (b) the line, (c) the duration of the fire, and (d) the cost of damage in each case.

Mr. David Mitchell: The table gives the details of the fires on London Underground Ltd. A fire is statutorily reportable only if it causes death or injury or if it necessitates suspension of the train service or closure of a station, signal box or other premises for more than 30 minutes if the affected part of the railway is below ground or 1 hour if it is above ground. The increase in reported fires in 1988 compared with previous years is not necessarily due to an increase in the number of fires but probably to a better appreciation of those which have to be reported following the revision to the reporting order at the beginning of 1987.

The cost of the damage is not reportable.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish a list of all fires reported on the London Underground in each of the last five years showing (a) the date, (b) the line, (c) the duration, and (d) the cost of damage in each.

Mr. David Mitchell: The following table gives details of the fires on London Underground for each of the complete years from 1984 to 1987; the information for 1983 is not readily available. Before 1 January 1987 a fire was statutorily reportable only if it caused death or injury or if at a station or signal box it was regarded as serious or if it damaged a bridge or viaduct. After that date fires at stations, signal boxes or other premises became reportable if they caused suspension of the service or station for more than 30 minutes if the affected railway was below ground or more than 1 hour if it was above ground. The cost of the damage is not reportable.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Staff

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Stanley: The Northern Ireland Civil Service has some 11,500 female staff which represents 49·5 per cent. of its work force. Details of the grades held in January 1987 are set out on page 17 of the second report of the service's equal opportunities unit, a copy of which is in the Library. The service does not monitor the ethnic origins of its staff.

Of the 192 home Civil Service staff serving in the Northern Ireland Office in London and Belfast, 103 (54 per cent.) are women and 18 (9 per cent.) are from ethnic minority groups. In London, 56 per cent. of the NIO's staff are women and 13 per cent. come from ethnic minority groups.

All of our staff from ethnic minority groups are employed within the secretarial, junior administrative grades, or office support grades.

A breakdown of the 103 female staff by grade is as follows:

	Number
Grade 3	1
Grade 7	2
SEO	2
HEO	6
EO	10
AO	21
AA	10
SPS	9
PS	14
Typist	9
Typing manager	1
Support grade band 1	1
Support grade band 2	4
General household assistants	13

Another female grade 5 member of staff is currently on secondment to industry.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Stanley: The Northern Ireland Civil Service has established an equal opportunities unit located within the Department of Finance and Personnel which is responsible for developing, formulating, co-ordinating and monitoring policy for the Northern Ireland Civil Service. The small home Civil Service part of the Northern Ireland Office has one equal opportunities officer who is at present a grade 7 officer (principal).

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to improve equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Stanley: Details of the programme of action being implemented by the Northern Ireland Civil Service to improve equality of opportunity of its female staff are given in the first and second reports of its equal opportunities unit, copies of which are in the Library. The Northern Ireland Civil Service is fully committed to ensuring equality of opportunity for all its staff including those from ethnic minorities.

The Home Civil Service element of the Northern Ireland office is an equal opportunities employer. Personnel management is kept under review to ensure that equal opportunities policies are rigorously implemented.

National Health Service

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for Northern Ireland and for each of the area boards in Northern Ireland, actual current expenditure on hospital and community health services, giving figures for net spending, charges, total spending, the percentage increase, inflation in service, the percentage change in purchasing power, the percentage change in real terms, cash releasing cost improvements divided between real money and recurrent, the percentage increase in new cost improvements and the margin available for service development in a year; if he will give this information for the years 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Northern Ireland

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-83	1985-86	1986-87
HCHS current net spending (£)	337,251,533	361,873,714	384,016,995	399,051,835	420,813,975
Charges (£)	4,058,453	4,971,510	5,364,915	5,668,174	5,927,110
Total spending (£)	341,309,986	366,845,224	389,381,910	404,720,009	426,741,085
Increase (per cent.)	—	7·5	6·1	3·9	5·4
Inflation etc. in service (per cent.)	—	5·1	5·8	5·2	6·9
Change in purchasing power (per cent.)	—	2·3	0·3	−1·2	−1·4
Change in real terms (per cent.)	—	2·7	1·6	−1·9	−2·2

As the health and personal social services operate an integrated service in Northern Ireland it is not possible or meaningful to disaggregate cash releasing cost improvement schemes for the hospital and community health services from the total figures, which for the years in question were:

	(£'000)	(£'000)	(£'000)
New	2,438	3,336	6,800
Recurrent	2,438	5,661	12,000

In addition, in line with the regional strategy covering the years 1987-1992, the boards are aiming for non cash releasing cost improvements of approximately 1 per cent. per annum, which will be used to maintain and develop essential services. I have every confidence in their ability to achieve these targets.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many mentally handicapped children are receiving long-term care in mental handicap hospitals in each area board and for Northern Ireland as a whole; and what planning guidelines are laid down by his Department for boards to follow in this area.

Mr. Needham: The numbers of mentally handicapped children in the 0 to 15 age band who had been in mental handicap hospitals for more than three months at 31 December 1986 were as follows:

Board	Number of Children
Eastern	12
Southern	9
Western	7
Northern	—
Northern Ireland Total	28

The corresponding figure for Northern Ireland at 31 December 1981 was 73.

The regional strategy for the health and personal social services in the years 1987 to 1992 states that the Department wishes boards to place particular emphasis on reducing to the absolute minimum the number of mentally handicapped children in hospital and identifies the development of community services as an essential component of the policy.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state the number of National Health Service community mental handicap nursing staff, whole-time equivalent in Northern Ireland and each area board at 30 September in each of the years 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and the percentage change 1983-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The number of community mental handicap nursing staff employed by the health and social services boards (whole-time equivalent) at 30 September each year was as follows:

Board	1983	1984	1985	1986
Eastern	4	5	5	7
Southern	4	4	4	6
Western	5	5	5	5
Northern	—	—	—	—
Northern Ireland	13	14	14	18

The percentage increase over the period was 38 per cent. In 1987 the number of nurses increased to 22—69 per cent. above the figure for 1983.

The mental handicap nursing service is one element of the developing pattern of community services for the mentally handicapped which also includes day care provision in adult training centres and day centres, residential care, respite care and fostering schemes. The regional strategy for the health and personal social services plans for a reduction by 1992 of 20 per cent. in the number of mentally handicapped people in hospital which will necessitate improvements in community provision, including the development of community mental handicap teams, and a continuing increase in the numbers of community mental handicap nurses.

Irish Language

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the nature of contact between the Department of Education and Irish language groups in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has had contact with Irish language groups about specific issues, for example, the procedure for seeking registration of independent schools, and other matters related to the establishment, operation and resourcing of Irish medium schools.

I met a deputation from Glor na nGael on 4 November 1986 and I have met other groups whose interests have included the position accorded to the Irish language. I am prepared to respond to any genuine group which wishes to make representations on behalf of the Irish language.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the number of curriculum development projects in the Irish language in (a) the primary school sector, (b) the post-primary sector and (c) the third-level education since 1965;

(2) if he will list the names of curriculum development projects and schools involved with the Irish language in (a) the primary school sector, (b) the post-primary sector and (c) the third-level education since 1965.

Dr. Mawhinney: Like other languages, Irish is included in the major Northern Ireland curriculum initiatives such as primary guidelines, 11 to 16, GCSE cluster groups. In 1985, the inspectorate published a good practice document on modern language teaching which covered the teaching of Irish. As part of a comprehensive in-service programme, teachers of Irish have contributed towards the production of teaching and learning materials and with the development of graded objectives for the subject.

Six new courses with an Irish language component have recently been introduced at university level.

Note 1: The good practice document is called "Good Practice in Education Paper No. 2: Modern Language Teaching", published by the Department of Education for Northern Ireland 1985.

Note 2: The recent higher education courses incorporating an Irish language component are:

At the Queen's University of Belfast:
An Honours Degree in Irish Studies
Two postgraduate courses in Irish Studies

At the University of Ulster:
A Diploma in Higher Education
An Honours Degree
A Postgraduate Diploma

Roads (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate the amount of capital allocated to each roads division within the Department of the Environment in Northern Ireland in each of the following years: 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

£000

	Roads service headquarters	Ballymena division	Belfast division	Coleraine division	Craigavon division	Downpatrick division	Omagh division
1980-81	4,046	4,767	14,235	4,924	3,646	5,069	3,182
1981-82	6,706	3,587	11,107	4,276	2,883	3,923	2,352
1982-83	8,873	3,079	11,241	2,916	1,967	2,323	1,638
1983-84	6,449	3,217	7,816	3,793	4,006	2,758	2,404
1984-85	2,842	2,482	6,050	3,343	3,356	2,356	2,847
1985-86	718	2,699	5,257	2,724	3,748	3,290	3,976
1986-87	569	2,577	6,913	3,743	4,100	3,614	3,134

Note:

The table is an aggregation of capital expenditure each year on roads and bridges, road lighting, parking, depots and stores and plant and vehicles. Headquarters expenditure was mainly in respect of specific major highway schemes, which were handled centrally rather than divisionally.

Cross-city Rail Link

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he can indicate a possible start date for the cross-city rail project to connect the existing Larne/Belfast line.

Mr. Needham: Present plans envisage a start to construction during 1991, subject to the completion of statutory procedures and availability of finance.

Young Offenders

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to introduce legislation for Northern Ireland concerning the treatment of young offenders.

Mr. Stanley: My Department has published today a proposal for a draft Order in Council entitled the Treatment of Offenders (Northern Ireland) Order 1988. The draft order includes a number of measures which would provide alternatives to custodial sentences and give the courts greater flexibility particularly when dealing with young offenders.

Among the more important changes is the reduction in the maximum period of detention in a training school from three years to two years and a reduction in the age for community service orders from 17 to 16. The proposal also contains a provision to enable courts in Northern Ireland to attach what are commonly known as "fourth conditions" to probation orders. Under this proposal a court may require attendance at a day centre or an activity centre for up to a maximum of 60 days. This provision and the reduction in the age for community service orders will bring Northern Ireland into line with existing law in England and Wales.

It is also proposed to amend the law relating to young offenders centres to enable a number of young person currently being held on remand in a prison or who have been given prison sentences of up to four years to be accommodated in a young offenders centre which is better suited to their needs.

Other proposals affecting the sentencing powers of courts in Northern Ireland include an amendment to the Children and Young Persons Act (NI) 1958 to enable a juvenile court both to try and to sentence a young person who pleads not guilty in a case where he is charged jointly with an adult who pleads guilty; a number of amendments to the law relating to attendance centre orders; the abolition of recorded sentences and their replacement with enhanced powers to suspend sentences; and an amendment to the existing power to defer sentences.

The order would also increase a number of penalties to bring Northern Ireland into line with Great Britain. It is proposed to increase the maximum penalty for cruelty to children from two years to 10 years; for indecent assault on a female from two years to 10 years; and for attempted rape and assault with intent to commit rape from seven years to life imprisonment.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to ensure that all of the duties imposed by the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act are being fully met throughout Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the Act.

Mr. Needham: I am satisfied that bodies which have functions under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1978 are aware of their responsibilities under the Act. Both Government Departments and local bodies continually monitor services and make improvements having regard to the availability of resources and competing priorities.

Police Authority

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements have been made for the appointment of a new Police Authority in Northern Ireland following the expiry of the term of office of the previous authority on 28 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I have today appointed a new Police Authority for Northern Ireland for a term of three years. In making the appointments I have, as required by statute, consulted those organisations and persons who are representative of the community in Northern Ireland. I welcome the positive response that was generally made. As a result, the membership widely represents the whole community, and includes representatives from the district councils, universities, agriculture and commerce.

The Police Authority has an important role in securing and maintaining an adequate and efficient police service. I look forward to the continuation of the excellent working relationships which had been established with the outgoing authority, some of whose members are being reappointed.

Security Forces (Offences)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details for 1986 and 1987 of the number of members of the Ulster Defence Regiment, the Royal Ulster Constabulary, their respective reserves, and the British Army, who have been charged with offences and who have been convicted of offences, giving details of custodial sentences imposed, and separately for charges and convictions concerning murder, attempted murder, membership of illegal organisations, conspiracy to cause explosions, withholding information concerning terrorist activities, possession of explosives, possession of explosives with intent to cause bodily harm, possession of firearms, possession of firearms with intent to cause bodily harm and other offences classified as scheduled offences.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 17 June 1988]: The information available is as follows:

Privatisation

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which district councils have put which services out to private contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 June 1988]: The information sought is not held centrally. However, I am aware that many of the 26 district councils in Northern Ireland do not employ professional staff or direct labour forces; capital works and building repairs are therefore usually contracted out.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 30 June 1988

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will take steps to reduce the time taken by Her Majesty's land registry, Gloucester, to process applications for the registration of freeholds, assuming no requisitions.

The Attorney-General: In order to meet the unprecedented volume of applications received for registration in the administrative areas served by the Gloucester district land registry, and to reduce the time taken to deal with applications, a new office has been opened in Coventry. A total of 244 staff are now in post there, the majority being under training. Under the provisions of the Land Registration (District Registries) (No. 2) Order 1987, the office will be constituted as a district registry in October 1988 and will take over responsibility from the Gloucester office for registration in the west midlands.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average time taken, assuming no requisitions, for the Land Registry to deal with applications for the registration of a freehold; and how this period has varied in each of the last three years.

The Attorney-General: The average completion times for first registration applications (freeholds and leaseholds) at the end of each of the last three financial years were:

	Days
31 March 1986	73
31 March 1987	110
31 March 1988	156

No figures are kept at the Land Registry to distinguish between the completion times on applications requiring requisitions and those not requiring requisitions.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General what, by grade, is the current establishment at Her Majesty's land registry, Gloucester; how this has varied in each of the last three years; and how many officers have been in place against establishment in each of the past three years.

The Attorney-General: The tables provide details of the establishment and staff in post at the Gloucester district land registry as at 1 June in each of the last three years.

	1 June 1986	1 June 1987	1 June 1988
Establishment	743	747	[1]590
Staff in post
Permanent	692	676	706
Casual	30	53	30
Total	722	729	736

[1] Plus 328 posts at the new Coventry office.

The information classified by grades is not immediately available. I will reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General what, in each of the past three years, has been the annual cost, by financial heading, of running Her Majesty's land registry, Gloucester; and what in each year has been the annual profit or loss.

The Attorney-General: Since not all the Land Registry's costs are allocated to its local offices, profit and loss figures are available only for the registry as a whole. The following is a summary of spending on certain items for which costs were allocated to the Gloucester district land registry since 1985. The figures for 1987-88 are provisional:

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Manpower	5,118,376	5,853,529	6,543,485
Building Capital	72,791	294,869	94,243
Non-computer machinery capital	32,084	106,236	136,153
Stationery	101,104	75,120	157,694
Postages & Telecoms	286,197	290,454	333,672
Machinery Current	39,152	52,898	67,350
Accommodation	350,842	522,190	616,937
Ordnance Survey	326,199	287,205	423,065
Others	125,329	103,942	120,992
Total	6,452,074	7,586,443	8,493,591

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General what, in each of the past three years, has been the number of applications by group dealt with by Her Majesty's land registry, Gloucester; what is the current charge for handling applications by group; and how this has varied in each of the past three years.

The Attorney-General: The number of applications, in each of the relevant work categories, completed at the Gloucester district land registry in the last three years is:

Year	First registrations	Dispositionary first leases and transfers of part	Dealings
1985-86	24,649	25,300	169,438
1986-87	25,364	21,336	181,135
1987-88	23,134	25,721	218,753

Year	Official search of whole	Official search of part	Official search of the index map	Office copy of the register	Enquiries
1985-86	182,330	31,618	163,819	63,279	53,113
1986-87	227,396	31,021	202,899	76,543	63,137
1987-88	245,345	33,606	223,394	91,101	75,369

Most land registry fees are related to the value of the property concerned. The following table shows how fees have changed at a typical value (£45,000) during the last three years:

	First Registrations £	Transfers of Part £	Dealings with the whole £
1985 Fee Order (June 1985-September 1986)	66	105	105
1986 Fee Order (October 1986-May 1988)	60	70	70
1988 Fee Order (from June 1988)	60	60	60

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General what is the current level of fee charged by the Land Registry to get speedier consideration of applications for the registration of a freehold; when this was last increased; what is the average time taken to deal with applications on this basis, assuming no requisitions; and how this has varied in each year since this facility was introduced.

The Attorney-General: An application for special expedition currently attracts a fee of not less than £25. That fee was increased from not less than £20 from 1 June 1988 by the Land Registration Fee Order 1988 (S.I. 1988 No. 665). No information is available on average times taken to deal with expedited applications and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Security Services

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General if Her Majesty's Government propose to initiate actions for account of profits against (a) Mr. Anthony Cavendish and (b) the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Allason) in respect of material about the security services written by them and published without Her Majesty's Government's full agreement; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No.

Condicot Henge, Gloucestershire

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects the Crown Prosecution Service to reach a decision on possible prosecutions under sections 2 and 28 of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979 against those responsible for the damage sustained by the creation of a new driveway, the construction of a new car park and the erection of new fencing within Condicot Henge in Gloucestershire.

The Attorney-General: Prosecutions of two defendants in respect of the allegation to which the hon. Gentleman refers were instituted on 26 April 1988.

Gazumping

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has any plans to carry out an investigation into the practice of gazumping.

The Attorney-General: No. The topic of gazumping has already been fully considered by the Law Commission. Furthermore, the conveyancing standing committee at the Law Commission has recently identified changes in conveyancing practice which could help reduce the incidence of the practice.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University (Teesside)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on plans to locate a university, or to convert any existing institution to university status, in Teesside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I am aware of no such plans.

Research

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on Government support for basic science research in general and Her Majesty's Government's priorities for basic research.

Mr. Jackson: In 1988-89 over £1·4 billion is being provided from public funds for the support of basic and strategic research through the research councils and block grants to United Kingdom universities. Responsibility for determining scientific priorities rests with the research councils and the universities.

My right hon. Friend intends to make a considered statement later this year on the Government's policy objectives for the science base and the steps we will be taking to achieve them, taking account of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils' discussion document "A Strategy for the Science Base" and of comments on that received from the higher education and scientific communities.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are Her Majesty's Government's priorities for medical-clinical research (a) at present, (b) in the medium term and (c) in the long term.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council, which receives an annual grant-in-aid (currently £147 million), has the responsibility for determining priorities for medical research funded from the science budget. Its views on priorities in the short, medium and long terms are included in its annual reports and corporate plan, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many researchers involved in clinical-medical research projects in teaching hospitals have left to work abroad.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last discussed the state of clinical-medical research and its priorities with representatives of (a) the British Medical Association, (b) the Medical Research Council, (c) the medical academic staff committee and (d) representatives of universities of England and Wales.

Mr. Jackson: I met representatives of the British Medical Association, including the chairman of the medical academic staff committee, on 26 January when we discussed various matters concerning education and research in university medical schools.

I attended a meeting of the Medical Research Council on 5 February. My right hon. Friend and I will be meeting representatives of the council again on 4 July to hear more about the research they are currently funding.

My right hon. Friend and I have had several meetings with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals of United Kingdom universities during the last year. Matters indirectly concerning medical research have been referred to on a number of occasions.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many clinical-medical research projects, in progress or started in 1975, and financed either with public or private funds, or with both, in teaching hospitals were (a) completed, (b) extended, (c) suspended or totally abandoned for lack of staff or funds and (d) how many of those totally or partially funded with public money had to be extended, completed or extended with the help of private funding.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been, for each year since 1975, the number of medical and other staff working full or part time on clinical and medical research projects in teaching hospitals in (a) Scotland, (b) Northern Ireland, (c) England and (d) Wales.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not centrally available.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what has been, for each year since 1975, the amount of public funding given for clinical-medical research in the teaching hospitals of (a) London, (b) Birmingham, (c) Bristol, (d) Liverpool, (e) Manchester, (f) Cardiff, (g) Edinburgh and (h) Glasgow;

(2) what information he has as to how many clinical-medical research projects funded with (a) public, (b) private or (c) public and private funds have been carried out for each year since 1975 on (i) cancer, (ii) heart diseases, (iii) nutritional diseases, (iv) mental illnesses, (v) alcoholism, (vi) skin diseases, (vii) myalgic encephalomyelitis, (viii) liver diseases, (ix) kidney diseases, (x) anaemia, (xi) sexually transmitted diseases, (xii) AIDS, (xiii) anti-viral drugs and vaccines, (xiv) cot deaths, (xv) gene therapy, (xvi) application of molecular and cell biology in the study of human diseases, (xvii) drug addiction and behavioural diseases, (xviii) diarrhoea, (xix) diabetes, (xx) blindness and eye diseases and (xxi) other disease; where in the United Kingdom they are or were carried out; who is or was the researcher in charge and how many medical and other staff are or were involved; what is or was the total funding; and how many of these research projects have been (a) completed, (b) expanded or (c) suspended or totally abandoned due to lack of funds or staff.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council is the main agency through which the Government fund medical research in the United Kingdom. Current and previous editions of the MRC's handbook and annual reports—copies of which are in the Library—list the various research projects which the council has supported in each year since 1975 and include tables of the MRC's expenditure in university medical schools. Compiling the other information on the thousands of MRC projects concerned would be disproportionately costly.

Comparable lists of research projects funded—in whole or part—from universities' general funds, by the National Health Service, or by charities and other private sources are not available centrally.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to issue guidance on grant-maintained status for schools under the provisions of chapter IV of the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Draft guidance is being issued today. Its purpose is to inform discussion of this topic during the remaining stages of the Bill's passage through Parliament; to guide local education authorities, the governing bodies of schools, and others in any preparatory work they wish to undertake; and to give all concerned an early opportunity to comment. The draft covers all the provisions in chapter IV of the Bill save the provision in respect of postal ballots of parents, which in particular is subject to further consideration by Parliament, and on which guidance will be issued later.

Comments on the draft guidance are invited by 21 September 1988. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and in the Vote Office.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Murder

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases there have been of a person convicted of murder having previously been similarly convicted since 1965.

Mr. John Patten: Four persons convicted of murder in England and Wales had previously been similarly convicted since 1965: of these, one committed the second murder in prison and two others committed the second murder before conviction for the first.

Drunken Violence

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will seek to extend the Licensed Premises (Exclusion of Certain Persons) Act 1980 to prevent persons convicted for committing acts of criminal damage or violence whilst under the influence of alcohol from consuming or obtaining liquor from all licensed premises.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. We do not believe that this would be practicable.

AWP Machines

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will permit an increase of the stakes and prices of AWP machines installed in public houses in line with those in licensed clubs.

Mr. John Patten: No. Primary legislation would be required to set different limits for AWP machines installed in public houses from those applying to machines elsewhere where the public have access.

Multiple Lotteries

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to permit multiple lotteries held by reference to a single event, including major national sporting occasions.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering the position in the light of recent developments.

Fresh Start

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what efficiency gains he estimates have been achieved by the implementation of the Fresh Start proposals to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is estimated that an efficiency gain of about 12 per cent. was achieved by the beginning of 1988. Work is in hand to update this figure now that all establishments but one have implemented Fresh Start.

Police Officers (Identification)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances police officers on duty wear official issue uniform clothing which obscures or conceals identifying numbers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is the policy of the Department and the Association of Chief Police Officers that means of personal identification should be worn by uniformed officers whenever they are on duty.

Police Time

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to abolish the offence of wasting police time; what representations to this effect he has received from the Police Complaints Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. We have received no such representations from the Police Complaints Authority. My right hon. Friend is, however, considering a recommendation from the authority, contained in its triennial review, published in May this year (HC 466), that it should be empowered to dispense with the investigation of complaints which are vexatious, oppressive or an abuse of the system and cause needless and costly work for the police and itself.

Secure Prison Development

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has any plans for the development of a secure prison alongside the site of Kirkham open prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. The Department hopes to use Home Office-owned land alongside Kirkham open prison for a secure category B training prison with a population of about 600 inmates. Following exploratory discussions with Fylde district council, preliminary proposals for the site have been submitted in writing. These informal consultations have taken place under the established procedures for Crown developments. The Department recognises that further discussion will be required in order to develop its proposals to the point of submission of a formal notice of proposed development, which it hopes to be able to do by the autumn of this year.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list in the Official Report the sites for all future secure prison developments, the numbers of prisoners to be accommodated, the category of prisoners to be accommodated and the acreage on each site available for further development;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report those areas of land adjoining existing secure prisons which are suitable for expanding those institutions; and how many additional prisoners can be accommodated on these sites.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The prison building programme includes 26 new prisons in the following locations. Eight of these prisons have been constructed. A number of sites remain to be decided; the Home Office is looking for further possible sites in case the programme should be expanded.

Prison	Category of prison	Number of prisoners
Wayland	C	484
Stocken	YCC	300

Prison 6[1]	?	600
Wrexham	C	600
Banstead	B	600
Buckley Hall[1]	YCC	300

[1] Site yet to be decided.

A number of existing prisons and of these new sites have adjoining land. The prison building programme includes several schemes to expand the capacity of existing prisons by redevelopment or expansion on to adjoining land. Of the new prisons listed in the table, Lindholme II and Swaleside II are being built on Home Office land next to existing prisons. But it is not always possible to obtain planning clearance for such schemes; land must be retained for agricultural production, and for landscaping purposes, to screen existing or future buildings; and some land is poorly located to meet the Department's strategic needs.

BBC Board of Governors

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account is taken in recommending persons for appointment to the British Broadcasting Corporation's board of governors of any previous employment they may have had with Her Majesty's Government; how the criteria were applied in the case of Miss Daphne Park; what was the nature of her previous employment by, or on behalf of, Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The criteria that are used in determining appointments to the BBC board of governors, and other broadcasting appointments, are those of personal distinction, experience and ability. Miss Daphne Park's career in the diplomatic service is a matter of public record.

Risley Remand Centre

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons on his inspection of her Majesty's remand centre, Risley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, His Honour Judge Stephen Tumim, on his inspection of Risley remand centre in February, is published today with a statement setting out the action being taken in response. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The chief inspector draws attention to three major areas of concern. First, certain parts of the establishment were in a poor physical state both with respect to structure and maintenance and cleanliness. Immediate steps have been taken to improve cleanliness and housekeeping, and a major programme of refurbishment costing £2·5 million has been put in hand for completion by the autumn of 1989. This will greatly improve the inmate accommodation and sanitation. In the longer term major redevelopment for completion by the mid-1990s will provide modern accommodation with integral sanitation.

Secondly, revised instructions on suicide prevention (circular instruction 3/1987) issued in January 1987 have not been implemented at Risley. This was a grave omission. Although the prison service cannot guarantee to prevent suicides, every suicide is a matter of profound regret and management and staff of establishments must do all they can to identify those at risk and seek to prevent suicide by supervision, care and involvement of the inmate in personal relationships. The directions in the circular instruction are now being given high priority at Risley, as at other prison service establishments.

Thirdly, although the chief inspector comments favourably on much good work by staff, on their efforts to give prisoners time out of cells and the use that is made of association, education and physical education facilities, he found that inmates were confined to their cells for far too long. Lack of management and staff continuity on wings detracted from staff-inmate relations. The former youth custody centre at Hindley has taken over Risley's remand role for males under 21, retaining its facilities for work, education, physical education and other training, modified to fit shorter periods of detention. The Fresh Start management structure and staffing systems introduced at Risley since the inspection provide the foundation for improvements in regime. Early plans will be developed for extending the facilities and opportunities for education and other useful occupation.

These measures will ensure an immediate and a continuing improvement in conditions at Risley.

Alcohol Sales

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to review the law relating to the sale of alcohol in supermarkets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following the report of the working group on young people and alcohol, chaired by Baroness Masham, provisions were included in the Licensing Act 1988 to strengthen the licensing law. These included measures to control further the sale of alcohol to young people and in particular to require sales in off-licensed premises by staff under the age of 18 to be effectively supervised. We are not persuaded that a further review of licensing controls on supermarkets is required at present.

Sexual Offences Act 1985

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the working of the Sexual Offences Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are reviewing the working of the Act.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons have been arrested in Liverpool under the Sexual Offences Act 1985 to the latest date;

(2) how many offenders have been arrested in England and Wales under the Sexual Offences Act 1985 at the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: There is no power of arrest under the Sexual Offences Act 1985. However, the information available to me, which may be incomplete, shows 220 prosecutions under the Act in England and Wales up to the end of 1986, of which seven were in Merseyside.

DNA Testing

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 26 May to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz), Official Report, column 279, when he expects to place in the Library a copy of the report on the pilot trial of DNA use in immigration case work.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the reasons for the delay in the publication of the report on DNA testing for immigration purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on Thursday 16 June, at columns 200-1.

Abortion (Inquest Report)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 200, he will place in the Library the information provided by the coroner on the case involving the death of the Carlisle baby.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Police Stations

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he takes to ensure that a periodic review is undertaken of all police stations owned and occupied by county constabularies and the Metropolitan force in the context of operational efficiency and commercial potential.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Police authorities were asked in 1987 to review their arrangements for managing the police estate as a whole, including operational accommodation, and in particular ensure that surplus accommodation could be identified and either disposed of or used to meet new needs.

The scope of using police accommodation better is also reviewed by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary in its annual inspections of provincial forces. In the Metropolitan police, an audit of the occupancy of the whole estate has recently been completed.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is towards (a) the ownership and (b) the leasing of premises used as police stations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Generally speaking, we prefer police authorities to own premises used as police stations, since this usually offers better value for money and gives greater security of tenure. We do not, however, rule out leasing where this is justified, but if the lease is for more than three years, the current market value of the property counts against the total capital allocation for police buildings.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Government Achievements

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the Government's principal achievements in overseas aid to Third world countries since 1983.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since 1983 the principal achievements of the aid programme include:

1. a swift and generous response (totalling £253 million between 1983 and 1987) to appeals for emergency and refugee relief;
2. the successful completion of many aid projects, large and small, including the Victoria Dam in Sri Lanka (£113 million) and the Songea-Makambako Road in Tanzania (£90 million);
3. 200 new project allocations, each worth £2 million or more, with a total value of £1,662 million;
4. helping to sustain economic policy reforms, particularly in Africa, through the provision of programme aid (£261 million between 1983 and 1987) in support of IMF/IBRD agreed adjustment programmes;
5. the provision (between 1983 and 1986) of 23,502 person-years of training of overseas personnel and of 14,137 person-years of service by British experts and volunteers in developing countries;
6. in the period to 1987, securing contracts for British firms with a total export value of £1,082 million with aid and trade provision support; and
7. between 1985-86 and 1987-88, the cofunding, under the joint funding scheme of about 1,300 projects with over 50 agencies at a cost of £18·2 million. The budget of the JFS, which is one of the fastest growing areas of the aid programme, now stands at £10·5 million for 1988-89, a 75 per cent. increase on the original allocation for last year.

At the November 1986 European Community Development Council, under Britain's presidency, agreement was reached on much needed reforms of European Community food aid. These reforms are now being implemented.

In line with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's initiative on debt, the United Kingdom has cancelled £263 million of aid loans to 14 African countries; and 10 countries have negotiated better rescheduling terms. Agreement was reached at the recent Toronto summit on further debt relief based on this initiative.

Third World Countries

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further plans he has to increase financial and other help to Third world countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: In the current financial year we plan to spend about £1,307 million on the aid programme, some £97 million more than the likely outturn for last year. The programme is planned to rise to £1,380 million in 1989-90 and to £1,420 million by 1990-91. This represents growth in real terms.

Primary Health Care (Third World)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress his Department is making in encouraging primary health care in the Third world.

Mr. Chris Patten: Developing country Governments have been told of our wish to focus on primary health care in our programme of assistance to the health and population sector. To carry forward this approach we have also initiated a programme of reviews of health needs in a number of these countries. Following discussions with the recipient country authorities, these reviews will form the basis for the development of our future bilateral assistance in this sector. Five reviews have already been completed and seven more are planned over the next 12 months.

Over the last 18 months my professional health advisers have visited 14 of the 16 countries with which we have significant health assistance programmes to discuss our primary health care policy and encourage requests for assistance.

In addition, we aim to fill a new health and population adviser post in the British development division in southern Africa in the autumn. This will facilitate the identification of further areas for effective assistance in the countries in the region.

Tropical Development Research Institute

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate the approximate annual sum spent by the tropical pest control section of the Tropical Development Research Institute in the current year; and how it relates in real terms to the expenditure of the Centre for Overseas Pest Research for each year from 1979-80 to 1987-88.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 27 June 1988]: Because the Centre for Overseas Pest Research was successively amalgamated into the Tropical Development and Research Institute and the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute (ODNRI) on 1 September 1987, it is not possible without disproportionate effort to construct an expenditure series for the years specified.

It is estimated that scientific and technical effort by the former Centre for Overseas Pest Research (COPR) amounted to 130 man-years in 1979-80. In 1983-84, COPR's last year of separate existence, the comparable figure was 93 man-years. In 1987-88, under what is now ODNRI, the effort devoted to tropical pest control amounted to 97 man-years.

In April last year I instructed the Tropical Development and Research Institute to increase its operations in Africa. Project proposals estimated at £7 million have been prepared to tackle crop, animal and storage pest problems. These projects are based on the valuable experience of the institute and will further develop its expertise in tropical pest control.

WALES

Pollution

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set up an investigation into the effects on (a) fauna and flora, (b) lakes and rivers, (b) buildings and (d) the acid deposits in the Snowdonia national park.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office, with the Department of Environment, is investigating the effects of acidic deposition on fauna and flora, lakes and rivers, and buildings, through a number of research projects. When the results of these studies have been fully assessed, consideration can be given to the need for further research in specific areas, including Snowdonia.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any evidence of the effect of increased coniferous afforestation on the levels of acidity in soil and water in (a) Snowdonia, (b) Mid Wales and (c) Wales generally; and if he will indicate whether his Department has instigated, or provided financial support for, studies into this matter.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department provides financial support for a number of projects concerned with acidification in those areas most sensitive to the effects of acidic deposition, which are mainly in Mid Wales. Early evidence shows that coniferous afforested catchments are more acidic than adjacent moorland streams.

Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds he has allocated for 1988-89, and what allocations have been earmarked for future years, towards new housing and refurbishment of existing houses, by county and for Wales as a whole.

Mr. Grist: The information provided in the following table relates to the capital allocations for 1988-89 which have been made to date:

County	Local authority basic allocations £ million	Local authority specific allocations for renovation £ million	Housing corporation allocations for new build and rehabilitation £ million
Clwyd	10·643	1·036	5·704
Dyfed	10·736	1·535	6·428
Gwent	20·305	1·128	12·407
Gwynedd	6·852	1·477	4·686
Mid Glamorgan	24·413	10·397	14·007
Powys	3·631	0·060	1·953
South Glamorgan	14·167	1·000	9·444
West Glamorgan	14·491	0·303	9·106
	105·238	16·936	63·735

Unallocated—£21·582 million.

Housing capital allocations are made at district level and local authorities are free to determine their own expenditure priorities in the light of the needs of their particular area. They are, however, encouraged to concentrate on renovation, including the priority estates projects and enveloping block repair schemes.

Housing association information relates to allocations for new units and rehabilitation of existing units.

No decisions have yet been taken on the level of allocations for future years.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the take-up rates for the enterprise allowance scheme in (a) Clwyd, (b) Gwynedd, (c) Wales and (d) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is not available at county level. Since the scheme began in August 1983, 22,883 and 349,893 people have joined in Wales and the United Kingdom respectively.

Imported Waste

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take action to ensure the independent monitoring of all imported waste in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The legislation requires that controlled waste, including imported waste, is disposed of at licensed sites which are monitored by waste disposal authorities. Additionally, the movement of imported special waste is monitored by local authorities from the port of entry to its final destination.

Rate Support Grant

Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the levels of rate support grant to local authorities in Wales in each year since 1976-77 in real terms.

Mr. Peter Walker: The levels of rate support grant distributed to local authorities in Wales for each year, expressed in real terms at 1988-89 prices using the GDP (market prices) deflator, are given in the following table:

	£ million
1976-77	1,251·7
1977-78	1,145·3
1978-79	1,096·2
1979-80	1,080·9
1980-81	1,071·6
1981-82	1,047·3
1982-83	1,046·7
1983-84	1,017·6
1984-85	978·6
1985-86	947·7
1986-87[1]	967·2
1987-88[1]	978·6
1988-89[1]	1,000·0

[1] Provisional.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the dangers to Welsh livestock of the transfrontier shipment of wastes containing animal residues infested with bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: None. No incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy has been recorded to date outside the United Kingdom.

Forestry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the Forestry Commission chairman to discuss forestry matters in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall be having my first meeting with the chairman of the Forestry Commission for the specific purpose of discussing forestry matters in Wales towards the end of July.

Chernobyl Accident

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence he has to show that the food chain was fully protected in Wales in the period immediately after the Chernobyl incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Full compendia of the results of my Department's extensive monitoring programme have been published and copies are in the Library of the House. This work has been backed up by dietary surveys undertaken by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and independent whole body monitoring programmes in various parts of the United Kingdom, including Wales. Considered alongside the controls introduced on the movement and slaughter of sheep in certain areas, these fully demonstrate the high degree of protection afforded to consumers.

River Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reduce the agricultural pollution of rivers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The dangers of pollution from farms are being continually brought to the notice of farmers in Wales by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service. It also offers free advice on what steps should be taken to minimise the risk of pollution. Capital grants are available under the agriculture improvement scheme for the handling, storage and treatment of agricultural wastes. Plans are in hand to stage a major demonstration in Dyfed in early 1989 on the avoidance of agricultural pollution. ADAS and the Welsh water authority are co-operating in staging that event.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service is a part of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and operates in Wales as the agent of the Secretary of State for Wales. These arrangements will be kept under review.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he plans with consumer organisations in Wales about the use of bovine somatotropin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have no plans to discuss the use of bovine somatotropin with consumer organisations in Wales.

Sheep

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to assist the sheep sector in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The sheepmeat sector in Wales is buoyant. Discussions on future support arrangements in the review of the sheepmeat regime are proceeding. We will continue to resist changes which would discriminate against our interests.

Agricultural Research

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he plans to increase the funding of research in agriculture in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have no such plans. We are looking at the funding of research in agriculture, and discussions are in progress with representatives of the individual sectors of the industry.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed in agricultural research stations in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: As at 1 June 1988 the Agricultural and Food Research Council's Welsh plant breeding station employed 226 people. In addition ADAS employs 44 people at its experimental husbandry farm at Trawsgoed/Pwllpeiran.

Ciliau Moor Common (Slurry Tank)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when construction of the slurry tank begun on Ciliau Moor common; and when it became apparent that building consent would be required.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department first became aware that consent was required for carrying out these works on 7 October 1987. However, I am given to understand that work on the construction originally began in August 1987.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who were the builders of the slurry tank on Ciliau Moor common.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is not known to my Department.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which individuals and organisations were consulted prior to consent being given for the construction of a slurry tank on Ciliau Moor common; and on what dates they were approached.

Mr. Peter Walker: I wrote to the Open Spaces Society and Countryside Commission on 29 January 1988 to seek their views.

Cardiff (Redevelopment)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, if he will place in the Library a copy of the consultants' report commissioned by his Department in 1986 into the redevelopment of Cardiff.

Mr. Peter Walker: A copy of the report prepared by Jones Lang Wootton is already available in the Library of the House.

University of Wales

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about future funding arrangements for the extra-mural departments of the University of Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In a written answer given in another place on 15 December 1987 Baroness Hooper announced that the Government had decided to transfer responsibility for funding the extra-mural departments of the English universities to the Universities Funding Council proposed in the Education Reform Bill, and that a decision about the funding of the extra-mural departments of the University of Wales would be announced later. After careful consideration, and taking into account the views of the directors of the four Welsh extra-mural departments, it has been decided that responsibility for funding the extra-mural departments of the University of Wales should also be transferred from the Welsh Office to the Universities Funding Council. Discussions are being initiated with the University Grants Committee and the directors of the four extra-mural departments about the detailed arrangements for the transfer of responsibility to the UFC from 1 April 1989.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the value of the Exchequer subsidies and rate fund contributions, respectively, to Welsh local authority housing revenue account dwellings in total, and on a per dwelling basis for the years 1978-79 to 1987-88.

Mr. Ian Grist [holding answer 27 June 1988]: Housing subsidy up to 1980-81 was paid under a different system. In 1981-82 the figures were:

Exchequer subsidies (£ thousand)	Rate fund contributions (£ thousand)	Exchequer subsidies per dwelling (£)	Rate fund contributions per dwelling (£)
34,624	11,939	122·35	42·19

A reduction then took place reflecting the Government's decision to increase the proportion of resources available for capital expenditure on housing rather than current expenditure.

Thereafter the figures have been:

	Exchequer subsidies (£ thousand)	Rate fund contributions (£ thousand)	Exchequer subsidies per dwelling (£)	Rate fund contributions per dwelling (£)
1982-83	10,102	12,105	37·21	44·59
1983-84	8,832	8,767	33·65	33·40
1984-85	7,104	6,059	27·59	23·53
1985-86	10,024	5,178	39·08	20·19
1986-87	9,999	4,515	39·14	17·67
1987-88	11,762	6,338	46·95	25·30

The information shown in the tables is based on estimates from the housing subsidy claim form. The table shows gross rate fund contributions (including contributions to the administration of rent rebates) to the housing revenue account.

Chronically Sick and Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure (a) that all the relevant local authorities in Wales are financially able to discharge in full their statutory duties under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act, and (b) that their duties under the Act are being fully discharged by all local authorities.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 29 June 1988]: Responsibility for implementing the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act lies with local authorities. We do not allocate resources to specific functions of social services departments and it is not practicable separately to identify the total amount spent on services under the Act. However, the Department receives regular returns on certain services provided under the Act in addition to information from a number of sources, including the Department's social work services division. While the level of expenditure on social services is a matter for individual local authorities to determine, notional provision for social services in Wales has increased by 77 per cent. in cash terms since 1981-82 (the start of the separate Welsh rate support grant system) and by 26 per cent. at constant prices. Moreover, full consideration is given to the annual level of social services expenditure by the expenditure sub-group of the Welsh consultative council on local government finance.

Waste Tips

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is considering in the light of those aspects of the report prepared by Her Majesty's pollution inspectorate on waste tip and gas explosion dangers, which have implications for his responsibilities in Wales; whether a similar survey has been conducted in Wales; and if he will make a statement on the scale of the dangers in Wales and the remedial measures he proposed to take.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 29 June 1988]: Wales was included in the survey. The responses from local authorities are receiving consideration and Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution will report to me shortly. The inspectorate has issued interim advice which will be followed by detailed guidance on the measures site licences should require for the proper management of landfill gas.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Members (Resettlement Grants)

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Lord President of the Council what estimate he has made to the extra cost to public funds in the event of those Members retiring at the general election in 1987 who were aged between 64 and 69 years being entitled to resettlement grants; and how many Members who retired then were aged between 64 and 69 years.

Mr. Wakeham: The existing arrangements provide that resettlement grants can be paid to Members aged under 65 who leave the House at a general election. At the 1987 general election 27 Members aged 65 to 69 left the House. On the assumption that the level of the resettlement grant payable was that applicable to those aged 55 to 64 years, the additional cost would have been £476,930.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the cost to public funds at the 1987 general election of resettlement grants paid to Members (a) who retired or (b) lost their seats; and what would have been the total cost of a resettlement grant based on a payment of one month's salary for each year of completed service.

Mr. Wakeham: At the 1987 general election resettlement grants totalling £702,630 were paid to Members who retired and £372,220 to Members who lost their seats. If these resettlement grants had been payable at the rate of one month's salary for each completed year of service the total cost would have been £1,648,042.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many Members not retiring but losing their seats at the last general election received less than one month's pay for each year of service.

Mr. Wakeham: Sixteen Members who lost their seats at the 1987 general election received resettlement grants which represented less than one month's salary for each year of service.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many Members losing their seats at the last election and receiving resettlement grants were aged (a) 40 to 45 years, (b) 45 to 50 years, (c) 50 to 55 years, (d) 55 to 60 years and (e) 60 to 65 years.

Mr. Wakeham: The number of Members in each of the age ranges specified who lost their seats at the 1987 general election and who received a resettlement grant is as follows:

Age	Number
40 to under 45	11
45 to under 50	6
50 to under 55	8
55 to under 60	3
60 to under 65	2

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the cost of the resettlement grants allocated after the 1987 election as a percentage cost of the total Members' salaries from June 1983 to June 1987.

Mr. Wakeham: The cost of resettlement grants paid following the 1987 general election was £1·07 million, which is approximately 2·5 per cent. of £42·55 million, the total of all Members' salaries paid during the 1983-87 Parliament.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much regional development grant was received by the British Steel Corporation between June 1979 and the latest available date; if he will list the steel works receiving such grant with the amounts given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Details of payments of regional development grants above certain thresholds are published in British Business. The details published are: under the original RDG scheme, individual payments which exceed £25,000 showing the employment office area concerned; and under the revised scheme, payments to individual undertakings in a travel-to-work area which cumulatively exceed £25,000 in any one quarter. Payments of RDG to the British Steel Corporation published in British Business for the period 1 July 1979 to 31 March 1988 totalled some £190 million. In addition, BSC will have benefited from RDG paid to leasing companies in respect of assets leased to the corporation. Information on these payments, and on payments to individual works, is not readily available.

Electronics

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the investment performance and international competitiveness of the British electronics industry.

Mr. Butcher: The United Kingdom electronics industry is a profitable and growing sector which has benefited from the enterprise policies followed by this Government. It invests heavily and has a strong competitive position in a number of areas of the world market. United Kingdom R and D expenditure in the electronics and IT area increased from £1,235 million in 1981 to £1,936 million in 1986. During that period net capital expenditure by the sector increased from £364 million to £657 million.

Skin Lighteners

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has concerning the manufacture in the United Kingdom of skin-lightening cosmetics containing either mercury or hydroquinone; what restrictions exist concerning the sale of these products; whether he has received any representations about the export of such products to Nigeria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The supply of mercury soap and skin lightening creams, and so on, containing more than 2 per cent. hydroquinone is prohibited in the EC. I have not received any representations about the export of such products to Nigeria, but I have stopped the export of mercury soap from Britain to the Third world. Until recently a small number of British firms were producing and exporting it. I shall also be asking the industry not to export to the Third world skin lightening creams, and so on, containing more than 2 per cent. hydroquinone and to ensure that these products carry the warning labels required by law for sale in the EC.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who represented his Department at the International Tropical Timber Organisation conference in Rio de Janeiro; what proposals they put; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 29 June 1988]: The United Kingdom is being represented at the current International Tropical Timber Organisation (ITTO) conference by officials from the Department of Trade and Industry and the Overseas Development Administration. The United Kingdom supports the objectives of the International Tropical Timber Agreement, of which the ITTO is the administrative arm. The objectives balance conservation and trade expansion and diversification. The United Kingdom was one of the first signatories of the agreement under which ITTO was established.

PRIME MINISTER

Merchant Fleet

Q61. Sir David Price: To ask the Prime Minister what is her response to the conclusion in the fourth report of the Select Committee on Defence of Session 1987-88 that the decline in the British merchant fleet has alarming implications for the United Kingdom's national and collective security and that only she is in a position to take a broad overview of a national maritime policy.

The Prime Minister: The Government will be responding to the conclusions in the Defence Committee's report in due course, but I can assure my hon. Friend that I and my ministerial colleagues have regularly examined the implications of the decline of the British merchant fleet in recent years and have already introduced a number of measures designed to safeguard the national interest.

North Devon

Q133. Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will seek to pay an official visit to north Devon during the next 12 months.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 June.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 June.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 June.

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereals

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that the collection of the cereal co-responsibility levy will be effectively policed to present avoidance by misrepresentation of goods and failure to record transactions, so as to avoid discrimination against merchants, processors, and farmer suppliers who obey the law.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Under arrangements coming into effect on 1 July, those responsible for collecting the cereals co-responsibility levy will be required to register with the Intervention Board, keep records of their grain transactions and make them available for official inspection. Failure to comply with these requirements will be punishable by a fine of up to £2,000 for each offence.

In addition there will be regular inspection visits in order to ensure that records are kept and the levy paid in full.

Domestic Waste

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to ensure that any proposal to import domestic waste from other countries into the United Kingdom will satisfy the requirements of the Importation of Animal Products and Poultry Products Order 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors he takes into account when considering licence applications under the Importation of Animal Products and Poultry Products Order.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In considering applications for new licence under the Importation of Animal Products and Poultry Products Order 1980, particular account is taken of the animal health status of the exporting country, the nature of the product concerned and its potential to carry disease, so that possible disease risks may be assessed. No licence to import domestic waste will be granted unless we can be satisfied that there are adequate safeguards against such risks.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with consumer organisations about the use of bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None.

Food (Nutrition Claims)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will consider extending controls over the use of nutrition claims in food labelling and advertising; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am aware of the strong consumer interest in diet and health which has led to a new generation of nutrition claims for many food products. Such claims can have a disproportionate impact upon consumers, undermining the numerical information given in accordance with our voluntary nutrition labelling guidelines, and can mislead consumers not least because the messages are not consistent across all foods. I am also aware that the industry would find guidance on the criteria to be used in establishing such claims useful in the labelling and marketing of their products. The Food Advisory Committee (FAC) has therefore considered this issue in detail and I have now received the committee's advice, for which I am most grateful.

The FAC has concluded that there is a need for controls and that it may be sensible for these to be drawn up along the lines of the existing claims provisions in the Food Labelling Regulations 1984, which already cover certain nutrients such as protein, polyunsaturates, fatty acids, vitamins and minerals.

I am, however, aware that any legislation may mean changes for some food manufacturers and retailers wishing to make nutrition claims. It is not my intention to impose any unreasonable burdens on the industry, but, at the same time, I wish to ensure that consumers are protected and have adequate information to make choices. I am therefore arranging for the FAC's advice to be sent to the representative organisations of all the interests concerned to seek their views on the legislative approach and on the particular recommendations. A copy of the FAC advice has been placed in the Library of the House.

My colleagues in the Health and Agriculture Departments share my views on this, and consultations with the interested organisations in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland will also be undertaken.

SCOTLAND

Traffic Accidents (Statistics)

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the mean blood-alcohol concentration of drivers killed in road traffic accidents in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The mean blood alcohol concentration of drivers who have died within 12 hours of a road accident in Scotland for 1986 (latest figures) is estimated to be around 50 mg per 100 ml.

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the mean blood-alcohol concentration of pedestrians killed in road traffic accidents in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The mean blood alcohol concentration of pedestrians aged 16 and over who have died within 12 hours of a road accident in Scotland for 1986 (latest figures) is estimated to be around 110 mg per 100 ml.

Pre-court Diversion Schemes

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his reply of 27 May, Official Report, column 363, he is able to say when the second report relevant to pre-court diversion schemes is likely to be received by his Department.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The second report is expected during the summer.

Rating Reform

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to abolish the present 40 per cent. relief for non-domestic rates.

Mr. Lang: At present industrial derating, at the level of 40 per cent., applies to all manufacturing industry in Scotland. We have made it clear that industrial derating will continue to have a place in Scotland until the reform of the non-domestic rating system is complete. The appropriate level of derating after 1990 will be considered in the light of the results of the forthcoming revaluation.

Teaching Hospitals

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all teaching hospitals in Scotland, showing their locations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on teaching hospitals and their location in Scotland is contained in the publication "Scottish Health Service Costs", which is available in the Library.

Prison Service

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will establish a full independent inquiry into the Scottish prison service that will consider the length of sentences, the impact of fine defaulters on the system, the use of remand by the courts, the needs of drug and alcohol abusers, and the role and purpose of the present authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. An inquiry of this kind would be very protracted and unnecessarily delay initiatives which the Government have already announced for the Scottish prison service and the penal system as a whole. The activities of the Scottish prison service are closely monitored by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons in Scotland and by visiting committees for individual establishments.

Peterhead Prison

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he intends to take to improve conditions for the governor, staff and inmates of Peterhead prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The main priority at Peterhead is to maintain peace and good order at the establishment in the interests of all staff and inmates. Appropriate and necessary measures to restrict opportunities for attempted disruption and violence have been taken and will be kept under review.

The reduced occupancy of Peterhead and the use of E hall, Shotts prison, continue for the time being, but I hope that additional accommodation will become available for use at Peterhead by the end of the year.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what forces were involved in ending the Peterhead prison siege; and whether such forces will be used in ending any future prison disturbances.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The operational responsibility for dealing with criminal offences, including offences committed in penal establishments, rests with the chief constable concerned. For operational reasons it would not be appropriate to disclose the circumstances in which particular siege incidents are ended, or to speculate on what might be done in future.

DEFENCE

Departmental Offices (Relocation)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has for the relocation of offices and facilities to the northern regions.

Mr. Sainsbury: As has been stated in the House on several occasions, we are anxious to see a more even spread of defence employment across the regions. Whenever potential opportunities for relocation arise they are carefully considered. However, all proposals must be justified on both economic and operational grounds.

Ocean Surveillance Centre

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under which section the expenditure on the United Kingdom national joint ocean surveillance information centre from defence vote 4 comes.

Mr. Sainsbury: Although expenditure on class I, vote 4, is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, I will reply on this occasion. Expenditure on the project to which the hon. Member refers is borne on class I, vote 4, section A.

Procurement Contracts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his policy of non-publication of the value of defence procurement contracts applies in the case of contracts with United States companies whose value has already been publicly announced by the United States Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It would be unusual for the United States Government to publish details of prices in individual contracts between my Department and United States companies. Contract price information is regarded as commercially confidential.

Nimrod

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of the redundant Nimrod airborne early warning 3 airframes are to be converted for use as tankers; and what is the estimated cost of this programme;

(2) what has been the cost of storage and maintenance of Nimrod airborne early warning 3 aircraft since the cancellation of the Nimrod airborne early warning programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Three Nimrod AEW airframes are to be used to provide spares for the Nimrod maritime patrol aircraft, and a fourth as a ground instructional aircraft. Pending a decision on their future use, the remaining aircraft are being maintained in reserve at RAF Waddington. As the task has been absorbed within the RAF's existing manning levels, no additional manpower costs are involved. The only extra costs involved in holding these aircraft in reserve are estimated at about £400,000 per year, chiefly for the heating and lighting of hangars.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flying hours have been flown by Nimrod airborne early warning 3 aircraft since the cancellation of the Nimrod airborne early warning programme; and for what purpose.

Mr. Sainsbury: Just under 10, comprising pre-delivery test, delivery and positioning flights.

Take-off Curfews

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of occasions for each year since 1979 that the normal curfew on weekend take-offs and landings at RAF Fairford has been breached; whose authority is required before aircraft are permitted to break the curfew on weekend take-offs and landings at RAF Fairford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: RAF Fairford was made available to the United States air force on the understanding that certain limitations would apply to aircraft operations during peacetime. These included the avoidance, normally, of weekend flying activity. On a few occasions since 1979 weekend sorties have taken place, with the full agreement of the Ministry of Defence, where these have been shown to be necessary for operational or exercise purposes. A record of these sorties is not held centrally. Because of the closure for repairs of the runway at RAF Mildenhall, the MOD agreed to the redeployment of a small number of USAF aircraft to RAF Fairford for approximately six months. During this period, it has been agreed that a limited amount of weekend flying will be permitted to meet operational requirements. Every effort will be made to keep this to a minimum. The new, temporary, arrangements have been publicised locally and notified to the appropriate authorities.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of occasions for each year since 1979 that the normal curfew on Sunday morning take-offs at RAF Mildenhall has been breached; whose authority is required before aircraft are permitted to break the curfew on Sunday morning take-offs at RAF Mildenhall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There is no such curfew at RAF Mildenhall. However, every effort is made by the United States air force to keep weekend flying to the minimum consistent with the station's operational requirements.

High-intensity Radio Transmissions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the danger to military aircraft from flying in proximity to high-intensity radio transmissions; and what measures have been implemented to address this problem.

Mr. Freeman: The potential danger to aircraft flying in close proximity to areas of high intensity radio transmissions are well understood by my Department and by the aircrew of the three services. Appropriate instructions are issued and information promulgated to ensure that military flights are undertaken in as safe a manner as possible.

Radiation (Ouston)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the activities at Ouston, Northumberland, from 25 May to 9 June, which resulted in an intense radiation hazard.

Mr. Freeman: During the period 25 May to 9 June a transportable radar, belonging to the Royal Air Force, was deployed for exercise training to a site near Ouston, Northumberland. During the course of the exercise the equipment was activated but no personnel, military or civil, were exposed to any danger.

Patriot Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial contribution is being made by Her Majesty's Government towards the Belgian purchase of the Patriot surface-to-air missile system.

Mr. Sainsbury: I understand that Belgium currently has no plans to purchase Patriot systems.

Defence Microbiology Division

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose and function of the defence microbiology division at the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down; what is the annual budget of the defence microbiology division; when the defence microbiology division was set up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The role of the Chemical Defence Establishment is to carry out research into defensive measures to protect our armed forces against attack by chemical or biological weapons. The defence microbiology division is one of the divisions of the CDE: it was set up when the former MOD Microbiology Research Establishment was transferred in 1979 to the public health laboratory service. It is not in the national interest to disclose detailed resource figures. The division was involved in the recent successful exercise to decontaminate Gruinard Island.

Genetic Engineering

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts and agreements exist between his Department and universities and other institutions of higher education for research related to genetic engineering.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence has currently five research agreements with universities or other instituitions of higher education concerned with aspects of genetic engineering. All are sponsored by the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down, and their aggregate value is £700,000. (One also relates to monoclonal antibodies).

Monoclonal Antibodies

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts and agreements exist between his department and universities and other institutions of higher education for research related to the production or application of monoclonal antibodies.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence has currently nine research agreements with universities or other institutions of higher education concerned with aspects of monoclonal antibodies. All are sponsored by the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down, and their aggregate value is £1·26 million. (One also relates to genetic engineering).

Porton Down

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many undergraduates from universities and other institutions of higher education are employed during the summer vacation at the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Chemical Defence Establishment usually employs around 15 undergraduates during the summer vacation.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many universities and other institutions of higher education have been awarded contracts as part of the strategic defence initiative programme; what is the total value of these contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answers given to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) on 11 January, at column 66, and 25 April 1988, at column 73-74.

Tornado Aircraft (Damage)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the RAF Tornado aircraft damaged in a landing accident at RAF Wildenrath on 14 April 1987 was repaired on site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Tornado aircraft from 15 Squadron, RAF Laarbruch, which crashed at RAF Wildenrath on 14 April 1987 was assessed to have sustained category 3 damage. Thus, although the damage was repairable on site, the necessary work was beyond the local unit's technical resources, and assistance was therefore required from a service repair unit or outside contractor. The aircraft was subsequently returned to RAF Laarbruch for repair.

Play Area (Fort Newhaven)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to the Army of the renovation of the children's play area at Fort Newhaven, Sussex, by the Territorial Army; and what contribution towards this cost has been made by the owners of the fort.

Mr. Freeman: The renovation work was carried out during the course of a training weekend held in the Newhaven area by 133 Corps Troops Workshop REME.

A number of unit personnel rendered assistance during periods in which they were not directly engaged in a unit exercise. All materials were supplied by the fort authorities and no additional transport costs were incurred by the unit. In view of the above, no charges were levied against the owners of the fort.

Low Flying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which areas have been allocated to low-flying aircraft exercise for the year 1988-89.

Mr. Freeman: While detailed planning for the year 1988-89 is not yet finalised, significant exercise activity is expected to take place throughout most parts of Great Britain.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish rota arrangements for the allocation of low-flying aircraft exercises within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: The location of exercises involving low-flying aircraft is determined primarily by the type of activity involved, and the facilities needed. Where possible, locations, including those of major NATO exercises, are varied, as a range of locations adds to the training value. There are no pre-planned rota arrangements as such.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the opinions of the local population are taken into account in the planning of low-flying aircraft exercises.

Mr. Freeman: The location of exercises involving low-flying aircraft is determined primarily by the type of activity involved and the facilities needed. Wherever possible, locations are varied, which both adds to training value and spreads any disturbance more evenly and equitably. Thus, the interests of the whole population are taken into account as far as possible.

Salisbury Plain

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the estimated cost to the Ministry of Defence police of the extra policing of the military lands at Salisbury Plain for the month of June 1988;

(2) what is the estimated cost to the Ministry of Defence police of providing assistance to the Wiltshire constabulary to police lands in the vicinty of the military lands at Salisbury Plain for the month of June 1988; if any of this cost will be reimbursed by the Wiltshire constabulary; and if he will make a statement;

(3) on whose authority the decision to station extra Ministry of Defence police officers to Salisbury Plain in the month of June 1988 was taken; how many officers were involved in operations on Salisbury Plain in the month of June 1988; and under whose control were these officers.

Mr. Sainsbury: Additional Ministry of Defence police were deployed to the Salisbury Plain area by the chief constable at the request of MOD (Army) in order to prevent interference with MOD access to and use of defence land and facilities in the period leading up to the celebration of the summer solstice at Stonehenge and its aftermath. A total of 66 officers were deployed from 20 May to 15 June, increased to a total of 318, including the operational support unit, from 16 to 23 June 1988, working 12-hour shifts throughout, under the operational command of the assistant chief constable, Western area, Ministry of Defence police.

The estimated extra cost of this deployment cannot be separately identified. Since the Ministry of Defence police presence was provided in the first instance to meet the requirements of my Department, it would not be appropriate to charge the Wiltshire constabulary for such assistance as was given to it.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on whose authority the operational support group of the Ministry of Defence police was deployed with riot equipment on land not owned, used or operated by his Department on the morning of 21 June 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: The operational support unit of the Ministry of Defence police was deployed in the vicinity of Ministry of Defence land near Stonehenge on the morning of 21 June, with public order protective clothing and shields, on the authority of the chief constable, Ministry of Defence police, and responded to a request for assistance from the chief constable of the Wiltshire constabulary, in accordance with section 2(2)(d) of the MOD Police Act 1987.

Exercise Tristar

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much night low flying will be conducted during Exercise Tristar; and by what types of aircraft.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 June 1988]: Up to 27 night low-flying sorties by Hercules transport aircraft and Chinook helicopters were planned. In the event, 20 were flown, six by Hercules and 14 by Chinook.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties are planned during Exercise Tristar by which types of aircraft; and what proportion of these will take place between 11 pm and 7 am.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 June 1988]: A total of 29 low-flying sorties were planned for the exercise period, nine by Hercules aircraft and 20 by Chinook helicopters, around 90 per cent. of which were to be flown between 11 pm and 7 am. Some, unquantified, daytime low-flying by light helicopters was also envisaged.

Army (Nepotism)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to assess evidence of nepotism in the selection of officers for certain regiments in the British Army; and if he will set out his policy for curtailing such opportunities.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 June 1988]: None. Allocation to regiment or corps is based on a number of factors, including personal preference, ability, aptitude and the current vacancy situation in the individual regiment or corps. All regiments or corps actively seek to identify and encourage potential officer candidates with the right qualities at an early stage. This is a most productive aid to recruitment and the fostering of identity within regiment and corps. Many regiments are, for example, regionally based.

All potential officer candidates must meet the standards of the Regular Commissions Board, which is strictly independent of any regimental connection. The pass rate of sons and daughters of serving and retired officers is not noticeably higher than the overall average pass rate.

Similarly, before joining a regiment or corps, all potential officers must pass their training at the Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst, which is also quite independent.

I am satisfied with the system. However, if my hon. Friend has any evidence of nepotism in the selection of officers for certain regiments, I should be grateful if he would write to me.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Clubs

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people have attended job clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Since official records began in April 1986 until March 1988, a total of 126,283 unemployed people passed through job clubs. I have been very encouraged by the success of job clubs in helping long-term unemployed people into jobs. We plan a substantial increase in the number of job club places in 1988-89.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for The Wrekin of 20 June, how many civil servants in his Department are employed at grade 3 and above; and what is the estimated cost of discovering whether they were educated at state or private schools.

Mr. Lee: There are 36 civil servants employed at grade 3 level and above. The estimated cost of providing the information requested on schools attended would probably be in excess of £350.

Anti-social Hours

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the occupations which involve anti-social hours being worked; and if he will consider introducing legislation which includes unsocial hours payments worth one third of basic pay.

Mr. Lee: There is no standard definition of "anti-social hours" and it is therefore not possible to give a list of occupations which involve such hours. Legislation in this area is not being considered, as the Government believe that the terms and conditions of employment are a matter for employers and employees to negotiate without Government interference.

Women Workers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of full-time working women in Cornwall receive less than £100 a week; and what is the figure for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Lee: Information on the distribution of earnings from the new earnings survey sample indicates that, in April 1987, some 37 per cent. of full-time female employees in Cornwall on adult rates, whose gross earnings were not affected by absence, earned less than £100 per week. The equivalent figure for the United Kingdom as a whole is 22 per cent.

Wages

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish in the Official Report, a breakdown of average regional wage rates for skilled and unskilled manual workers, over the most recent decade for which figures are available;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a breakdown of average regional wage rates for skilled and unskilled manual workers.

Mr. Lee: Regional figures on the average earnings of full-time manual employees are published annually in part E of the report on the new earnings survey, copies of which are available in the Library. Information to distinguish the earnings of skilled and non-skilled manual employees is not readily available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the rates of wage inflation on a regional basis for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The annual increase in average earnings is provided in the table.

Unemployment Benefit (Investigations)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what period is laid down in his Department's guidelines for dealing with a claimant who has been suspended from unemployment benefit pending investigations and the claimant being told the result of investigations.

Mr. Lee: Claimants may be suspended from unemployment benefit for a variety of reasons. In most cases, doubtful claims would be submitted for a decision to the adjudication officer. Social security legislation provides that once a claim has been submitted to an adjudication officer, as far as practicable it should be disposed of within 14 days. The adjudication officer is empowered, however, to make whatever inquiries are necessary before making a decision.

The period of time between a claimant being suspended from unemployment benefit and being notified of the result of investigations will therefore vary from one case to another, and will depend, among other things, on the complexity of the case.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what period is laid down in his Department's guidelines for dealing with a claimant who reports that a payment of unemployment benefit is lost or stolen and the claimant being told the result of investigations.

Mr. Lee: My Department does not lay down any specific guidelines. The period of time between a claimant reporting a loss and being notified of the result of an investigation will vary from one case to another and will depend, among other things, on the complexity of the case under question.

Industrial Action (Ballots)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those ballots on industrial action held since they became compulsory have (a) supported and (b) opposed such action.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no statutory requirement making it compulsory for a union to ballot its members about industrial action. Part II of the Trade Union Act 1984, however, makes immunity for official industrial action conditional on majority support from a properly conducted secret ballot. The Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service is currently aware of some 639 ballots which took place between 26 September 1984 and 22 June 1988 which were apparently designed to comply with the provisions of part II of the 1984 Act. In 85 per cent. of these ballots the result was in favour of taking industrial action, in 14 per cent. against and in 1 per cent. drawn. There may well have been other such ballots of which the service is unaware.

Wages Act 1986

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has now supplied the committee of independent experts on the European social charter with the information it requires to assess whether the Wages Act 1986 has placed the United Kingdom in breach of article 2, paragraphs 2 and 3 of the charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Information about the United Kingdom's application of paragraphs 2 and 3 of article 2 of the European social charter will form part of the United Kingdom's next report to the committee of independent experts in its application of the charter generally. This report is in course of preparation.

Wages Councils

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of States for Employment if he will seek powers to remove from the scope of wages councils adults who wish to work part time for up to 18 hours weekly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Export Promotion

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures his Department is taking to encourage British exports through its offices overseas; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We attach considerable importance to the promotion of British exports. Our policy is to provide services to exporters which in principle are available to all firms and for all overseas markets, with special emphasis on helping small and medium sized firms, or newcomers to markets.

The United Kingdom's official commercial services are available in markets throughout the world, through the Diplomatic Service's network of some 190 commercial posts.

More than 500 United Kingdom-based and locally engaged commercial officers provide these services, representing about 30 per cent. of the Diplomatic Service's overseas front-line resources, nearly twice as much as any other single function.

Overseas posts undertake commercial work in close collaboration with the Department of Trade and Industry, which administers export promotion services in Britain. The FCO and DTI work closely together on export promotion and jointly manage export promotion services overseas.

Brussels European Council

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the conclusions of the Brussels European Council have now been translated into legally binding documents.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes. Following the agreement reached by the Foreign Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 13-14 June, on which my right hon. and learned Friend reported to the House on 16 June, at column 218, I attended a special Foreign Affairs Council held in Luxembourg on 20 June. At that meeting the Council and the European Parliament reached agreement on the texts implementing the conclusions of the European Council in February on the future financing of the Community. This opened the way to their formal adoption, which took place at the Industry Council on 24 June. The documents have been placed in the Library of the House.

The only text finalised but not yet formally adopted is the directive on the harmonisation of GNP statistics. It has been unanimously agreed by the Council. Because the new own resources decision will form part of its legal base, however, it can be adopted formally only when the new own resources decision has been ratified by all member states.

We will now bring forward the necessary primary legislation to seek approval for the new own resources decision. The own resources decision and the Inter Governmental Agreement are also being published today as Command Papers (Cm. 419 and Cm. 418).

Cosmetics (Nigeria)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Nigerian Government about the sale in Nigeria of skin-lightening cosmetics manufactured in the United Kingdom and containing either mercury or hydroquinone.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Hanoi (Diplomatic Posts)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the persons who occupied the post of Her Majesty's consul general or Her Majesty's ambassador in Hanoi since 1958.

Mrs. Chalker: The consuls general in Hanoi until 1974 and then Her Majesty's ambassadors to the Socialist Republic of Vietnam to date have been as follows:

Consuls General:

1958-60	M. T. Walker
1960-62	J. F. Ford, CMG, OBE
1962-64	J. K. Blackwell
1964-65	M. W. Ponsonby
1965-67	H. B. Shepherd
1967-68	B. T. W. Stewart
1968-69	G. C. G. Philo, MC
1969-70	Miss D. M. S. D. Park, OBE
1970-71	J. M. Liudzius, OBE
1971-72	J. B. Wright
1972-74	T. J. Everard

Her Majesty's Ambassadors

1974-75	J. H. Fawcett
1975-76	J. A. B. Stewart
1976-78	R. M. Tesh, CMG
1978-80	J. W. D. Margetson
1980-82	D. Tonkin
1982-85	M. E. Pike
1985-87	R. G. Tallboys
1987-date	E. T. Davies

EC Council of Ministers

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present four meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for July.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 11 July to consider the Commission's second quarterly review of the economic situation in the Community, and a proposal to harmonise arrangements under which means of transport may be temporarily imported into the Community.

The Agriculture Council meets on 18-19 July to discuss income aids.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 25-26 July. The agenda includes discussion of progress in the negotiations with Czechoslovakia on trade in industrial products, and the establishment of the court of first instance. The mandate for the re-negotiation of the Lomé convention and issues arising from the Hanover European Council may also be on the agenda. Meeting as a conference of representatives of the member states, Ministers will discuss the appointment of judges to the European Court of Justice.

The Budget Council meets on 26 July to discuss the Commission's preliminary draft budget for 1989.

UN Special Session on Disarmament

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement following the third United Nations special session on disarmament 31 May to 25 June.

Mr. Mellor: The special session, which ended on 26 June, provided an important opportunity for the consideration of arms control issues. We regret that it was not able to agree a final document. The United Kingdom delegation played a full part in the debate and negotiations and put forward a number of specific proposals. The United Kingdom position was outlined in a memorandum dated 23 May, which was printed and distributed as a United Kingdom document.

In my right hon. and learned Friend's speech to the special session on 7 June he pressed for wider accession to the 1925 Geneva protocol, which bans the use of chemical weapons in war, and proposed measures to enable immediate investigation of CW use and international action against violence. We shall pursue those proposals in the appropriate fora.

As my right hon. and learned Friend also made clear in his speech, we have a full and practical arms control agenda in the nuclear, conventional and chemical fields. Despite the disappointing outcome at the special session, we shall press ahead with this work with the aim of achieving balanced and verifiable agreements which are consistent with the maintenance of the United Kingdom's security.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Jobs

Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many additional jobs in the Civil Service have been created in the north in the past three years.

Mr. Brooke: Details of all the additional jobs created by Departments in the past three years in the regions are not held centrally, but during 1987-88 the Department of Health and Social Security created over 500 new jobs at its Newcastle central office. In addition, 30 jobs are being created in Darlington this year by the Department of Education and Science. The total of Civil Service staff in post in the northern region at 1 April 1987 was 33,600.

For the future, Departments will be encouraged to consider all suitable locations for the relocation of existing work and the placement of new work, including those in the north, on the basis mentioned in my answer on 31 March, at columns 610-11, to my hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Arnold). They will in suitable cases announce specific plans as and when these are prepared.

VAT

Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to publish the consultation document on items other than non-domestic construction covered by the European Court judgment on value added tax zero rating, which was promised in the Economic Secretary's statement to the House on 21 June, Official Report, column 958.

Mr. Lilley: This document has now been published, and copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest assessment of the extra revenue which would accrue to the Treasury if value added tax were levied at standard rate (a) for industry and commerce, to gas, electricity, water, sewerage, news services, protective clothing and footwear and (b) to all non-industrial and commercial buildings, as advocated by the European Economic Community Commission in the European Court of Justice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 21 June 1988]: If value added tax were levied at the standard rate on supplies made to commerce and industry of gas, electricity, water, sewerage, news services and protective clothes and footwear it is estimated that the full-year net revenue yield would be about £25 million at 1988-89 prices.

If value added tax were levied at the standard rate on all non-industrial and commercial buildings—that is, private sector housing—it is estimated that the full-year net revenue yield would be about £925 million at 1988-89 prices. However, I would refer my hon. Friend to my statement on the European Court's judgment on 21 June, at columns 957-58. The court ruled that the United Kingdom is not in breach of its treaty obligations by zero-rating non-industrial and commercial buildings.

Debt

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the specific ways in which the United States of America will comply with the Toronto resolution on debt.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 29 June 1988]: Major industrial countries agreed in Toronto on rescheduling the poorest countries' official debt within a framework of comparability. Creditors will be able to choose between concessional interest rates, longer repayment periods, partial write-offs or a combination of these options. The United States has said that it will consider a broader range of maturities.

Charities (Payroll Deduction Scheme)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make it his policy to fund a major information campaign to increase public awareness of the payroll deduction scheme to charitable organisations.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 28 June 1988]: By introducing tax relief for payroll giving the Government have provided charities with access to a new source of funds with enormous potential, and it is primarily for charities to publicise the benefits. However, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor is conducting a seminar on 18 July to discuss with employers, charities, and the payroll-giving agencies what more might be done to encourage people to take part in the scheme.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total advance corporation tax repayments made by the Inland Revenue in the last financial year; what is the number of recipients of these refunds; and what percentage of the refunds go to the 10 biggest recipients.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 24 June 1988]: Repayments of ACT amounted to £140 million in 1987-88. This figure represents the total ACT repaid to the companies which originally paid it. The 10 largest recipients accounted for 42 per cent. of the total repayment. I regret that a figure for the total number of recipients is not available.

Taxation (Late Payment Penalties)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the last financial year financial penalties in respect of the late payment of (a) value added tax, (b) income tax, (c) national insurance contributions (d) PAYE and (e) customs and excise duties were waived; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 June 1988]: About 30 value added tax penalty and default surcharge assessments have been waived—all on compassionate grounds. There are no penalties for late payment of income tax, class 1 national insurance contributions, PAYE by employers and customs and excise duties.

Taxation Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number and proportion of tax units who will be paying more income tax and national insurance in real terms in 1988-89 than in 1978-79; and what is the number of tax units who will be paying a higher proportion of their gross income in tax and national insurance in 1988-89 than in 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 May 1988]: I regret the delay in replying. Information is not available to provide estimates about the experience of individuals in the form requested.

The tables are therefore based on the distributions in 1978-79 and 1988-89 of the gross earnings and investment income of married couples and single people aged under 65 who would be liable to pay income tax or national insurance contributions. The changes between the two years in average liability in real terms, and the proportions of income paid in income tax and national insurance contributions in each year, are shown for the corresponding deciles of each distribution. The estimates are provisional.

Member's Question

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the hon. Member for Taunton can expect to receive a reply to his question tabled for answer on 17 June relating to income tax payable at certain levels of income.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any changes have been made to the arrangements for the development of the Channel tunnel set out in the Channel fixed link concession agreement dated as of 14 March 1986 Cmnd. 9769.

Mr. David Mitchell: Yes. Amendments have been made which modify certain provisions in annex II to the concession agreement dealing with the acquisition of land, ownership of the fixed link and rights of the concessionaires in so far as these relate to the United Kingdom. The amendments have been made with the agreement of the British and French Governments and the concessionaires, and came into effect on 9 May 1988. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. (Amendment No. 1 to Concession Agreement, Cmnd. 406).

Drinking and Driving

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken to ensure that the precise number and relative proportions of deaths among drivers, passengers and pedestrians in road traffic accidents which are alcohol related are accurately recorded.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is believed that virtually all fatal accidents are reported. The STATS 19 Accident Report form records whether any of the involved drivers-riders were required to take a breath test and, if they were, what the result was. Not all drink-drive accidents are identified as such. It is not always possible to administer breath tests at the scene of an accident and the drunken driver may die or be so badly injured that he is unable to provide a sample of breath.

It is known that many accidents involving minor injuries are not reported to the police.

Coroners in England and Wales and procurators fiscal in Scotland supply data to the Transport and Road Research Laboratory describing the blood-alcohol levels of people aged 16 or over who died within 12 hours of being injured in a road accident; these are matched with information from the STATS 19 form. Returns for approximately 60 per cent. of these fatalities are currently received. The Department is encouraging coroners and procurators fiscal to help improve this vital source of information.

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of crashes involving more than one vehicle resulting in deaths of individuals without alcohol in their blood are caused by drivers with illegal blood alcohol levels.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall be writing to my right hon. Friend.

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the value of breath test surveys of the frequency of drinking and driving as a bench mark against which to judge whether counter-measures against the problem are having an effect; and what studies have been authorised of the frequency of drinking and driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The roadside surveys of drinking and driving completed earlier this month will provide an indicator of the effectiveness of drink driving countermeasures. The results are now being analysed.

Barton-le-Clay Bypass, Bedfordshire

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the process of offering the tenders for the construction of the A6 bypass at Barton-le-Clay, Befordshire to be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tenders were invited on 26 May. They are due to be returned by 4 August.

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he expects the A6 Barton-le-Clay bypass work to be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the autumn of 1990.

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether there has been any delay from the original dates indicated to the Bedfordshire county council regarding commencement of work on the A6 Barton-le-Clay bypass, Bedfordshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The scheme has been listed in successive White Papers for a start of works in the period 1986 to March 1989. I expect construction to start later this year, in line with this programme.

Heavy Goods Vehicles, Kent

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his best estimate of the amount by which heavy goods vehicle movements in Kent increases for each 1 per cent. increase in the national economy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's national traffic forecasts for all roads in Great Britain assume that HGV traffic grows by 0·7 per cent. for each 1 per cent. increase in GDP. Local traffic forecasts are prepared for the appraisal of individual new trunk road schemes, where appropriate. These take account of expected growth in relevant economic activity and population.

Road Capacity

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the principal criteria by which he forecasts the demand for increased road capacity.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The objectives of building roads are to assist economic growth by reducing transport costs, to improve the environment by removing through traffic (especially lorries) from unsuitable roads in towns and villages, and to enhance road safety.

Forecasts of traffic growth, which depends on changes in gross domestic product, changes in fuel prices and changes in people's behaviour over time, are given great weight in the choice and assessment of road improvement schemes.

The cost and feasibility of a particular scheme, its effects on the environment, and its likely effects on the incidence of accidents, are also very relevant.

We are continuously developing the trunk road network through a large new construction and improvement programme, worth some £5 billion, which is reviewed regularly. Schemes are added to this programme as the need is identified.

Kent (Road Accidents)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people have been (a) killed, (b) seriously injured and (c) otherwise injured on the roads of Kent in the current year by (i) month and (ii) type of accident.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is not available in the Department.

M20 (Hollingbourne and Ashford)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the extension of the M20 between Hollingbourne and Ashford will be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: About the end of 1990.

Motorway Service Area, Hollingbourne

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the report of the inspector into the appeal against the construction of a motorway service area at Hollingbourne.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The inspector's reports on the public inquiries into planning applications in respect of proposals for a motorway service area at Hollingbourne, and into a related draft compulsory purchase order, have now been submitted to my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Transport, respectively. The reports are under consideration.

Redbridge Works (Closure)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the National Union of Railwaymen about the proposed closure of the Redbridge works and the transfer of its employees to Eastleigh.

Mr. David Mitchell: None

Singapore

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to increase the number of flights between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Singapore; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: United Kingdom officials met the Singapore Government last week and had a useful exchange of views on both United Kingdom-Singapore and Hong Kong—Singapore air services arrangements. There will be a further meeting.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Security

10. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent steps he has taken to improve security in Northern Ireland.

20. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's efforts to improve security in the Province.

Mr. Stanley: Expenditure on law and order in Northern Ireland this year will be at its highest-ever level in real terms. The full-time strength of the RUC is also at its highest-ever level. A third brigade headquarters comes into being tomorrow with specific operational responsibility for the border area. Certain new legislative measures to combat terrorism and racketeering are under parliamentary consideration now and more will be being proposed. Cross-border security co-operation has improved and will be improved further.

16. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation.

23. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the right hon. Gentleman and the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone).

30. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will next meet Ministers of the Irish Republic to discuss security issues.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to a reply I gave earlier to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter.)

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: Since 26 May 1988, nine people have been killed in Northern Ireland. These deaths include the murder of a full-time UDR soldier by the Provisional IRA; the murder of two civilians in Belfast and the murder by the Provisional IRA of six soldiers in a charity event at Lisburn on 15 June. The Provisional IRA also claimed responsibility for the death of one of the civilians and whilst no organisation has claimed responsibility for the other death, it is believed to have been the work of a Loyalist paramilitary group.

The efforts of the security forces are continuing to yield results. Since the beginning of the year a total of 182 people have been charged with serious offences, including 11 with murder and 10 with attempted murder. A total of 307 weapons, approximately 70,400 rounds of ammunition and about 4,100 lb of explosives have been recovered in Northern Ireland.

I also understand that the Garda Siochana has recovered some 200 weapons, almost 141,000 rounds of ammunition and 600 lb of commercial explosives.

De Lorean Project

11. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil servants in his Department have resigned or been redeployed as a result of inquiries into the De Lorean project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: None. I have nothing to add to the Department of Finance and Personnel memoranda of 24 October 1984 and 8 January 1985 on the 25th report from the Committee of Public Accounts.

Michael Tighe

12. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set up an inquiry into the circumstances in which listening devices came to be placed in the hayshed in which Michael Tighe was killed and as to why no police action was taken before the arrival of the Manchester police to ascertain the identity of those who placed the devices.

Mr. Tom King: No.

Irish Distillers

13. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had over the proposed takeover of Irish Distillers; and if he will make a statement.

19. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the proposed takeover of Irish Distillers and its likely impact on the Northern Ireland economy.

Mr. Viggers: Irish Distillers is registered in the Republic of Ireland, where most of its activities are based. I have not therefore been directly involved in the current offer to acquire the company. However, the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland is maintaining close contact with the "Old Bushmills" Distillery Company Ltd. which is part of the Irish Distillers group and is located in County Antrim.

Housing Executive

14. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is satisfied that the standard of construction and workmanship carried out in Housing Executive dwellings is of a sufficiently high standard.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who has assured me that all reasonable steps are taken to achieve satisfactory standards of workmanship on the substantial range and number of building contracts let by the Housing Executive each year.

Nurses (Education)

15. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the shortfall of revenue allocation for 1988-89 for nurse education; what impact he estimates this will have on the Health Service in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Representations were made by the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health

Visiting in its letter of 25 May 1988 to the Department of Health and Social Services which alleged there was a shortfall of £154,000 in its revenue allocation for the 1988-89 financial year. The letter also contained a request that the permanent secretary and the chief nursing officer of the Department meet a deputation from the national board. This request has been accepted and arrangements for the meeting are being finalised. It will be for the national board to decide its priorities within the available revenue allocation, but it is expected that in the current year some vacant posts might not be filled.

Harland and Wolff

17. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to privatise shipbuilding operations at Harland and Wolff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: As I indicated in my response to the Adjournment debate on 27 May, if there were to be an expression of interest in the acquisition of Harland and Wolff the Government would take any such proposal very seriously.

An expression of interest in the acquisition of Harland and Wolff has now come forward from Tikkoo Cruise Line Limited. The Government will consider this and any proposals from any other parties which might lead to the privatisation of the company.

24. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to meet trade union representatives from Harland and Wolff to discuss the future of the shipyards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no immediate plans to meet trade union representatives from Harland and Wolff. However, I understand he may meet union representatives within the Province later this year to discuss wider economic issues.

Debt

18. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he plans to repeal the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971 in the near future.

27. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to seek to repeal the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971.

29. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland the Government plan to repeal the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971 in the near future.

Mr. Stanley: No. However, the need for the legislation is kept under review.

Single Payments

21. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland were awarded single payments between 1 April 1987 and 31 May 1987; and how many were awarded similar benefit under the social fund legislation between 11 April and 31 May of the current year.

Mr. Needham: Information is not collected in the precise form requested, but the available information is as follows:

Period	Type	Number
8 April 1987 to 2 June 1987	Single payments	27,029
11 April 1988 to 31 May 1988	Community care grants and loans	[1]3,984

During the latter period 41,464[1] single payments were also awarded on claims received before 11 April 1988.

[1] Provisional figures.

Stalker-Sampson Report

22. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the inquiries by the Northern Ireland Police Authority and Mr. Charles Kelly into the Royal Ulster Constabulary, relating to the Stalker-Sampson report, will be completed.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the inquiries into the Royal Ulster Constabulary arising out of the Stalker-Sampson report have been completed.

Mr. Tom King: The completed report by Mr. Charles Kelly on the conduct of officers below the rank of assistant chief constable was given to the Chief Constable on 20 June 1988. I understand that a decision on disciplinary proceedings will be announced shortly. On 29 June the Police Authority for Northern Ireland announced that it had decided not to appoint an officer to carry out further investigations into Mr. Sampson's observations on the role played by more senior officers.

28. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Mr. Charles Kelly has produced a draft or interim report following his inquiries into the Royal Ulster Constabulary relating to the Stalker-Sampson report.

Mr. Tom King: Mr. Kelly furnished a full report to the Chief Constable on 20 June 1988.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the reports of the inquiries by Mr. Charles Kelly and the Northern Ireland Police Authority on the Royal Ulster Constabulary arising out of the Stalker-Sampson report will be published.

Mr. Tom King: No. As is the practice in all police disciplinary cases, reports on disciplinary issues arising out of the inquiries by Mr. Stalker and Mr. Sampson are confidential.

Legislation

25. Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for improving parliamentary procedures relating to Northern Ireland legislation.

Mr. Tom King: We remain ready to discuss changes in Northern Ireland legislative procedures, or the better use of existing procedures, and how any such changes might affect the wider context of progress towards devolved government.

Kilroot Power Station

26. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he now expects to announce a decision regarding phase II of Kilroot power station.

Mr. Viggers: The investment appraisal of Kilroot II and the competing public and private sector lignite proposals is still being considered. When this process is completed the decision will be announced as soon as possible thereafter.

Unemployment

31. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made on reducing unemployment in Northern Ireland by the Industrial Development Board, the Local Enterprise Development Unit and the Department of Economic Development Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: Seasonally adjusted unemployment in Northern Ireland has fallen over the last year by 9,400. This is the largest annual decrease in seasonally adjusted unemployment in Northern Ireland for 15 years.

The IDB, LEDU and DED have contributed substantially to this progress. Both LEDU and the IDB were very successful last financial year. The DED continues to develop its wide range of training and support services. The efforts of these bodies to sustain progress will continue.

The Industrial Development Board and Local Enterprise Development Unit were successful in promoting 5,300 and 3,973 jobs respectively in the year ended 31 March 1988, and they assisted in the advancement of business through a range of training and support services together with the Department of Economic Development. The latest available figures show that seasonally adjusted unemployment in Northern Ireland stands at 116,700, a reduction of 9,400 in the last 12 months.

Police Stations (Closures)

32. Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the proposed closure of police stations around the Ballymena district.

Mr. Stanley: The deployment of police manpower, including the location of police stations, is a matter for the Chief Constable in consultation with the Police Authority. Operational requirements are kept continuously under review, but I understand it is not planned to close any RUC stations in the Ballymena area in the immediate future.

Grammar Schools

33. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide more grammar school places in North Down.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is a matter for the South-Eastern education and library board to ensure that there are sufficient secondary school places available to offer all pupils educational opportunities in accordance with their age, aptitude and ability.

Mentally Ill People

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was, for hospital services for mentally ill people in Northern Ireland, the number of nursing staff per occupied bed, expenditure after allowing for general inflation, expenditure after allowing for Hospital and Community Health Service inflation, the number of psychiatric day patients, the number of out-patients attendances and occupied in-patient beds for each year from 1976-77.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of nursing staff per occupied bed	Expenditure as adjusted for:		Day patient attendance	Out-patient attendances	Occupied in-patient beds
		General inflation	HCHS inflation
1976-77	Not available	46,731,654	50,215,534	12,859	25,762	4,281

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the consultants referred to by the hon. Member for Antrim, East, Official Report, column 1263, of 4 February designed larger windows or changed a window design provided by the Housing Executive without reference to the Housing Executive; what were the precise instructions given to those consultants by the Housing Executive in respect of the windows in the contract at Westmount avenue, Windmill, Carrickfergus; and who was responsible for the payment of increase in costs to the Housing Executive which arose from a different size of window being installed.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the consultants arranged for the installation of a larger bedroom window than specified in five out of 215 houses without consulting the executive. The executive had earlier specified the installation of replacement windows and had approved detailed sketches by the consultants showing the design and size of windows to be installed. There was no increase in cost to the executive.

IRA

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to provide an opportunity for the Northern Ireland parties represented in this House to unite behind a declaration designed to isolate the Irish Republican Army and its political supporters.

Mr. Tom King: I cannot helpfully add to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend on 24 March, at column 218, and on 27 May, at column 331.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the implications for the future of the Anglo-Irish Agreement of the recent difficulties over extradition from Eire.

Mr. Stanley: These difficulties were discussed at the meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 17 June, when both British and Irish Ministers reaffirmed their determination to ensure effective extradition arrangements. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the Taoiseach reaffirmed their respective Governments' total commitment to the Anglo-Irish Agreement earlier this week.

Irish Language

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contact there has been between the Department of Education and voluntary Irish language groups in Northern Ireland since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given on 29 June 1988.

West Belfast

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met community groups from west Belfast to discuss the economic and social problems of the area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: There is regular contact with local community groups to discuss how to improve economic and social conditions. As recently as 20 June my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I met Bishop Daly and members of the West Belfast enterprise board. My right hon. Friend hopes shortly to announce further measures to be taken in areas of Belfast characterised by exceptionally high unemployment and poor rates of economic activity.

Local Government Records

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those district councils in Northern Ireland which have not yet transferred all the records of the former local government authorities in Northern Ireland to the Public Records Office.

Mr. Needham: No district council in Northern Ireland has transferred to the Public Record Office all the records of the former local government authority or authorities for its area.

Sewage Disposal

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many outlets exist on the east Antrim coast for discharging of untreated sewage into the sea.

Mr. Needham: Five.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the remit of the marine survey to investigate the sewage disposal arrangements in the Islandmagee area, due to report in November.

Mr. Needham: Marine surveys in the Islandmagee area, which had been programmed for 1988, have had to be deferred because of other commitments. Marine surveys indicate, among other things, whether existing sewage disposal arrangements are environmentally satisfactory.

Potholes

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much compensation has been paid by his Department to car drivers who have driven into potholes on public roads and damaged their cars.

Mr. Needham: Approximately £20,000 was paid in the 1987-88 financial year.

Island Road, Ballycarry

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when it is expected that work will begin to alleviate the dangerous driving conditions at Island road, Ballycarry.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has two improvement schemes planned for Island road, Ballycarry. It is hoped that these will start in the 1989-90 and 1990-91 financial years respectively, subject to the successful acquisition of the necessary land.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many ministerial visits were undertaken by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in the Province in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Tom King: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Morey Hills Development, Donaghadee

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why there was no full reply to the letter of 23 November 1987, by Miss M. Yeats of 85 Millisle road, Donaghadee about the proposed development at 12 Morey hills, Millisle road, Donaghadee, until 4 March.

Mr. Needham: The acknowledgement of the letter of 23 November was considered appropriate to its content. The Department responded fully to five subsequent letters on 4 March 1988.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what conditions were included in the planning approval for the dwelling at site No. 13 Morey hills development, Millisle road, Donaghadee to ensure that there will be no soil slippage from this plot into the gardens at Nos. 83 and 85 Millisle road, Donaghadee.

Mr. Needham: None. It was not considered necessary to impose such a condition, given the relative levels involved.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what floor level was given planning approval for the dwelling at site 12 Morey hills development, Millisle road, Donaghadee; and what is the floor level as constructed.

Mr. Needham: The planning permission granted did not specify floor levels. The finished floor level, as related to a bench mark of 16·37 m on the garden walls of houses on the Millisle road, Donaghadee, is 17·10 m.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the dimensions of the window, which is now replaced by a patio door, that were given planning approval for the private dwelling at 12 Morey hills development, Millisle road, Donaghadee; and what are the dimensions of the replacement patio door.

Mr. Needham: The window shown in the approved plans measured 1·1 m high by 1·8 m wide. A patio door measuirng approximately 2·2 m high by 1·8 m wide was constructed instead of the window.

Cross-border Co-operation

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the present state of cross-border co-operation.

Mr. Stanley: Co-operation takes place over a wide range of activities, and we and the Irish Government are committed to developing it further. Since the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement a number of improvements in cross-border security co-operation have been made, and at the meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference on 17 June British and Irish Ministers discussed a number of issues with a view to enhancing further cross-border co-operation on security matters. The conference also agreed to consider ways in which bilateral contacts between British and Irish Ministers on economic and social questions might be reinforced.

Young Prisoners

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners held in Northern Ireland gaols are below the age of 21 years; and what is that figure as a percentage of all prisoners held in Northern Ireland gaols.

Mr. Stanley: On 5 June there were 95 prisoners under the age of 21 years. This is 5·7 per cent. of the total of 1,679 prisoners in the five prisons for adults in Northern Ireland. In addition there were 179 inmates under 21 years ordered to be detained in young offenders' centres. This is 90·9 per cent. of the total of 197 YOC inmates. Offenders aged under 21 who are given sentences of less than three years are required by law to be detained in young offenders' centres rather than prisons.

Security Forces (Offences)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details for 1986 and 1987 of the number of members of the Ulster Defence Regiment, the Royal Ulster Constabulary, their respective reserves, and the British Army, who have been charged with offences and who have been convicted of offences, giving details of custodial sentences imposed, and separately for charges and convictions concerning murder, attempted murder, membership of illegal organisations, conspiracy to cause explosions, withholding information concerning terrorist activities, possession of explosives, possession of explosives with intent to cause bodily harm, possession of firearms, possession of firearms with intent to cause bodily harm and other offences classified as scheduled offences.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 29 June.

Investment

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the amount of new overseas investment in Northern Ireland for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Viggers: The Industrial Development Board has had a successful year in promoting investment from overseas. The total number of jobs promoted was 5,300, of which 867 were attributable to 12 new projects introduced from overseas companies already located within Northern Ireland. The aggregate investment associated with these developments by overseas companies was more than £150million.

Identity Cards

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce an identity card to assist in the fight against terrorism.

Mr. Stanley: No. The security forces already have adequate powers for establishing a person's identity.

Shipbuilding

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new initiative he is taking to stimulate the flow of shipbuilding orders to Belfast.

Mr. Viggers: Shipbuilding orders for Belfast are dependent on Harland and Wolff's ability to compete in the world market on a commercial basis.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Electro-convulsive Therapy

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report any analysis available of the ethnic distribution of patients receiving electro-convulsive therapy treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that no such analysis is available centrally.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are expected to benefit from the change in the upper capital limit for housing benefit from £6,000 to £8,000 and what estimate he has made of the number of gainers from raising the lower limit of £3,000 to £5,000.

Mr. Portillo: We expect that about 100,000 people will be brought back within the scope of housing benefit as a result of increasing the capital limit to £8,000. A further 50,000 would be brought back in if the lower limit were to be raised from £3,000 to £5,000, and all those on housing benefit with savings of over £3,000 would see some gain in their entitlement.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for Walsall, North on 27 June over the publicising of the transitional arrangements relating to loss of housing benefit, it is intended to use television and the provincial press.

Mr. Portillo: No.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of [illegible]sing the starting point for reducing housing benefit to £5,[illegible]00 capital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 3 May 1988]: The estimated cost of increasing the starting point in housing benefit from £3,000 to £5,000 is £50 million at 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of claimants who have lost housing benefit arising from the new social security regulations and who will not benefit from the transitional arrangements.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 3 May 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 16 June, at column 286. A precise estimate of the numbers who were receiving housing benefit prior to April but are not covered by the transitional payment scheme is not available. The tables previously published remain the best guide to the overall structural effect of the reforms.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether housing benefit recipients who were able to take advantage of the higher level of benefit under the former higher rent scheme and who have now lost more than £2·50 per week on the new levels of housing benefit will be eligible for transitional protection.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 14 June 1988]: Yes, provided they are in one of the categories eligible to receive transitional payments. These are listed on page 2 of leaflet "RR4 Housing Benefit—New Rules", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims have been made to his Department for housing benefit support transitional protection.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 23 June 1988]: To date, 45,788.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many copies of form RR4 have been (a) printed, and (b) distributed to (i) post offices, (ii) offices of his Department and (iii) volunteer advice agencies; what information he has as to their current availability to the public; and what is his estimate of the numbers of applicants who will return completed forms.

Mr. Portillo: A total of 8·5 million copies of leaflet "RR4 Housing Benefit—New Rules" have been printed.

Of these, 2 million copies were sent to a Post Office warehouse. Copies were distributed from there to all post offices, and have been on display in main post offices since Monday 13 June.

Each local social security office was sent 500 copies of RR4 in the first week of June. Stocks have also been sent to other DHSS offices such as regional offices, mobile publicity offices, staff training centres, and the transitional payments unit in Glasgow. Stocks can be reordered from a central depot.

A copy of RR4 has been sent to each of the 16,000 addresses on a voluntary sector mailing list. Three thousand copies were originally sent to the National Association of CAB for distribution to its branches. In addition, 20 copies were sent to each citizens advice bureau office from this Department on 20 June.

One thousand copies of RR4 were also sent to each local authority. By 29 June they had ordered over 800,000 further copies for local use.

It is not possible to estimate how many applicants will eventually return a form but 45,788 completed applications on RR4s have already been received by the Glasgow Unit.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Social Services if he will list the self-help groups for tranquilliser addiction which receive direct help from his Department and those which have applied for help and been refused, giving the reasons for the refusal.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 22 June 1988]: Under the central funding initiative, which was set up to pump-prime the development of drug misuse services, the following voluntary organisations, specifically for those dependent on tranquillisers, received or are receiving grants totalling £339,000:—

Tranx (Harrow)
Tranx Release (Northampton)
MIND (Copeland)(Tranquilliser Withdrawal Scheme)
North East Council on Addictions (Tranquilliser Advice and Support Project)

All the organisations specifically for those dependent on tranquillisers which applied have been given funding under this scheme.

Recently Tranx (UK) and the North-East Council on Addictions (NECA) applied for assistance under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968—a scheme designed primarily to contribute towards the central costs of national voluntary organisations. Since these applications for grants were essentially for local and service projects the Department decided that they did not meet the criteria of the scheme. However, both organisations are well supported by a wide variety of funders, including regional and district health authorities, local authorities, urban aid and charitable trusts, to the sum of approximately £82,000 for Tranx (UK) in 1988-89 and approximately £307,000 for NECA in 1987-88. This demonstrates the growing co-operation between the public and private sectors in the funding of voluntary organisations, a policy the Government have been promoting in this field by means of an additional £6 million a year direct to health authorities specifically to develop drug misuse services, including services for those dependent on tranquillisers.

Tameside and Glossop DHA

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the expenditure of Tameside and Glossop district health authority in each of the last 10 years in cash terms, adjusted for inflation and as a percentage of the regional total.

Mr. Newton: The information requested for the latest available 10-year period is shown in the table:

[1] Tameside area health authority (a single district area and broadly comparable) for the years before 1982-83.

Source:

Annual accounts submitted to the Department by the Tameside and Glossop health authority and other health authorities comprising the North Western region (Predecessor authorities for the years before 1982-83).

Notes to the table:

1. The figures for earlier years have been expressed at 1986-87 prices by the use of the gross domestic product deflator.
2. The figures for capital expenditure include sums in respect of district (formerly area) schemes recorded in the annual accounts of the North Western regional health authority. Revenue and capital expenditure incurred by the latter authority for the region as a whole is excluded.
3. Expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded; such expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committees (FPCs). However, prior to 1 April 1985 the Tameside and Glossop health authority, in common with many other district health authorities, had an associated FPC and the district and predecessor authority's expenditure figures for the financial years before 1985-86 include elements relating to FPC administration expenses which are not separately identifiable..

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for invalid care allowance are received annually; how many of these claims are successful; and what is the average length of time for processing such claims.

Mr. Scott: A total of 64,382 invalid care allowance claims were received in the 12 months up to 29 April 1988 and, of the claims decided in that period, some 62,649 were successful. The average time taken to decide claims is currently 20·3 weeks, but we are seeking to reduce this substantially.

Pensions

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of increasing the extra pension for the very old over 80 years from 25p a week at 80 years by an extra 10p per week for every year of age thereafter.

Mr. Scott: The estimated cost of increasing the age addition by 10p a week for each year of age above 80 years would be £45 million a year.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the estimated cost of increasing the extra pension for the very old over 80 years, from 25p a week to (a) 50p a week and (b) £1 per week.

Mr. Scott: The estimated cost of increasing the age addition to 50p a week is £25 million a year, and to £1 a week £75 million a year.

St. Peter's Hospital, Chertsey (Deaths)

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the deaths not due to natural causes that have occurred since 1 January 1980 at the Abraham Cowley trust in St. Peter's hospital, Chertsey; and what is the average level of such deaths for such units nationally.

Mrs. Currie: I understand from North West Surrey health authority that there have been seven deaths at the Abraham Cowley unit due to non-natural causes since 1980. Following the two most recent deaths the health authority has tightened up drug security procedures and is installing special hot water controls.

The national information requested is not available. The table shows the relationship between total deaths and deaths from non-natural causes in psychiatric hospitals in England and Wales from 1980 to 1985 which is the latest available information.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he will issue to local authorities on whether they are to disregard payments from the Independent Living Fund when assessing an individual's ability to pay for any services provided by them under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Mr. Scott: We are considering whether guidance needs to be issued to local authorities on the Independent Living Fund.

Disablement Benefit

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of applications and awards of disablement benefit for the four asbestos-related diseases for each of the last 10 years for each of the eight medical boarding centres pneumoconiosis medical panels.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. The tables show the number of disablement benefit claims for asbestos-related diseases referred to special medical boards and the number in which the diseases were diagnosed. Prescribed diseases D8 and D9 were not added to the schedule until 1 April 1985.

Service Personnel (Parents' Pension)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the maximum weekly amount payable as a parent's pension in respect of sons or daughters killed on active service in the armed forces; when it was last increased; and what plans he has for further increasing it.

Mr. Portillo: These pensions are means-tested and the normal maximum rates are £1 per week for one parent and £1·38 for two parents, though there is provision for these maxima to be increased to £1·38 for one parent and £2 for two. The pensions were introduced during the first world war and the rates have not been increased since 1948, when a comprehensive system of social security was established. There are no plans for further increases.

Medicinal Products

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what restrictions exist on the use of medicinal products containing hydroquinone; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what limitations exist on the manufacture and sale of medicinal products containing mercurial compounds; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether skin-lightening products containing mercurial compounds or hydroquinone for which claims are made by the manufacturers that they are efficacious for this purpose require a licence before they are sold in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: Products containing mercurial compounds or hydroquinone promoted for the purpose of skin-lightening are not regarded as medicinal products under the Medicines Act 1968. They are subject to the Cosmetic Products (Safety) Regulations 1984 (SI 1984/1260) as amended, which generally ban both ingredients from inclusion in cosmetics. However, hydroquinone is permitted, to a concentration of 2 per cent., in agents for localised skin-lightening and there are certain labelling requirements.

There are no specific restrictions on the use of medicinal products containing mercurial compounds or hydroquinone. However, as with all medicinal products, these are assessed individually by the licensing authority before a product licence is granted to ensure adequate standards of safety, quality and efficacy.

Benefits

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what period is laid down in his Department's guidelines for dealing with a claimant who has been suspended from income support pending investigations, and the claimant being told the result of investigations.

Mr. Portillo: Payment of income support may be suspended, wholly or in part, for a variety of reasons. A period of suspension will not normally exceed one calendar month, although it may be extended in individual cases if questions are unresolved.

Full guidance on the procedures relating to the suspension of income support is contained in part 1.11 of the income support manual, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what period is laid down in his Department's guidelines for dealing with a claimant who reports that a payment of income support is lost or stolen and the claimant being told the result of investigations;

(2) what period is laid down in his Department's guidelines for dealing with a claimant who reports that a payment of family credit is lost or stolen and the claimant being told the result of investigations;

(3) what period is laid down in his Department's guidelines for dealing with a claimant who reports that a payment of child benefit is lost or stolen and the claimant being told the result of investigations;

(4) what period is laid down in his Department's guidelines for dealing with a claimant who reports that a payment of invalidity benefit is lost or stolen and the claimant being told the result of investigations;

(5) what period is laid down in his Department's guidelines for dealing with a claimant who reports that a payment of attendance allowance is lost or stolen and the claimant being told the result of investigations.

Mr. Portillo: As I said in my reply to the hon. Member on 24 June 1988, at column 738, the administrative procedures followed when a claimant reports a loss of benefit vary not only according to the benefit concerned but also according to the method of payment and the circumstances of the loss. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind perhaps he would write to me about it.

Oral Tobacco Products

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what scientific or medical research has been done in the United Kingdom regarding the health implications of oral tobacco products.

Mrs. Currie: The usage of oral tobacco products has been so far at a very low level in the United Kingdom. It has not therefore been possible to carry out epidemiological research based in this country on the health implications of these products in the way that has been done in other countries with a much larger usage. Extensive research has been carried out in this country and elsewhere on nitrosamines and their carcinogenic activity. Compounds of this type are among those considered to be responsible for the carcinogenic action of oral tobacco.

Abortion (Carlisle)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on steps taken by the Registrar General to ensure that the birth and death of the Carlisle baby will be registered.

Mr. Newton: I am seeking further information from the Registrar General about the position, and will then write to the hon. Member.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he gives to health authorities on the employment of medical practitioners with pecuniary interests in particular private residential or nursing homes to treat residents or patients in those homes.

Mr. Newton: This is a matter for health authorities to determine locally in the light of individual circumstances. The General Medical Council issues guidance to practitioners in its book on professional conduct and discipline. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind he may like to consult the health authority concerned.

Consultants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether consultants holding part-time contracts with the National Health Service are allowed to include the time spent travelling between their National Health Service base and private practice as part of their working hours.

Mr. Newton: The arrangements for travelling time appear in the hospital medical and dental staff terms and conditions of service, which provide that time necessarily spent in travelling between home or private consulting room, whichever is the nearer, and the hospital served, subject to a maximum of half an hour each way, shall be taken into account as part of a part-time consultant's working hours.

Social Workers (Attacks)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take on the recommendations of the report on violence against social workers, "Safe and Secure in Surrey", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Newton: We cannot trace having received a copy of the report, but have requested one. We will then consider it.

Student Bursary

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce the level of the student bursary for those nursing students transferred to higher education through the implementation of Project 2000.

Mr. Newton: The Project 2000 proposals do not envisage the wholesale transfer of student nurses into higher education. We have, however, accepted that there should be closer links with higher education and some expansion in the degree opportunities for nurses. The level of bursaries for student nurses, including those in higher education, is under consideration. We will not be in a position to make final decisions on the level of non-means-tested bursaries until the statutory nursing bodies come forward with firm proposals on the precise pattern of nurse education.

Doctors (Computer Information System)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has any plans to introduce a national computer information system for general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Plans are well developed to introduce the family practitioner services data communications network which will allow general practitioners with computers to communicate initially with other general practitioners and other parts of the family practitioner services. Eventually the network will be linked to other parts of the Health Service.

DHSS Leaflets

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is (a) the longest time, and (b) the average time taken to respond to requests for leaflets from the Department of Health and Social Security leaflets centre, Government Buildings, Honey lane, Stanmore; and if supplies of all current leaflets are held in stock.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to my replies to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) on 21 June, at column 537, and the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 22 June, at column 582. Normally the average time is four weeks; currently most orders are taking 10 weeks to process.

Biochemists and Medical Physicists

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has for retaining and recruiting biochemists and medical physicists.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) on 27 June. Biochemists are part of the scientist staff group.

Treaty of Rome (Article 4)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to implement article 4 of the treaty of Rome.

Mrs. Currie: Article 4 of the treaty of Rome describes the legislative institutions of the European Community. It does not require implementation by the United Kingdom Government.

X-ray Equipment

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines exist for monitoring and maintaining X-ray equipment; and how his Department ensures that guidelines are being adhered to.

Mrs. Currie: Relevant guidance is given in various DHSS publications, of which the most noteworthy are:

Health Equipment Information No. 98 (1982—reissued 1984) on Management of Equipment.

STB6A/84/19 Maintenance of Radiological Equipment in NHS Establishments by Equipment Suppliers and other Commercial Agencies (1984).

Responsibility for proper management of X-ray and other equipment rests with regional and district health authorities. Professional staff from the Department's procurement directorate and medical division maintain regular liaison with appropriate senior professional staff in regional health authorities as a result of which informal guidance is given on specific maintenance issues from time to time. X-ray equipment requirements are constantly under review, for example, as shown by the initiative taken in 1987 to meet the special needs of the mammography screening programme.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the age of X-ray equipment currently being used by Calderdale health authority; and if he will give details of monitoring and maintenance programmes operating on X-ray equipment in Calderdale.

Mrs. Currie: Monitoring and maintenance of medical equipment in particular NHS locations, including X-ray equipment, is a matter for the local health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of Calderdale health authority for the information she is seeking.

Medical Research

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology, HL No. 54, about medical research.

Mrs. Currie: This report raises a number of important issues, particularly about the mechanisms required to enable the NHS to benefit most effectively from the contribution that medical research can make. We are carefully considering this and other issues and we will publish our response later in the year.

Spectacles

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the implications for the provision of spectacles by opticians in the United Kingdom of the finding by the European Court that the United Kingdom was in breach of its treaty obligations by holding that the provision of spectacles was a medical service.

Mr. Newton: The European Court ruled on 23 February 1988 that the United Kingdom was in breach of its obligations in exempting from VAT certain goods supplied with medical care. The Government have indicated that they will comply with the court's decision and have introduced the necessary amendment to the Finance Bill. The amendment if approved is expected to come into effect on 1 September 1988. We are considering the implications for the NHS voucher scheme for spectacles.

NHS Property (Disposal)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all National Health Service property disposed of since 1979 in the areas covered by the following health authorities: North West Thames Regional, South West Thames Regional, North East Thames Regional, South East Thames Regional, Basingstoke, Winchester, Portsmouth, Southampton, Isle of Wight, Milton Keynes, Aylesbury, Wycombe, East Berkshire, West Berkshire and Oxfordshire.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 16 June 1988]: I have placed in the Library a list giving the information up to 1986-87, the latest figures available, in respect of properties valued at over £50,000.

Körner System

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a list of data, collected under the Körner system, which he expects to be able to publish on a routine basis; and if he will publish a timetable for a release of this information.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 June 1988]: We are considering how information derived from Körner data can best be made available to assist hon. Members and others to assess developments in the overall pattern of activity, costs, manpower and waiting lists in the hospital and community health services. Meanwhile, we are making available Körner data corresponding as closely as possible to earlier series, in particular the hospital in-patient waiting list and NHS directly employed staff by main staff group. In addition, the statutory summarised accounts of health authorities, which are derived from Körner data, will continue to be published annually as a House of Commons paper.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information collected under the Körner system has been published during the current year; and in what form.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 June 1988]: National and regional information on elective admissions and patients waiting for the quarter ending 30 September 1987 was published in DHSS "Statistical Bulletin 2/6/88". Provisional tables for September 1987 of NHS directly employed staff by main staff group have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to ensure that the Körner system is applied to private hospitals and clinics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 June 1988]: Those recommendations made by Körner about the NHS use of private hospitals and clinics have been implemented. There are no plans to introduce into private hospitals and clinics the collection of the Körner minimum data sets which have been implemented in NHS hospitals.

Foetal Tissue (Transplants)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) of 7 June, Official Report, column 557, he will publish in the Official Report further details of the background of the individuals whom he has appointed to the committee of inquiry into the use of foetal tissue in transplants, indicating and summarising in each case the published work which was taken into account when assessing suitability for appointment;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) of 7 June, Official Report, column 557, which organisations or individuals were consulted by his Department about the selection of individuals for appointment to the committee of inquiry into the use of human foetal tissue in transplants.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The members of this committee were chosen because they have expertise relevant to the issues involved. They were not appointed to represent any particular organisaton or body of opinion. No consultations about membership were therefore necessary.

The committee's chairman, the Reverend Dr. John Polkinghorne FRS is Dean of Trinity Hall Cambridge and an Anglican clergyman. He was formerly Professor of Mathematical Physics at Cambridge university and has published in that field.

Sir Raymond Hoffenberg is president of the Royal College of Physicians and has written about endocrinology and metabolism in medicine and biochemistry.

Professor Ian Kennedy is Professor of Medical Law and Ethics at Kings college London. He has written about medical ethics.

Dr. Sally McIntyre is director of the Medical Research Council's medical sociology unit at Glasgow university and previously worked in that unit when it was in Aberdeen university. She has published on a range of sociological questions particularly maternity and reproductive services.

Income

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much average household income was in 1981, 1983 and 1985 before and after housing costs, as used in "Households Below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis."

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 June 1988]: As explained in the report of the technical review of the low-income statistics, and in the technical annex to the households below average income statistics, to enable meaningful comparisons, the actual cash incomes received by households are adjusted to reflect varying household size and composition and expressed in terms of individuals in households. National average income per individual, calculated after these adjustments, is shown in the table. The figures therefore do not reflect average cash income per household.

Average incomes of individuals in households 1981 to 1985
(adjusted for family size and composition)
Great Britain—current prices—weekly basis

	Before housing costs £	After housing costs £
1981	104·70	93·00
1983	119·20	104·20
1985	140·95	120·80

Notes to table:

1. Household income is defined after the payment of any income tax and national insurance and the receipt of any social security benefits. Individuals within households have been ranked according to their household incomes.

2. Further details on methods and assumptions, can be found in "Households Below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis, 1981-85", copies of which are in the Library.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, under the new social security arrangements, what help is available to those who are awarded attendance allowance but have to wait six months for it to be paid; and what help is available to those babies, under two years of age, who are eligible to be paid attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 22 June 1988]: People in this position can qualify for the new income-related benefits under the normal rules of entitlement. In addition to the age-related personal allowance for a single claimant or couple and for each child, premiums may be payable. It is possible for disabled adults to qualify for the disability premium on grounds other than the receipt of attendance allowance. There are also premiums for families with children and a further one for lone parents.

A social fund community care grant may be awarded to a disabled person receiving income support or to a family on income support which includes a disabled adult or child (details are contained in the social fund manual, a copy of which is in the Library).

The Independent Living Fund can provide help to people whom the trustees judge likely to be successful in their claim for attendance allowance, subject to the other eligibility criteria.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing for the Elderly

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he would be prepared in principle to relax the current restrictions on the use of capital receipts from the sale of council housing such that a greater proportion than the present 20 per cent. could be used in any one year, for additional specialised housing for the elderly.

Mr. Chope: Different prescribed proportions can be set for different classes of capital receipts, but the proportions cannot be varied by reference to the use proposed to be made of the receipts. All prescribed proportions are constantly kept under review, but any increase in them would reduce the level of capital allocations consistent with the level of local authority capital expenditure allowed for in public expenditure plans. It is for individual local authorities to decide what priority should be given within their overall capital programmes to the provision of specialised housing for the elderly.

Waste (Disposal)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of dumping 7·5 million tons of United States domestic waste on the banks of the River Mersey on his policy to clean up the Mersey river basin.

Mr. Moynihan: The waste disposal authority, Cheshire county council, which operates the disposal site in question is under a statutory duty to do so in a manner which prevents the pollution of water. An assessment of the impact of waste disposal operations on water resources would, for this proposal, be a matter for the North West water authority, which would advise the waste disposal authority accordingly.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of landfill sites in the United Kingdom which have been identified as requiring the retrofitting of additional gas controls; and, what would be the estimated cost of such procedures.

Mr. Moynihan: We are currently awaiting a report from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution following the survey it has conducted with waste disposal authorities.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made as to whether the proposed imports of American domestic wastes into the United Kingdom and their subsequent dumping in Cornwall and Warrington conform with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution's 11th report, "Managing Waste: The Duty of Care".

Mr. Moynihan: The Royal Commission noted that the advantages of using a more appropriate disposal facility than the one available locally can justify international trade in waste, but recommended that wastes that are hazardous should not be exported without the prior informed consent of the importing country. Proposals to import domestic waste from USA on the scale reported in the press are a new development which does cause concern, and we are considering the implications.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the reply of his Department to the letter dated 8 June from the chairman of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution to Lord Caithness regarding the import of wastes for dumping in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: I have arranged for copies of the correspondence to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the pressure on the availability of dumping capacity for United Kingdom waste arising consequent upon the large-scale import of United States domestic waste for landfill.

Mr. Moynihan: As far as I am aware, there have been no imports of domestic waste from USA. Proposals for imports on the scale reported in the press would affect the availability of landfill capacity for United Kingdom waste, and waste disposal authorities would need to consider such proposals in the light of their waste disposal plans.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to ensure that Power Water and Waste Ltd. does not dump toxic chemical waste from the United States of America at Arpley Meadows, Warrington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: It is for the waste disposal authority, Cheshire county council, to consider the proposals by Power, Water and Waste Ltd, in the light of its waste disposal plan and the conditions it has imposed on the operation of the Arpley Meadows site. The council has asked to meet me and I shall discuss the matter with councillors shortly.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to issue an order prohibiting Power Water and Waste Ltd. from dumping 7½ million tons of waste from the United States of America and at Arpley Meadows, Warrington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 9 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler), at column 655.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he proposes to take to prevent waste brokers and waste transfer stations obstructing the flow of information between waste producer, waste disposer and regulatory authority;

(2) what steps he proposes to take to overcome the problem identified by senior officials of the hazardous waste inspectorate at a press briefing at his Department on 22 June concerning the information regarding the chemical composition and volume of waste on many consignment notes pertaining to imported special waste being cursory and inadequate.

Mr. Moynihan: The Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations apply to an importer of waste in the same way as they apply to a producer of special waste in this country. They require that the producer notifies the waste disposal authority for the area where the waste is to be disposed of, of the intended movement of the waste from his premises at least three days before the movement takes place. The producer must give a description of the waste, its relevant chemical and biological components, its quantity, the size, type and number of containers and the process from which the waste originated. He must certify the accuracy of the information. Failure to comply with the regulations is an offence carrying maximum penalties of imprisonment and an unlimited fine.

Thus waste disposal authorities have the necessary powers to prevent obstruction of the flow of information about these wastes and it is for authorities to use them effectively.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions will be included in the regulations implementing the European Community's transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste directive to overcome the problem of waste disposal authorities at the port of entry of waste not being notified of the consignment of waste until after it has left for its United Kingdom destination.

Mr. Moynihan: The regulation to implement the Community directive will include a provision for the waste disposal authority at the port of entry to be notified of the consignment before it arrives at the port.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to prevent imported materials destined for the recovery industry ending up as waste which is disposed of in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: Imports of waste materials for recovery are subject to the same control and supervision by waste disposal authorities as any other waste.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he intends to take to remedy the situation identified in the conclusions of the third report of the hazardous waste inspectorate, page 83, paragraphs 5 and 6, regarding the lack of prenotification of imported non-special waste;

(2) what steps he proposes to take to resolve the problem experienced by waste disposal authorities in respect of the import of non-special waste for direct landfill as a result of the lack of prenotification.

Mr. Moynihan: Waste disposal authorities have powers under section 93 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 to obtain information reasonably considered necessary to assist them in the exercise of their statutory functions. The volume of imports of non-special wastes so far identified does not at present appear to be such as to call for further powers, but we shall continue to keep imports of wastes generally under review.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why only wastes with concentrations of the 27 proscribed chemicals listed as hazardous in the European Council's toxic and dangerous wastes directive at levels that would result in the waste being defined as special waste will be covered in United Kingdom regulations to implement the transfrontier shipment of hazardous wastes directive.

Mr. Moynihan: Substances covered by the directive on transfrontier shipment of hazardous wastes are defined by reference to the 27 substances in the toxic and dangerous waste directive. The latter, which is implemented in the United Kingdom by the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980, defines toxic and dangerous waste as any waste containing or contaminated by any of the 27 substances of such a nature, in such quantities or in such concentrations as to constitute a risk to health or the environment. It follows that implementation of the transfrontier shipment directive must be made by reference to the definition in the special waste regulations.

ESCATA

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a copy of East Sussex county council's report into the collapse of the consultancy and training agency ESCATA.

Mr. Chope: No.

Water Supply (Metering)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has conducted or commissioned any market research on the public opinion towards metering of the water supply; and if he will publish any responses.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has not carried out or commissioned any market research on public attitudes towards water metering, but it will monitor carefully the public reaction to the forthcoming programme of compulsory metering trials to be run in selected areas by the water industry over the next four years. The public's reaction to metering is one of the major issues the trials are intended to explore.

Pollution

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he accepts the recommendation of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution that, in principle, the costs of preventing pollution by wastes should fall on the waste producers.

Mr. Moynihan: Yes.

Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the Department of the Environment's pollution inspectorate on pollution issues, including methane gas.

Mr. Moynihan: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution is analysing the responses of the waste disposal and planning authorities to the letter sent to it last December about landfill gas. This work will provide the basis for any appropriate measures to deal with the problem.

Rating Reform

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the latest estimate cost for the tax collection in each local government area (a) by total amount and (b) as a proportion of current cost of domestic rates collection.

Mr. Howard: There are no estimates available for the cost of collecting the community charge by local government area. In its report, Price Waterhouse has estimated the cost of collecting the community charge (including national non-domestic rates) in 1990-91 to be between £379 million and £435 million compared to the £200 million it now costs to collect rates.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to require poll tax registration officers to seek dates of birth under the registration process.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 7 June to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel), at column 482.

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet come to a decision in relation to the joint representations he has received from the City of London, the London Boroughs Association and the Association of London Authorities about his proposal that domestic rates should be retained in some parts of inner London for four years after introduction of the community charge; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have considered those representations carefully, together with others from the individual boroughs concerned, the arguments which were put when this matter was considered in another place, and revised illustrative community charges for the affected boroughs which I published last week—Official Report, 23 June, columns 713-14.

In the light of all these considerations I have concluded that it would now be right to withdraw the proposals for residual rating, to move direct to the community charge and to abolish domestic rates everywhere in England with effect from 1 April 1990. The Government are, therefore, today tabling in another place amendments to the Local Government Finance Bill which will have this effect.

The Government's original concern was with protecting community charge payers in the high spending areas from excessively high community charges. The present position, that residual rates should apply to 10 authorities, is no longer justifiable on the evidence before me. I have therefore accepted the arguments which have been put to us that other powers within the Local Government Finance Bill are sufficient to achieve the objective of tolerable levels of community charge in those inner London boroughs. I have placed in the Library exemplifications of the community charges which take account of this charge. These exemplifications replace those I provided on 23 June to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), at columns 713-14.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made any estimates of the effect of the community charge on people under the age of 25 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 28 June 1988]: Many young adults under 25 currently make no direct contribution to the cost of local services despite the fact that they are consumers of those services and entitled to vote in local elections. We expect that the community charge will bring home to those people the cost of local services and improve local accountability. Those on low incomes will be eligible for rebates in their own right.

Council of Ministers

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council held on 28 June.

Mr. Moynihan: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting which resumed on 28 June.

I am pleased to report that in a brief discussion on large combustion plants, Denmark, France and Italy withdrew their reserves on the agreement in principle which was reached at the last Council of 16 June, and on which I reported in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley). In the light of a minor change to the text, Portugal also withdrew its reserve. The United Kingdom maintained a parliamentary scrutiny reserve on the directive.

After further lengthly discussion a political agreement was reached by qualified majority, and subject to a United Kingdom parliamentary scrutiny reserve, on the Commission's proposals for the second stage limit values for gaseous emissions from small cars.

I am pleased to say that Ministers also reached agreement on draft guidelines for a future Council directive to harmonise programmes for the reduction and eventual elimination of pollution caused by waste from the titanium dioxide industry.

Further consideration was given to a proposal for a Communitywide programme of projects demonstrating how actions taken in the environmental field might contribute to employment creation. The proposal is to be discussed again at the next Council.

The Council agreed a resolution on the protection of the North sea and other Community waters, put forward by the German delegation following the recent problems associated with algae growth in he Skagerrak and Kattegat.

A discussion on the dispatch of toxic waste to developing countries ended with a statement of presidency conclusions.

The Council also heard statements from Denmark and the Commission on proposals in the field of biotechnology and from the Commission on nuclear safety.

Local Authority Publicity

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue a code of recommended practice on local authority publicity under section 4 of the Local Government Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Following consultations with the local authority associations and other interested parties, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Scotland and for Wales have today laid before the House a draft code of recommended practice on local authority publicity. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House and in the Vote Office.

The draft code encourages good, effective publicity aimed at improved public awareness of a council's activities. It is essential that local authority decisions on publicity should be properly made and conform with clear principles of good practice. The draft code sets out these principles and reflects the conventions which should apply to all publicity paid for at public expense.

The draft code has to be approved by a resolution of each House of Parliament before it is issued. Once it is issued, local authorities will be required to have regard to the code in coming to any decision on publicity.

Cemeteries (City of Westminster)

Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from relatives of those interred in the three cemeteries sold by Westminster council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Nine letters from the Westminster Association of Relatives concerning the recent report of the council's internal inquiry into the sales: these call for a full public inquiry, for the Secretary of State to order an extraordinary audit of the council's accounts and for him to implement a compulsory purchase order for the cemeteries. It has been made clear on a number of occasions that the Secretary of State has no power to hold a statutory inquiry into the sale. There would be no purpose served by his requiring the Audit Commission to direct an extraordinary audit as this matter is already under investigation, in the way that Parliament intended, by the independent district auditor. Whether to use compulsory purchase powers is a matter for the council in the first instance. If this route is followed the Secretary of State's function is to consider whether or not to confirm any such order.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list all the national and international initiatives which Her Majesty's Government support in order to promote the protection of (a) rain forests, (b) the ozone layer and (c) the North sea;

(2) if he will list all the national and international initiatives for the protection of (a) the rain forests, (b) the ozone layer and (c) the North sea which Her Majesty's Government are funding, showing in each case the amount given;

(3) if he will list all the working groups, conferences and projects for the protection of (a) the rain forests, (b) the ozone layer and (c) the North sea in which Her Majesty's Government are or have been involved.

Mr. Moynihan: Her Majesty's Government have been active participants from the beginning in the tropical forest action plan and were instrumental in introducing conservation as an objective into the international tropical timber agreement. The United Kingdom is currently a member of the TFAP's technical assistance group and the Food and Agriculture Organisation's committee on forestry and committee on forestry development in the tropics. We play an active role in both the council and permanent committees of the International Tropical Timber Organisation and contribute annually to its administrative budget. The amount for 1988 was US$ 59·895.

Support is also given to the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora, which controls the import of those species of hardwood considered to be endangered. CITES is implemented throughout the European Community by EC regulations Nos. 3626/82 and 3418/83.

The Overseas Development Administration has provided technical assistance to several of the TFAP's sector review missions. The TFAP has not reached the stage of project implementation in most of the countries involved. However, projects being undertaken by the Overseas Development Administration include:

	£ million
Ghana: Forest inventory and management	4·80
Cameroon: Korup national park	0·44
Cameroon: Limbe botanic garden	0·75
Nigeria: Oban national park	0·07
Indonesia: Feasibility study for communications system for forest protection	0·14
Sierra Leone: Research into natural forest management	0·08
Brazil: Research into forest regeneration	0·04

At a national level the Overseas Administration provided £5,000 to support the recent Oxford forestry institute conference on the future of the tropical rain forest.

On the ozone layer, the United Kingdom was closely involved in the negotiation of the Vienna convention for the protection of the ozone layer, which it signed in 1985 and ratified in May 1987, and of the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer, of which the United Kingdom was an initial signatory in September 1987. The United Kingdom also played an active part in discussions of proposals to ratify and implement the protocol on which the EC Environment Council on 16 June reached a common position subject to parliamentary reserves on behalf of the United Kingdom and several other member states. The Council also agreed a political resolution emphasising the importance of voluntary action to reduce the use of chlorofluorocarbons and halons further. Officials of the Departments of Environment and Trade and Industry have regular meetings with British industry on implementation of the protocol, as elaborated in my answer of 8 March to the hon. Member, at column 119. Officials have participated in conferences organised by the refrigeration industry, which I addressed, and by the electronics industry. The United Kingdom participates in a United Nations environment programme working group on data harmonisation for the purposes of the protocol.

As regards research, I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 19 April, at column 426, to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 20 April, at columns 495 and 496, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) on 14 June, at column 138. The United Kingdom participates in meetings of UNEP's co-ordinating committee on the ozone layer and in other ad hoc scientific meetings. The Department's chief scientist is at present leading the United Kingdom delegation at the UNEP-WHO conference on the changing atmosphere in Toronto. The United Kingdom was involved in the experimental programme in Antarctica last year and will participate in a similar programme in the Arctic in January 1989. Following an initiative by the United Kingdom, progress has been made on European co-operation on stratospheric ozone research in EC and EFTA countries through meetings hosted by the United Kingdom.

With regard to the North sea, the United Kingdom is an active member of the Oslo and Paris commissions and its working groups. The commissions' members include all the North sea states, and agreements reached by members have contributed to a considerable reduction of pollution of the marine environment in general as well as focusing attention on the North sea. The United Kingdom is also an active participant in the work of the International Council for the Exploration of the Seas.

In November of last year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment chaired the second international conference on the protection of the North sea. It brought together all the North Sea states and the Commission of the European Communities. A ministerial declaration, to which the United Kingdom subscribed, set a programme for long-term protection of the North sea. Following the conference the United Kingdom hosted the inaugural meeting of the scientific task force, which is to be established through the Oslo and Paris commissions and ICES to co-ordinate work internationally to enhance scientific knowledge of the North sea. The United Kingdom is taking an active part in the preparations for the third North sea conference to be held in 1990.

Work on particular aspects of the marine environment affecting the North sea also involves a range of other international organisations including the International Maritime Organisation, the London dumping convention and the Commission of the European Communities.

Expenditure on the Paris and Oslo commissions in 1987-88 by the United Kingdom was £74,000. This includes the cost of ICES North sea environmental works. Contributions to the work of the task force will be met through future years' budgets of the Oslo and Paris commissions.

The United Kingdom is also active in sponsoring a substantial programme of research relevant to the North sea and in supporting a number of voluntary bodies, including the marine forum and the advisory committee on pollution of the sea.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to ensure that the hazardous waste section of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution is staffed at an adequate level in view of a comment of a senior officer of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution at a press briefing at his Department on 22 June, that present staffing levels are inadequate.

Mr. Moynihan: It has never been intended that Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution should attempt to inspect all licensed landfill sites. Its remit is to visit selected sites in order to discharge its functions of advising waste disposal authorities and promoting adequate and consistent standards and it undertakes this job effectively.

Direct Land Grants

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes any change in the criteria used for eligibility for derelict land grants to enable parish councils to be treated as public sector authority.

Mr. Trippier: I have no plans to make any such change.

Waste Tips (Explosions)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage infra-red aerial photography in areas in danger of leakage of methane gas from rubbish tips; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 29 June]: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution is currently investigating various techniques for monitoring the production and migration of methane gas at landfill sites.

The taking of aerial photographs, both colour and infra-red, can assist in detecting the changes in vegetation due to migrating gas over an area around a landfill site. Infra-red cameras can be used to measure heat emission from the ground surface. However, this type of survey has to be carried out at night to avoid interference from the sun. The hot spots detected can be physically marked on the site during the survey, which can then be monitored with instruments. This technique detects only excess heat, which could be due to causes other than gas emission.

Advice on this technique will be included in the waste management paper planned for publication later this year.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 1 July 1988

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Extradition

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General how many extradition warrants are currently in existence for persons wanted for questioning in the United Kingdom about Irish Republican Army terrorist offences.

The Attorney-General: Warrants are not sought in order to obtain the return of fugitives from the Republic of Ireland for questioning by the police. They are sought only where there is sufficient admissible evidence to found a prosecution. It would not be in the public interest to give any details as to the number of warrants in existence in relation to terrorist offences.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General, what steps are currently being taken to ensure that police officers from the United Kingdom are present in Irish courts to officially identify persons facing extradition proceedings to the United Kingdom.

The Attorney-General: The Irish authorities, who present applications to the Irish courts for the return of fugitives under the backing of warrants procedure, indicate to our authorities whether and, if so, what evidence will be needed from the United Kingdom as a matter of Irish law. The evidence as to identity which will be presented by the Irish state in any particular case will depend on the circumstances of that case, in the light of the view taken by the authorities in the Republic of the requirements of Irish law.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Scottish Universities

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what evaluation his Department has conducted of the effects of the deficits facing (a) Dundee, (b) Aberdeen, (c) St. Andrews, (d) Strathclyde, (e) Stirling, (f) Heriot Watt, (g) Glasgow and (h) Edinburgh universities;

(2) what extra allowance is under consideration for (a) Dundee, (b) Aberdeen, (c) St. Andrews, (d) Strathclyde, (e) Stirling, (f) Heriot Watt, (g) Glasgow and (h) Edinburgh universities to ensure that no courses or subjects are lost as a result of their cash shortfalls;

(3) whether he will establish a committee to examine the ability of Scottish universities to maintain their position as centres of academic excellence within present funding levels; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what evaluation his Department has conducted on the effects of the £5·6 million deficits which face the eight Scottish universities.

Mr. Jackson: Some Scottish and other universities are facing particularly difficult decisions on how best to plan an appropriate range and quality of provision with the resources at their disposal. The University Grants Committee monitors all institutions' planning and offers financial support from the restructuring programme for which £250 million has been set aside over three years.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions his Department has had with representatives of (a) Dundee, (b) Aberdeen, (c) St. Andrews, (d) Strathclyde, (e) Stirling, (f) Heriot Watt, (g) Glasgow and (h) Edinburgh universities about the effects of their cash shortfalls and the possible loss of staff.

Mr. Jackson: In my year as Parliamentary Under-Secretary, I have visited six of the eight Scottish universities and discussed a wide range of higher education matters with staff and students. In addition, I receive many representations about their funding position.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what allowance has been made for the reduction in investment income which (a) Dundee, (b) Aberdeen, (c) St. Andrews, (d) Strathclyde, (e) Stirling, (f) Heriot Watt, (g) Glasgow and (h) Edinburgh universities have suffered as a result of the stock market crisis of October 1987 and of changes in interest rates.

Mr. Jackson: As autonomous institutions universities are responsible for the management of their own financial affairs.

Academic Pay

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that the Universities Grants Committee is able to meet the costs of academic pay rises in full.

Mr. Jackson: It is for the universities to reach pay settlements with their staff which they can finance from within their income, from the Government and other sources.

EMPLOYMENT

Dangerous Workplaces

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the United Kingdom's 1,500 most potentially dangerous workplaces the technology division of the Health and Safety Executive has inspected and certified for fire precautions since 1976.

Mr. Nicholls: Of the approximately 1,300 premises which are subject to the Fire Certification (Special Premises) Regulations 1976, the HSE has issued approximately 600 fire certificates and surveyed a further 35. This is part of a continuing programme.

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the United Kingdom's 1,500 most potentially dangerous workplaces the technology division of the Health and Safety Executive plans to inspect in the next 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls: Of the approximately 1,300 premises which are subject to the Fire Certification (Special Premises) Regulations 1976, HSE inspectors from the technology division expect to visit 215 in 1988-89. Some 600 certificates have already been issued, a further 35 premises have been surveyed and listed major hazard sites are also subject to other visits by HSE inspectors.

Overseas Labour Scheme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what are the current numbers of applications for employment in Britain under the overseas labour scheme; and what were the figures for the years 1982 to 1987;

(2) what are the current numbers of staff employed in the overseas labour section of the Department of Employment in the current year and each year from 1982 to 1987;

(3) what is the average length of time it takes to deal with an application under the overseas labour scheme;

(4) how many specialist (a) Gujarati, (b) Punjabi and (c) Bangladeshi cooks have been given visas to work in Britain's overseas labour scheme;

(5) what are the total numbers of cases dealt with by the overseas labour section of his Department for (a) the current year and (b) 1981-82 and (c) the years 1982 to 1987 inclusive.

Mr. Lee: There are currently 4,320 work permit applications under consideration by the overseas labour section. Equivalent figures for earlier years are not available. At present the overseas labour section is taking 8-12 weeks on average to process applications.

The information relating to specialist Gujarati, Punjabi and Bangladeshi cooks is not collated centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The current number of staff in post in the overseas labour section is 63. The total number of decisions made on aplications and the number of staff employed for each year from 1981-82 to 1987-88, are given in the table.

Financial year	Decisions on applications received	Average staff in post
1981-82	16,466	56
1982-83	17,090	57
1983-84	18,662	59
1984-85	19,574	56
1985-86	20,356	55
1986-87	23,762	55
1987-88	25,851	62

Employment Training Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer of Tuesday 28 June, Official Report, what is his estimate of the net cost in a full year of the employment training scheme taking into account the cost of benefits which would otherwise have to be paid.

Mr. Nicholls: The best estimate at present of expenditure on employment training in a full year is about £1.5 billion. Of this, the estimated cost of training allowances, including premiums over and above benefit levels, is £770 million.

Rating Reform

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all publications, and their date of publication, initiated by his Department in connection with the community charge, together with the cost of each and public funds; and if he will give the cost of newspaper and television advertising to date in connection with the communiity charge.

Mr. Lang: Two publications have been produced as part of the public infomation campaign of the community charge in Scotland. The leaflet "The New Community Charge" was published on 24 November 1987 at a total cost of about £17,000. The booklet "You and the Community Charge—A Step by Step Guide" was published on 3 March this year at a cost of about £246,000. Both these figures include distribution costs. The total cost of newspaper advertisiong so far is about £218,000. There has been no television advertising.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further proposals he has for advertising in connection with the introduction of the poll tax in Scotland; and what will be the estimated costs.

Mr. Lang: The public information campaign on the community charge in Scotland will include further press adverisements at appropriate points in the run-up period to introduction on 1 April 1989. No estimates of cost are available at this stage.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Michael Ryan

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry of 16 June, Official Report, column 194, if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to how many (a) persons who made written statements to police officers, and (b) solicitors representing persons who made written statements to police officers, concerning matters leading up to the shootings by the late Michael Ryan in Hungerford, have requested copies of these written statements from any police officer or civilian; what were the dates of such requests; whether copies have been given or sent to those persons or their solicitors; and when the chief constable or other police officers or civilians intend to deal with those requests to which they have not as yet given an answer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since I answered the hon. Member's question on 16 June I have been informed by the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that his force has traced one such request, which was made by a firm of solicitors in early May. That request was for a copy of a statement taken by the Wiltshire police and the solicitors were therefore advised to contact the chief constable of Wiltshire. I have been further informed that two complaints were made against the Thames Valley police in the aftermath of the Hungerford shootings and that it is possible that some requests have been made and met for copies of statements taken in connection with the investigation of these complaints. But no central record has been kept of any such requests and detailed checking would therefore be necessary in order to establish if any were made and if so what happened to them. This could only be done at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the extent to which financial inducements are being offered by people abroad in return for engagements or marriage with a United Kingdom resident for the purposes of assisting immigration into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: No such information is now available, nor is it likely to become available. The discouragements to such practices already in the immigration rules will be reinforced by the recent repeal of section 1(5) of the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of stages in immigration appeal systems in all Council of Europe member states, including the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: In the United Kingdom the appeals system consist of two tiers. Appeals are normally heard by an adjudicator sitting along in the first instance but there is an avenue of appeal, usually with leave, to the tribunal if either party is dissatisfied with the adjudicator's decision. Information on immigration appeals systems which operate in other Council of Europe countries is not readily available.

Community Radio Stations

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that no one who has been associated with illegal radio broadcasting stations will be considered for any licence to run an approved community radio station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Edgbaston (Dame Knight) on 21 June, at column 485.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to announce further details regarding the legislative implementation of his Department's policy on community radio stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his earlier question on 25 May, at column 172.

Lunar House

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many unopened items of mail there are at Lunar House, Croydon, as at 28 June.

Mr. Renton: On 28 June there were 870 items unopened mail in the immigration and nationality department. All these were applications for citizenship received since 10 June.

DNA Tests

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish his views on the DNA tests pioneered by Dr. Jefferies of Leicester university.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the Hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on Thursday 16 June, at columns 200-1.

WALES

Museums

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the total grants to the National museum of Wales for every year since 1978-79 up to and including that planned for 1988-89; and if he will break the figures down for (a) current expenditure, (b) capital expenditure and (c) purchase grants.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is shown in the following table:

The total grant-in-aid to the National museum of Wales was:

Year	Net current £ cash	Purchases £ cash	Capital £ cash	Total £ cash
1978-79	2,549,000	376,000	1,050,000	3,975,000
1979-80	3,110,000	598,000	403,000	4,111,000
1980-81	3,844,000	768,000	367,000	4,979,000
1981-82	4,333,000	877,000	575,000	5,785,000
1982-83	4,565,000	955,000	633,000	6,153,000
1983-84	4,906,000	810,000	636,000	6,352,000
1984-85	5,443,000	562,000	684,000	6,689,000
1985-86	5,378,000	1,108,000	1,132,000	7,618,000
1986-87	5,841,000	741,000	1,009,000	7,591,000
1987-88	5,712,000	1,170,000	2,200,000	9,082,000
1988-89	6,158,000	1,199,000	3,997,000	11,354,000

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what Welsh local authorities spent on (a) the arts, (b) museums and (c) libraries in every year since 1978-79; and if he will estimate their expenditure on each in 1988-89.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Details of expenditure on (a) museums and art galleries and (b) libraries are given in the following table. They illustrate the increases that have taken place every year since 1978-79. No information is held centrally on expenditure on the arts although such information is published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in "Leisure and Recreation Statistics".

Net[1] expenditure (£000)

	Museums	Libararies
1978-79	974	9,693
1979-80	1,138	11,009
1980-81	1,231	12,915
1981-82	1,491	14,120
1982-83	1,574	15,337
1983-84	1,713	16,233
1984-85	1,858	16,824
1985-86	2,238	17,327
[2]1986-87	2,444	19,051
[3]1987-88	3,246	20,362
[4]1988-89	3,800	22,100

[1] Net expenditure to be financed from general grants, rates and balances.

[2] Provisional outturn.

[3] Revised estimates.

[4] Estimate, based on budgets at outturn prices.

Sport and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement, following the recent consultation exercise, on the proposals to bring competition to the management of local authority sport and leisure facilities.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Wales and for Scotland have considered very carefully the wide-ranging responses to consultation. They have decided that the competitive tendering regime provided for in part I of the Local Government Act 1988 should be applied to the management of sport and leisure facilities. We will therefore lay an order under section 2(3) of the Act to make the management of sport and leisure facilities a defined activity for the purpose of the Act. Before laying the order we shall undertake the consultation as provided for by section 2(4) of the Act.

My hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport has provided a very detailed explanation of the proposals for implementation in his statement earlier today. In Wales, competition will be implemented in five stages over a two-year period beginning 1 February 1992. the two-year period acknowledges the low threshold of private sector capacity in this field in Wales at present. The local authority groupings used in the main implementation programme for services defined by the Act will also apply to sport and leisure facilities.

I have arranged for copies of a schedule giving full details of implementation by date and local authority grouping to be placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Balance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the trade difference with other European Economic Community countries in manufacturing goods, excluding precious stones, for the first five months of the year, at an annualised rate.

Mr. Alan Clark: There was a crude deficit of £5·8 billion in the first five months of the year, on a non-seasonally adjusted basis. Annualised figures can be an unreliable guide to the outturn for the year.

Waste Exports

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if Hubday Ltd. of the Isle of Man has applied to his Department for permission to export toxic wastes to Guinea-Bissau;

(2) if Bis Import-Export Ltd. of London has applied to his Department for export licences to ship (a) toxic and (b) radioactive wastes from the United Kingdom to Guinea-Bissau.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 28 June 1988]: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on individual licensing matters. Export licences would be required for the export of any toxic or radioactive wastes containing chemicals or materials specified in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Union Flag

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements were made to fly the Union flag on the Department of Agriculture (Northern Ireland) buildings at the Mall, Armagh, on the date of Her Majesty's official birthday; whether the Union flag was flown on that day; whether the person responsible for flying the Union flag at these premises had been advised of the appropriate dates to fly the Union flag; and what further arrangements are being made to ensure that advice as to the matter is being implemented.

Mr. Viggers: I regret that the Union flag was not flown on the Department of Agriculture drainage office in the Mall, West, Armagh, on the occasion of Her Majesty's official birthday on 11 June 1988. The Department of Agriculture advises staff in writing each year of all days which the Union flag is to be flown. The date appointed for the official celebration of Her Majesty's birthday, which is variable, is subsequently confirmed by telephone. It appears that this latter advice was not received in the Armagh office in respect of Her Majesty's official birthday. Arrangements have now been made for the date to be confirmed in writing each year.

Civil Servants (Secondment)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Northern Ireland civil servants are on secondment to various Departments in the Home Civil Service.

Mr. Stanley: There are 1,244 complemented posts in the Northern Ireland Office allocated to civil servants who are seconded from the Northern Ireland Civil Service. Three of these are serving in the Northern Ireland Office (London); the remainder serve in Northern Ireland. A further three Northern Ireland civil servants are on secondment to the Overseas Development Agency.

Housing Transfers

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average time taken to satisfy a housing transfer request in East Antrim.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chief executive that the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Educational Testing

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many representations have been received in opposition to educational attainment testing at seven years for primary school children.

Dr. Mawhinney: Approximately 5,500 responses to the consultative document have been received, but not all of these have been analysed at this stage. However, many of the submissions contain detailed and constructive comments upon particular aspects including testing at age seven and these simply could not be summarised in general categories such as "for" and "against".

Sewage Disposal

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to ensure that sewage treatment facilities will be provided for the treatment of sewage at Ashvale park, Islandmagee, where untreated sewage is currently being discharged into the sea.

Mr. Needham: There are no plans at present to alter the arrangements for disposing of sewage from the Ashvale park area of Islandmagee.

Primary and Secondary Schools (Links)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to provide closer links between primary and secondary schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Education will continue to encourage the establishment of links between primary and secondary schools, particularly where they are to the benefit of the pupils in their educational and social development.

School Building

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the extensions and modernisations carried out in 1986, 1987, and 1988 in maintained schools in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The following extensions and modernisations have been approved to begin construction at maintained schools in Northern Ireland in the financial years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Board Area	School	Scheme
Financial Year 1986-87	None
Financial Year 1987-88
North eastern	St. Joseph's primary school, Garvagh	Extension
South-eastern	St. Colman's high school, Ballynahinch	Extension
Southern	St. Catherine's college, Armagh	Alterations and extension
Southern	St. Brigid's primary school, Glassdrummond, Newry	Extension
Financial Year 1988-89
Southern	Drumcree high school, Portadown	Extension
Southern	St. Mark's high school, Warrenpoint	Extension
Southern	Grange primary school, Kilkeel	Alterations/ conversions

Education Authority

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to seek to create a single elected education authority for Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the strength of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve for each year from 1980.

Mr. Stanley: The information is as follows:

	Royal Ulster Constabulary	Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve (Full-time)	Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve (Part-time)
31 December 1980	6,935	1,685	3,067
31 December 1981	7,334	2,060	2,810
31 December 1982	7,718	2,173	2,666
31 December 1983	8,003	2,294	2,198
31 December 1984	8,127	2,533	1,907
31 December 1985	8,259	2,755	1,753
31 December 1986	8,234	2,753	1,659
31 December 1987	8,236	2,987	1,657
30 April 1988	8,247	3,016	1,652

Single Payments

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the processing of single payment claims, indicating the month in which the non-urgent claims now being processed in each social security office were made.

Mr. Needham: At 11 April 1988 there were approximately 80,000 single payment claims to be processed. This number had reduced to 18,446 by 24 June 1988, the latest date for which figures are available. Information is not collected on the urgency or otherwise of claims and information on the various dates of the claims now being processed could only be obtained at disproportionate cost and with consequent delays to their clearance.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland wht consideration has been or is being given to making special staffing arrangements to have the outstanding single payment claims processed as soon as possible.

Mr. Needham: Extra staffing resources, including overtime and detached duty staff, have been allocated to social security offices as necessary to ensure that the outstanding single payment claims are processed as quickly as possible.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Department of Health and Social Services estimate that each social security office will have completed their processing of single payment claims.

Mr. Needham: It is estimated that all single payment claims will have been cleared in 26 offices by 30 June 1988, in a further six offices by the end of July and in the remaining two (Londonderry and Strabane) by the end of August.

Artificial Insemination

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether AI Services (NI) Society Ltd. will be required to provide its service to persons who are not members of the society.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 24 June 1988]: No.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has agreed to AI Services (NI) Society Ltd. charging clients any fee in addition to the normal charge for the artificial insemination service which it is to provide; whether it will be free to charge such additional fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 24 June 1988]: In making its application for the licence, AI Services (Northern Ireland) Society Ltd. indicated that each user of the service would be required to purchase a share in the society. The level fee is a matter for the society.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to how many shareholders there were in AI Services (Northern Ireland) Society Ltd. when he decided to give it the licence to provide an artificial insemination service for cattle producers.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 24 June 1988]: In submitting their application for the licence, A1 Services (Northern Ireland) Society Ltd., a proposed new industrial and provident society or co-operative limited company, indicated support from 11 founder society members with some 16,700 individual members.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Southern Africa

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Slough of 7 June, Official Report, column 465, on maintaining contacts with a wide range of political opinion in southern Africa, he will list those political leaders in Bophuthatswana with whom his officials have had contact in the last 12 months.

Mrs. Chalker: Within the limitations of our policy of non-recognition, our embassy in South Africa maintains contact with a range of political and community leaders in Bophuthatswana.

Independent Businesses

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to which Comecon countries permit small independent businesses to exist and own business assets.

Mr. Mellor: The position varies considerably among the 10 CMEA member countries. Small independent businesses are most developed in Poland and Hungary, and least in Romania, where they are not permitted. They operate chiefly in the services sector. I am writing to my hon. Friend about the detailed position in each country.

European Parliament

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last visited the European Parliament plenary session in Strasbourg.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last visited the European Parliament on 10 December 1986 to report on the United Kingdom's Presidency of the Council. I regularly visit the European Parliament during its plenary sessions.

Falkland Islands (Broadcasting)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the head of British interests in Argentina will meet the chief executive of the Argentine Broadcasting Authority to discuss English language transmissions to the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: No such meeting has been requested and we have no plans at present to arrange one.

Immigration Appeals System

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the cost to his Department of the immigration appeals system for the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: It is not possible to isolate or apportion the cost of the immigration appeals system within the overall cost of the entry clearance operation overseas since the staff concerned spend varying amounts of their time on appeal-related work.

However, the appeals system has significant manpower implications. A recent exercise undertaken in respect of visit appeals only showed that, in the Diplomatic Service, an estimated 53·5 United Kingdom based man-years are taken up by the preparation of explanatory statements plus the need for more in-depth interviews and note-taking at a conservative estimated cost of around £5 million.

Children's Rights

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statment on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the draft United Nations convention on the rights of the child indicating any articles to which Her Majesty's Government object or seek to amend.

Mr. Eggar: We support the draft United Nations convention on the rights of the child and have played a leading role in its drafting. There are no articles to which we object but they are seeking amendments to clarify or modify the text of the following articles to ensure that they are consistent with United Kingdom legal and administrative provisions: articles 2, 3(3), 4(1), 4(2), 5(bis), 6(1), 6(2), 6(bis), 7, 7(bis), 8, 10, 11(1), 11(2), 15(3), 18(2), 18(ter), 18(quinto), 18(sixt), 19, 20.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Diet

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that a healthy diet is available to all; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have acted to ensure that there is a plentiful supply of wholesome and varied food, at competitive prices, which is compositionally and hygienically safe and that there is adequate information available so that all consumers can make informed choices and obtain a balanced diet which is best suited to their individual health and lifestyle requirements.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department has spent on investigating the disease bovine spongiform encephalopathy for each year since 1980.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy was first identified in December 1986. The cost of investigatory and research work from then until 31 March this year has been about £420,000.

Quarantine and Rabies Rules

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the arrangements with the European Economic Community for 1992 will involve any relaxation of United Kingdom quarantine and rabies rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government have no plans to relax the rabies controls, including the quarantine requirements.

Sheep

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the mark and release scheme in preventing radioactive sheep from entering the food chain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The mark and release scheme permits sheep that have been live-monitored to leave the restricted areas. Those above 1,000 Bq/kg are marked with a distinctive paint mark to ensure that they are not slaughtered until restrictions on them are lifted. Sheep were marked blue between 28 September 1987 and 10 January 1988. Restrictions on blue-marked sheep were lifted on 1 June 1988.

Radioactivity levels in sheep fall at a rapid and steady rate once they have left the restricted area. The biological half life of the caesium in sheep grazing clean pasture is 10 days. Farmers outside the restricted area were therefore able to have blue-marked sheep remonitored and if they were no longer above the action level they were released from restriction by attaching a distinctive ear tag. It was not necessary to await a change of colour for such remonitoring to take place. 5,500 blue-marked sheep were remonitored; 33 were found to be above the action level in late 1987. These were subsequently remonitored and levels had fallen as expected. No blue-marked sheep have been found above the action level since January and the Ministry is entirely satisfied that no blue-marked sheep above the action level entered the food chain.

Cereals

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what green pound changes were recommended for each country of the EEC in the proposals agreed by 11 member states at the recent Council meeting; and what effect these will have on the penalties for the overproduction of cereals agreed by Heads of Government at the meeting of the European Council in February.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 27 June 1988]: The answers to my hon. Friend's question are given in the following table, the final column of which shows the effect that the proposed green rate changes, agreed by eleven member states at the end of the recent Agriculture meeting in Luxembourg on 17 June, would have on cereal support prices in national currencies. The decisions reached by the European Council in February 1988 on cereals stabilisers are not affected. The maximum impact on effective cereals support, if the stabiliser mechanisms are fully triggered by this year's harvest, would be a 3 per cent reduction in all member states in the 1989-90 marketing year, plus an increase in the co-responsibility level from 3 per cent. to 6 per cent. from 1 July this year.

Country	Commodity sector	Proposed reduction in monetary gaps between green and market rates (per cent. points)	Change in cereals prices (per cent.)
Belgium	Sheep	2·0	—
Luxembourg	Others	0·5	+0·5
Denmark	Pigmeat	0·5	—
	Others	1·0	+1·0
Germany	All	0	0
Greece	Beef	10·0	—
	Others	14·5	+11·6
Spain	Sheep	1·0	0
	Others	0	—
France	All	1·5	+1·4
Ireland	All	1·55	+1·5
Italy	Sheep	6·6	—
	Others	2·5	+2·4
Netherlands	Milk	0·5	—
	Others	0	0
Portugal	Sheep	4·8	—
United Kingdom	All	3·2	+2·9

1. All the green rate changes would apply (except in Greece and Portugal) from 1 January 1989, and would apply in all sectors except beef, where a decision would be taken in the light of the forthcoming review of the arrangements to apply in this sector after 31 December 1988.

2. In Greece, the monetary gap would be reduced by 10 percentage points in all sectors from the start of the 1988-89 marketing years. A further 4·5 percentage points would apply in all sectors except beef (to which the arrangements mentioned in (1) above would apply) from 1 January 1989.

3. Under transitional arrangements, the common cereals regime is not yet applicable in Portugal.

TRANSPORT

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Burnley given on 21 June, if he will now make it his policy to keep statistics on the movement of nuclear waste within United Kingdom airspace.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Safety is ensured by prescribing design standards for the containers.

National Bus Company

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to report to the House the full details of the disposal by National Bus Company of its assets with the names of the companies concerned and the details of the transactions.

Mr. David Mitchell: I hope to make a statement on the aggregate proceeds of the disposal programme shortly. Details of individual transactions will not be disclosed for commercial reasons.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Refusals

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against planning refusals in the county of Cambridgeshire he has received in each of the last 10 years; how many he approved or rejected in each of the years; and if he will give the same figures for East Anglia as a whole and for England and Wales over the same period.

Mr. Waldegrave: The comparative figures requested are readily available only for the period since 1 January 1984. These are given in the table. Decisions issued in a particular year do not necessarily relate to the appeals received in that year; and some of the appeals received were withdrawn before being determined.

Council Tenants (Rent Arrears)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for the number of council tenants who were in arrears for their rent payments.

Mrs. Roe: Latest estimates of the number of local authority tenants in arrears with their rent and rates are published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in "Housing Rent Statistics at April 1987", which is in the Library.

Building Societies (Repossessions)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the latest figures available to him on the number of mortgage repossessions by building societies.

Mrs. Roe: For the latest available figures, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 27 June.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 23 June, giving illustrative community charge figures, he will deposit in the Library a table showing all the variables needed to calculate the figures, including data for each local authority, class of local authority and England as a whole.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed in the Library a note setting out the data sources and calculations used to produce the figures given in my reply of 23 June together with a table showing the relevant data for each local authority.

Sports Council

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the membership of the Sports Council.

Mr. Moynihan: In recent years, the Sports Council has played an important role in encouraging the extensive increase in opportunities for people to participate in sport. In Great Britain, overall levels of participation have risen from 17 million in 1977 to 23 million in 1986 and are continuing to rise. A wider variety of sports are being played, and in some areas we have seen higher levels of performance and achievement. Sports men and women have ever rising expectations of the facilities they need, as well as more exacting requirements for specialist support at the highest levels of achievement.

These trends suggest that, in common with the roles of the governing bodies, the role of the Sports Council is vital to the future of sports at all levels. To fulfil that role, the Sports Council needs to be able to respond quickly and flexibly to changing demands and expectations.

In my open letter of 19 November to the Chairman of the Sports Council, I asked whether there is a case for a smaller membership of the council. I have now considered the responses to that question and the further comments which I have received from the Central Council of Physical Recreation. Many respondents took the view that the Sports Council in its present form is too large and unwieldy. I share that view and intend, therefore, to reduce the membership of the Sports Council to less than half its present size. This will bring the size of the Council into line with that of the other non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department.

To bring about this change, I have today written to those members of the council whose appointments expire today to tell them that they are not to be reappointed. I have also written to a number of others, inviting them to resign with effect from 31 July. I have it in mind to make a number of new appointments on that date.

In the course of my review of sports policies, I will be considering a number of issues during the rest of this year. In particular, I want to examine how we might place greater emphasis on the work of the regional councils for sport and recreation in the context of developing the role of the new Sports Council.

I am certain that the Sports Council will wish to develop new consultative arrangements, involving the chairman of the regional councils for sport, the governing bodies of sport, local authorities, sportsmen and women, and others. The form of that consultation will be a matter for the new council to consider.

This is the first in a series of important initiatives setting the scene for the structure and direction of sports policy for the 1990s.

Sport and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the Government's decisions, following the recent consultation exercise, on the proposals to bring competition to the management of local authority sport and leisure facilities.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that I made earlier today.

CIVIL SERVICE

Ministers' Private Offices

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service which private office telephone numbers have changed since the February edition of the Cabinet Office publication "List of Ministerial Responsibilities"; which have numbers yet to be changed on present plans; when those changes will be complete; and when this document will be available reprinted to include these changes.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 June 1988]: I am sending details of changes in private office telephone numbers since February to my hon. Friend and will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House. No further changes are anticipated until March 1989. In accordance with normal practice, I expect the next edition of the list of ministerial responsibilities to be published during the summer recess.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amounts of income tax were or are payable by a single person with the following gross earnings in each of the specified years: (a) £4,000 in 1985-86, (b) £4,210 in 1986-87, (c) £4,440 in 1987-88 and (d) £4,680 in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is in the table. It is assumed that no allowances or reliefs other than the single personal allowance are claimed.

Income tax liability of a single person

Financial year	Income £ per year	Income tax liability £
1985-86	4,000	538·50
1986-87	4,210	543·75
1987-88	4,440	544·05
1988-89	4,680	518·75

Income Tax (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the hon. Member for Taunton can expect to receive a reply to his question tabled for answer on 17 June relating to income tax payable at certain levels of income.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 30 June 1988]: Today.

THE ARTS

Arts (Wales)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts what were the total grants made under the business sponsorship incentive scheme to arts organisations in Wales for each year since its inception; and what was the total related sponsorship for the same years.

Mr. Luce: Awards paid and related sponsorship in each financial year amounted to:

	Number of awards	BSIS £	Related sponsorship £
1984-85	3	32,500	112,500
1985-86	8	54,335	122,500
1986-87	12	81,917	155,417
1987-88	14	82,334	142,700
1988-89 (to date)	13	54,451	71,450

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of total central Government spending on Wales was represented by central Government expenditure on arts, museums and libraries in Wales in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: In Wales, central Government spending on arts, museums and libraries in 1987-88 and 1988-89 from my programme and that of the Secretary of State for Wales represents approximately 1·5 per cent. of total central Government spending there.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many clients of the Arts Council have equal opportunities policies.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council expects all its clients to have equal opportunities policies, and monitoring of these policies forms part of the Arts Council's regular evaluation of its clients.

Libraries

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what has been the level of expenditure per capita on libraries in each of the past 10 years;

(2) what has been the level of expenditure, per capita, on libraries in (a) Great Britain and (b) England in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Luce: Expenditure per capita over the last 10 years in respect of the British Library, which is the only library expenditure borne on the Vote of my Department was:

1978-79	0·44
1979-80	0·57
1980-81	0·63
1981-82	0·68
1982-83	0·76
1983-84	0·79
1984-85	0·83
1985-86	0·85
1986-87	0·88
1987-88	0·89

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish a table showing (a) the total budget, (b) earned income and (c) income from sponsorship and expressing both (b) and (c) as a percentage of (a) (i) the Tate gallery, (ii) the National gallery, (iii) the British museum, (iv) the Victoria and Albert museum, (v) the National portrait gallery, (vi) the Science museum, (vii) the National maritime museum, (viii) the National museum of photography, television and film, (ix) the Natural history museum, (x) the Imperial war museum and (xi) the Yorkshire sculpture park in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce: The information that the hon. Member has requested is not held centrally and cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost. Levels of grant-in-aid and non-grant income for the national museums and galleries that I sponsor are published annually in the Supply Estimates.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what information he has as to what has been the education budget of (a) the Tate gallery, (b) the National gallery, (c) the British museum, (d) the Victoria and Albert museum, (e) the National portrait gallery, (f) the Science museum, (g) the National maritime museum, (h) the Natural history museum, (i) the Imperial war museum, (j) the National museum of photography, television and film and (k) the Yorkshire sculpture park in each of the last five years;

(2) what information he has as to what has been the advertising and marketing budget for (a) the Tate gallery, (b) the National gallery, (c) the National portrait gallery, (d) the British museum, (e) the Victoria and Albert museum, (f) the National maritime museum, (g) the Imperial war museum, (h) the Science museum, (i) the Natural history museum, (j) the National museum of photography, television and film and (k) the Yorkshire sculpture park in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce: The budgets of individual institutions cannot be broken down to give the detail the hon. Member has requested without disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SERVICES

War Widows

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will undertake an investigation into the effects of his recent social security changes on war widows.

Mr. Portillo: War widows' pensions were not affected by the recent changes: they were uprated in line with the retail prices index on 11 April in the normal way. In general, war widows receiving social security benefits as well as war widows' pensions are affected in the same way as any other recipients, except that for income-related benefits the statutory disregard of war widows' pension has been increased by 25 per cent. to £5. In addition, war widows who satisfy the conditions can receive the new £1,000 lump sum paid to national insurance widows as well as the standard or lower rate of war widows pension. Local authorities have retained the discretion to disregard war widows' pensions in calculating entitlement to housing benefit.

Distinction Awards

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what action is being taken by the chairman of the distinction awards committee in the light of the criticisms by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration in its 18th report;

(2) what advice or instructions have been given to local distinction awards committees in the light of criticisms made by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration in its 18th report.

Mr. Newton: In its 18th report, the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body asked the Health Departments and the professions to consider a number of changes to the distinction awards system. We are currently considering those recommendations and will then discuss with the profession any proposals for change.

Income Generation

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish guidelines for district health authorities on income generation.

Mr. Newton: Guidance to health authorities was issued on 5 April in the form of a letter from the NHS management board director of financial information. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Sight Tests

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he anticipates announcing the date of the changes in payment for the sight test.

Mr. Newton: Subject to the enactment of the Health and Medicines Bill, it is expected that free NHS sight tests will be confined to groups of patients specified in the Bill or in regulations with effect from 1 April 1989.

Green Lane Children's Home, Greenwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what part his Department played in the recent investigation into the running of a London borough of Greenwich children's home at Green lane, SE9; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Responsibility for investigating allegations of malpractice at Green lane Community Home lies with the London borough of Greenwich. The Department's social services inspectorate has, however, been kept informed of progress and developments in the inquiry undertaken by the borough and has been able to offer professional advice and support. A thorough management investigation by senior council officers is considered an appropriate way of dealing with allegations of the kind that have been made.

The council has asked the social services inspectorate to scrutinise the investigation and the findings recorded in the report of its social services committee working party in relation to the allegations. The inspectorate has undertaken to offer comment on any pertinent professional and service issues and this will be done as soon as possible.

Leeds Western Area Health Authority

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take with respect to the projected £1·25 million overspend in the current financial year by the Leeds Western area health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is the responsibility of Leeds Western health authority to consider how the recently identified overspending should be addressed, in consultation with Yorkshire regional health authority.

Social Workers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the annual cost to local authorities of providing post-qualifying training to social workers.

Mr. Newton: Information on costs to local authorities of providing post-qualifying training to social workers is not held centrally. Information provided by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work is that 249 social workers were admitted to post-qualifying courses in 1987. About half of these were seconded by their employers.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he is taking to ensure that the true redundancy and severance pay implications for health authorities of private contractors' tenders for hospital services are independently assessed.

Mrs. Currie: Tendering and contractual matters are already subject to independent audit. Additionally, guidance to health authorities already makes it clear that authorities must give an estimate of redundancy costs that arise if a contract is awarded to an outside contractor, when issuing tenders. Authorities may also consider spreading those costs over a period longer than the intended contract period where local circumstances make this appropriate. The 1987 National Audit Office report on competitive tendering in the NHS concluded that procedures for evaluating tenders and awarding contracts were being implemented fairly and in accordance with departmental guidance.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has taken steps to ensure that health authorities properly estimate the value of existing plant and machinery when they require private contractors to purchase it as part of a tender for hospital services; and whether he will ensure that such estimates are reviewed independently.

Mrs. Currie: Detailed guidance to health authorities on this type of contract stresses the need for authorities to arrive at valuations which are seen to be fair and realistic by both parties at the start of the contract. Authorities have already been advised to seek independent assistance from specialist firms or consultants where appropriate.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he will take to ensure that successful in-house tenders for hospital services are properly monitored.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that health authorities monitor the costs of successful in-house tenders for hospital services.

Mrs. Currie: Guidance to health authorities already stresses the continuing need for effective monitoring and control of contracts whether held by in-house teams or private contractors. To assist health authorities in this task the Department part-financed a study on contract monitoring for domestic, catering and laundry services sponsored by the Nuffield Provincial Hospitals Trust. The study, carried out by outside consultants, resulted in the publication of a practical guide and handbook on the management and monitoring of contracts for these services, which was issued by the Nuffield Provincial Hospitals Trust to health authorities last November and includes specific guidance on contracts awarded in-house.

Benefit Office Staff (Training)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much his Department has spent on training staff employed in benefit offices in the administration of the new social security rules.

Mr. Portillo: £21 million.

Baby-walkers (Accidents)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have been admitted to hospital during each of the past five years following accidents suffered while using baby-walkers or other infants' walking devices.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

Home accidents to children under five years old using baby-walkers are recorded in the Department of Trade and Industry's home accident surveillance system (HASS) which covers a sample of accident and emergency (A and E) Departments in 20 hospitals in England and Wales.

The most recent five-year period for which HASS figures are available is 1982-86. In these years HASS recorded the following number of accidents:

Accidents to children under 5 involving baby walkers
HASS: Hospital attendances at accident and emergency department

Year	Not admitted to hospital (1) Sent home or (2) referred to GP or (3) out patient	Admitted to hospital In patients	Specialist or other hospital	Incomplete information Other disposal	Unknown	Total
1982	173	22	1	—	1	197
1983	171	12	2	1	—	186
1984	242	8	2	2	—	254
1985	212	14	2	—	1	229
1986	285	14	4	2	—	305

It is possible to estimate national figures from the HASS sample in the case of the total accident and emergency attendances quoted in the last column of the table above. These national estimates are as follows:

Year	Estimated total A and E attendances for England and Wales
1982	5,000
1983	3,900
1984	4,900
1985	4,900
1986	6,100

The number of cases being admitted to hospital is too small to make reliable national estimates of such admissions. The figures quoted suggest that in this period in England and Wales between 300 and 400 children a year were admitted to hospital as a result of an accident involving a baby-walker.

Abortion

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of abortions performed in 1987 at (a) under 12, (b) 12 to 18, (c) 18 to 24 and (d) over 24 weeks' gestation by health authority area in England and Wales; and if he will give the numbers performed by National Health Service and private facilities by the same time limit categories.

Mr. Newton: [holding answer 27 June 1988]: The information is shown in the table.

Mrs. Bowell

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why attendance allowance will not be paid to Mrs. Bowell, currently of 80 Blatchcombe road, Paignton, who attends to her son, Mr. Alan Bowell, when they move to Spain at the beginning of July, in the light of the information in booklet SA29 paragraph 26; and if he will make a statement, with reference to the letter from the hon. Member for South Hams to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 8 June.

Mr. Portillo: The adjudication officer has ruled that attendance allowance is not payable to those who take up permanent residence outside the United Kingdom. Leaflet SA29 will require amendment. Mrs. Bowell may appeal to a social security appeals tribunal, and hence to the social security commissioner on a point of law.

Dental Services

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost to the National Health Service in 1988 terms, for each year since 1975, of dental services given to people (a) aged up to 16 years, (b) between the age of 16 to 21 years, and (c) over the age of 21 years.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the requested information is not available in full. The table gives the net cost (after allowing for patient charges) of the general dental service for people aged under 16, between the ages of 16 to 20 years and aged 21 years and over, for each year between 1975 and 1985. The basis of these figures was changed to the financial year in 1986, and the table includes the costs for 1986-87, the latest year for which this information is available. Similar information is not collected on the costs of dental services provided through the hospital and community health services.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if assurances were given to the United States President that the final assembly of United States binary chemical weapons was necessitated by the national security interests of the United Kingdom, pursuant to the requirements of section 1411 of the United States Department of Defence Authorisation Act 1986.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The United Kingdom lent its support to the adoption of a NATO force goal which stated the requirement for the United States to modernise its chemical weapons stock. No other assurances have been sought or received from the United Kingdom Government in connection with this programme.

Military Training

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 April, Official Report, column 73, what non-NATO countries have agreements to use military training facilities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: During 1986-87 and 1987-88 individuals or units from the following non-NATO countries made use of military training facilities in the United Kingdom by agreement with United Kingdom authorities.

Gunner R. W. Jones and Others

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to publish the result of his investigations into the fate of Gunner R. W. Jones and others.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The review which the MOD is conducting of the results of the investigation which it carried out in 1986 into the fate of captured British service men and the involvement, if any, of the then Lieutenant Waldheim is intended to be as thorough and comprehensive as possible and is being pursued as quickly as is consistent with proper consideration of the evidence and the need for accuracy. While good progress is being made, this is a complex and important matter and the work is not likely to be completed before the autumn.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what geographical area, expressed (a) by county and (b) by parliamentary constituency, is covered by low-flying area 11.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying area 11 covers (a) the county of Humberside and parts of the counties of Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, North Yorkshire, South Yorkshire and West Yorkshire and (b) the parliamentary constituencies of Scarborough, Ryedale, Bridlington, Beverley, Boothferry, Kingston upon Hull, East, Kingston upon Hull, North, Kingston upon Hull, West, Brigg and Cleethorpes, Great Grimsby, Glanford and Scunthorpe, Gainsborough and Horncastle, Lincoln, Pontefract and Castleford, Selby, Elmet, Harrogate and York and parts of the parliamentary constituencies of Langbaurgh, Richmond (Yorks), Skipton and Ripon, Leeds, North-East, Normanton, Wakefield, Barnsley, Central, Hemsworth, Barnsley, East, Don Valley, Doncaster, Central, Doncaster, North, Bassetlaw, Sherwood, Newark, Grantham, Stamford and Spalding, Holland with Boston and East Lindsey.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what geographical area, expressed (a) by county and (b) by parliamentary constituency, is covered by low-flying area 5.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying area 5 covers (a) the county of Suffolk and parts of the counties of Cambridgeshire, Essex, Lincolnshire and Norfolk (b) the parliamentary constituencies of Norfolk, North, Mid-Norfolk, Norfolk, South, Norwich, North, Norwich, South, Great Yarmouth, Waveney, Suffolk, Central, Suffolk, Coastal, Suffolk, South, Ipswich, Harwich, Colchester, North and Bury St. Edmunds and parts of the parliamentary constituences of Norfolk, North-West, East Lindsey, Holland with Boston, Norfolk, South-West, Cambridgeshire, North-East, Cambridgeshire, South-West, Cambridgeshire, South-East, Saffron Walden, Braintree, Chelmsford, Colchester, South, and Maldon.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what geographical area, expressed (a) by county and (b) by parliamentary constituency, is covered by low-flying area 16.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying area 16 covers (a) the county of Lothian and parts of the counties of Borders, Central, Cumbria, Dumfries and Galloway, Fife and Northumberland, Strathclyde and (b) the parliamentary constituencies of Clydebank and Milngavie, Glasgow, Garscadden, Glasgow, Maryhill, Glasgow, Hillhead, Glasgow, Springburn, Glasgow, Provan, Glasgow, Govan, Glasgow, Central, Glasgow, Shettleston, Glasgow, Pollok, Glasgow, Cathcart, Glasgow, Rutherglen, Paisley, North, Paisley, South, Eastwood, Cunninghame, South, Kilmarnock and Loudoun, East Kilbride, Ayr, Hamilton, Strathkelvin and Bearsden, Monklands, West, Monklands, East, Cumbernauld and Kilsyth, Falkirk, West, Falkirk, East, Motherwell, North, Motherwell, South, Linlithgow, Livingston, Midlothian, East Lothian, Edinburgh, Leith, Edinburgh, West, Edinburgh, Central, Edinburgh, East, Edinburgh, South, Edinburgh, Pentlands, Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley, Clydesdale, Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale, and Galloway and Upper Nithsdale and parts of the parliamentary constituencies of Cunninghame, North, Renfrew, West and Inverclyde, Greenock and Port Glasgow, Dumbarton, Stirling, Clackmannan, Dunfermline, West, Dunfermline, East, Kirkcaldy, Roxburgh and Berwickshire, Berwick-upon-Tweed, Penrith and The Border and Dumfries.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum permitted height for fixed-wing military aircraft operating in (a) the Kinloss-Lossiemouth, (b) Vale of York, (c) Spadeadam and (d) Ternhill areas of intense aerial activity.

Mr. Freeman: Such aircraft are not permitted to fly at heights beneath 250 ft minimum separation distance (msd) in any of these areas other than within the confines of Spadeadam training range, where aircraft may descend to 100 ft msd during their final approach to target.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what standing instructions are issued to station commanders at Royal Air Force bases concerning the procedures to be followed when complaints about low flying are received.

Mr. Freeman: The RAF general and administrative instruction covering the investigation of flying complaints from members of the public in the United Kingdom is a classified document. The instruction calls for responses to be courteous.

NATO Facilities

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the purpose and function of the proposed NATO-funded petrol, oil and lubricants storage at RAF Abingdon;

(2) what is the purpose and function of the proposed NATO parking platforms at RAF Benson;

(3) what is the purpose and function of the proposed NATO-funded petrol, oil and lubricants storage at RAF Benson;

(4) what is the purpose and function of the proposed NATO-funded petrol, oil and lubricants storage at aeroplane and armament experimental establishment, Boscombe Down;

(5) what are the purposes and functions of the proposed NATO-funded parking platforms at RAF Odiham;

(6) what is the purpose and function of the proposed NATO-funded petrol, oil and lubricants storage at RAF Odiham;

(7) what is the purpose and function of the proposed NATO-funded jet fuel storage at RAF Sculthorpe;

(8) what are the purposes and functions of the proposed NATO-funded ammunition storage igloos at RAF Sculthorpe;

(9) what is the purpose and function of the proposed NATO-funded missile maintenance facility at RAF Sculthorpe;

(10) what is the purpose and function of the proposed NATO-funded missile maintenance facility at RAF Heyford;

(11) what is the purpose and function of the proposed NATO-funded jet fuel storage at RAF Waddington;

(12) what is the purpose and function of the proposed NATO-funded missile checkout facility at RAF Waddington.

Mr. Ian Stewart: All facilities to which the hon. Member refers are designed for use by US forces operating in support of NATO. On good grounds of security, it is not our general practice to give more detailed operational information of the sort requested.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the NATO-funded projects that will be in construction for United States forces at bases in the United Kingdom in the fiscal year 1989.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I understand that the following NATO-funded projects will be in construction for the United States forces in the fiscal year 1989.

RAF Abingdon

Air Training Corps

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to improve the accommodation facilities for members of the Air Training Corps.

Mr. Freeman: Additional funds of £500,000 will be made available this year to accelerate the ATC's building programme of primary and auxiliary huts.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future sharing of defence costs between the Hong Kong Government and Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 29 June 1988]: An outline agreement on the future sharing of defence costs in Hong Kong has been concluded between officials of both Governments. The agreement, which provides for an apportionment of costs between the Hong Kong Government and Her Majesty's Government of 65:35, will run from 1 April 1988 to 30 June 1997.

WALES

Mentally Handicapped Persons

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which agency is responsible for providing employment opportunities for people with a mental handicap residing in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: People with a mental handicap should be able to enjoy full access to the normal range of services available to the public, and this applies equally to those in the employment field. The employment service in Wales, through its jobcentre facilities and disablement advisory service, provides assistance for people with a mental handicap to find suitable employment. A wide variety of schemes, supported by local authority social services departments, is available in those cases where additional support may be necessary.

Health Authorities (Membership)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names and addresses of (a) all nurse members on health authorities and special health authorities and (b) generalist members on health authorities who are nurses.

Mr. Grist: Nurse members currently serving on health authorities in Wales are:

Ms. M. Williams—(Clwyd District Health Authority)
Mrs. D. M. Tyler—(East Dyfed District Heath Authority)
Mrs. J. Evans—(Gwent District Health Authority)
Mrs. M. P. Wiliam—(Gwynedd District Health Authority)
Mr. D. Thomas—(Mid Glamorgan District Health Authority)
Miss J. Sinnott—(Pembrokeshire District Health Authority)
Mr. D. Williams—(Powys District Health Authority)
Mrs. C. M. Owen—(South Glamorgan District Health Authority)
Miss V. Burns—(West Glamorgan District Health Authority)

Of the generalist membership appointed by the Secretary of State, the following two individuals are nurses:

Mrs. S. G. Badland—(Clwyd District Health Authority)
Mrs. H. M. Jones—(East Dyfed District Health Authority)

In addition, Mrs. Noreen Edwards CBE, chairman of the Gwynedd district health authority, is a former matron.

Updated records of the occupations of local authority membership are not held centrally.

There are no nurse members on special health authorities in Wales.

It is not our practice to publish home addresses of district health authority members, but they can be contacted at the authority's official address.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

World Bank

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the World Bank in relation to structural adjustment facilities.

Mr. Chris Patten: The bank is committing about 25 per cent. of its lending in aid of adjustment, including about 5 per cent. for wider structural adjustment. We strongly support this.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's support for structural adjustment programmes in sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) on 20 June, at columns 377-78.

Under-developed Countries (Waste Disposal)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he provides assistance for the removal or treatment of wastes deposited in under-developed countries by developed countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Overseas Development Administration funded the visit of three scientists to work with a small American team advising on the recently discovered hazardous waste in Koko, Nigeria. Within the resources available, we stand ready to consider providing further technical co-operation if asked by developing countries.

Ethiopia

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's assistance to Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on 13 June, at columns 11-12 and to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) on 20 June, at columns 379-80.

PRIME MINISTER

Professor Peter Mortimore

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what approach the Government made to Professor Peter Mortimore about his possible appointment to the shadow National Curriculum Council; which Department made the approach; for what reasons it was decided not to appoint him; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science announced the initial appointments to the shadow National Curriculum Council on 20 May at columns 596-97. Further appointments are expected to be made in due course. It is not the practice to comment further on public appointments of this kind.

Children's Rights (UN Convention)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and other interested Government Departments on Her Majesty's Government policy towards the draft United Nations convention on the rights of the child with particular reference to its compatibility with existing domestic policies and legal provisions.

The Prime Minister: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office plays a co-ordinating role in the negotiations on the draft United Nations convention on the rights of the child, liaising as necessary with other Government Departments. Domestic policy and legal provisions are of course primarily a matter for the Department of Health and Social Security.

ENVIRONMENT

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take to advise intending holidaymakers that the water off the beaches of Sandwich, Deal, Folkestone, Sandgate, Hythe, Dymchurch and St. Mary's Bay failed the EEC coliform bacterial test in both 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: These bathing waters were among those included in the 1987 monitoring survey, the results of which I announced on 5 May in reply to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mr. Hicks) at columns 571-77. We are committed to bringing all identified waters up to EC standards. In general, no specific advice is necessary to holidaymakers in respect of waters which currently fail to meet standards. If, because of exceptional local circumstances, it were necessary to advise the public in respect of any water, it would be for the water authority and the local environmental health officer to take the appropriate action.

Pollution

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of sites designated for monitoring by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution in (a) 1986, (b) 1987, and (c) the latest available date.

Mr. Moynihan: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution advises both my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales, and in that capacity is responsible for inspecting and or monitoring the following:

Number of premises subject to the Radioactive Substances Act 1960

1987:5,799

Number of works registered under the Alkali etc. Works Regulation Act 1906 and the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974

1987:1,943

Number of works subject to discharge consent under the Control of Pollution Act 1974

1987: approximately 6,500 sewage treatment works[1] of which 4,600 have numerical consents and are therefore subject to compliance testing. The remainder are small works serving less than 250 people which have descriptive consents. Although not subjects to compliance testing, they are subject to inspection.

[1] HMIP is also responsible for issuing consents on behalf of the Secretaries of State for discharges for storm overflows, coastal outfalls and some water treatment works the total for which is not available.

Number of controlled waste sites under the Control of Pollution Act 1974

1987:5,100

The figures for 1987 are the latest available. Comparable figures for 1986 are not available.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inspectors formed the staff complement of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution in (a) 1986, (b) 1987, and (c) the latest available date.

Mr. Moynihan: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution was formed on 1 April 1987, with a professional complement of 123 posts, of which 66 were for field inspectors. The current professional complement is 120, of which 69 are field inspectors.

Water Supplies

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who is currently responsible for monitoring the quality of tap water supplied by water authorities, and whether he has any proposals to change the current system.

Mr. Moynihan: Monitoring of public water supplies is currently carried out by the water undertakers. Local authorities also have a duty to monitor the quality of all water supplies within their areas. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is also responsible for ensuring that appropriate measures are taken to fulfil the monitoring requirements of the EC directive on the quality of water intended for human consumption. These arrangements are to continue, and will be strengthened and clarified in the forthcoming legislation to privatise the water authorities. In particular, the legislation will contain measures enabling my right hon. Friend to arrange technical assessments of utility company monitoring to ensure compliance with the standards.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) European Economic Community directives which currently affect the water supply and (b) the areas in which discussions are currently taking place on further European Economic Community directives relating to water.

Mr. Moynihan: The EC directive relating to the quality of water intended for human comsumption, (80/778/EEC) applies to the quality of water supplies. The EC directive concerning the quality required of surface water intended for the abstraction of drinking water applies to the quality of the raw water and the level of treatment to be applied to it. Discussions are currently in progress on proposals for the protection of the aquatic environment in the following areas:

(i) on water quality objectives and limit values for discharges of chromium.

(ii) on procedures for harmonizing the programmes for the reduction and eventual elimination of pollution caused by waste from the titanium dioxide industry.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sanctions operate against water authorities which do not comply with European Economic Community directives.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State exercises sufficient control over water authorities to ensure general compliance. Should he consider that an authority was not complying with any directive in particular circumstances, appropriate steps would be taken.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has estimated the cost to water authorities prior to privatisation of complying with all existing European Economic Community directives on water; and whether his Department will assist in meeting this cost.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department does not grant-aid this type of investment. We are at present discussing these programmes with water authorities as part of the corporate plans round.

Membrane Technology

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the amount of money being spent in the United Kingdom on membrane technology for the benefit of the chemical, water treatment and waste-processing industries.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally.

Houses (Care and Repair Initiative)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress on the care and repair initiative in elderly home owners, giving details of the location of the centres, expenditure and numbers receiving help at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department is part funding 62 agency services projects under the initiative launched in November 1986: 27 are supported by Care and Repair Ltd., 10 by the Anchor Housing Trust and the remainder by Neighbourhood Revitalisation Services. The locations of projects specifically aimed at assisting elderly homeowners are as follows. The Department's contribution to Care and Repair Ltd., and through it to individual projects, was £470,000 to 30 June 1988. By 31 March 1988, 2,354 inquiries had been received by projects, 2,024 of which have led to further action being taken, including work to properties. It is too early to say what the total cost of the completed works will be, but this information is being collected as part of the monitoring exercise conducted by Bristol university.

Council House Sales

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to increase the present £35,000 maximum discount for council tenants purchasing their homes under the right-to-buy scheme.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend is considering the case for increasing the £35,000 limit under the Housing (Right to Buy) (Maximum Discount) Order 1986.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. R. W. Rook of 14 Horton Avenue, London NW2 2SA, of his council house from Camden council; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: According to the council, problems in the preparation of the conveyancing plan.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the criteria laid down by the Department of the Environment for the purposes of reviewing the Nature Conservancy Council's current and proposed landholdings; and how the new criteria apply to the Glen Feshie acquisition case.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 13 January 1988, columns 281-82, which listed the issues which the Department has asked the Nature Conservancy Council to consider as part of its current review of national nature reserves. The NCC has no plans to acquire Glen Feshie.

County of Kent (Planning Inquiries)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the details of each planning inquiry relating to the county of Kent held in the past 18 months; and if he will show, for each inquiry (a) the recommendation of the county council, (b) the recommendation of the district or city council, (c) the recommendation, where appropriate, of hon. Members, (d) the nature of the appeal, (e) the recommendation of the inspector and (f) the decision issued by him.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

American Waste

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what European Economic Community grants are being paid towards the cost of the Arpley Meadow tip infrastructure at Warrington; which American company Power, Water and Waste plc is purchasing the waste from; and when the imports of the waste are due to commence.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand from Cheshire waste disposal authority that £1·92 million has been granted from the European regional development fund towards the development of the Arpley Meadows waste disposal site. I have no information on the arrangements made by Power, Water and Waste for the procurement of the waste in the United States of America. Whether and when imports might commence depends upon necessary approvals being obtained.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether animal carcases are contained in the American waste proposed to be imported into Warrington.

Mr. Moynihan: I believe that the proposal relates to household waste, the precise content of which is unknown at this stage.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his comments to Manchester hon. Members in his letter of 14 June on imports of foreign waste, apply to the proposed import of American waste into Warrington.

Mr. Moynihan: No. My right hon. Friend's letter referred to imports from overseas of special wastes which are for specialist treatment or incineration. I made clear on 29 June, at column 501, the Government's reservations about the proposed import of household waste from the United States of America, which is quite different in scale and nature.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of possible dangers to public health arising from the proposed importation of American waste into Warrington.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler), at column 654.

Warrington and Runcorn

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when tenants of rented properties owned by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation will be balloted on a choice of future landlord.

Mrs. Roe: Tenants will be consulted as soon as practicable about the ultimate transfer of ownership.

In Warrington, the earliest date is likely to be spring 1990, given the need for legislation to enable Warrington borough council to acquire the houses on the same terms as other prospective approved landlords and to establish a new financial regime for local authority housing. It is essential that tenants can make an informed choice. They will need to know what future rent levels will be and what they can expect in terms of services from prospective landlords before they decide. The borough council will not be able to give tenants definite assurances on these until they have fully digested our proposals on finance.

In Runcorn, where Halton borough council is not interested in acquiring the housing, the tenants will be consulted on whether they wish their homes to be transferred to RUNHAG, the consortium of local housing associations. A fair price for the houses must first be agreed. An independent valuation is expected later this year. Consultation should be possible early in 1989.

Rating Reform

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of the passage of the Local Government Finance Bill on garden rates as set out in the Kensington Improvement Act 1851; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Garden square committees established under this Act currently raise money by a levy on the Borough council. They will be able to continue to make such levies under the provisions of clause 88 of the Local Government Finance Bill.

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's plans to make future provision for facilities for single homeless men.

Mrs. Roe: I have nothing to add to the reply my hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 18 May, at column 929.

Laing Easiform Houses

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice the Building Research Establishment is able to offer to owners and lending institutions on the structural condition of Laing Easiform houses.

Mr. Waldegrave: The BRE's report on "The structural condition of Easiform cavity-walled dwellings" is published today. Its conclusions are reassuring. Many of the houses inspected were 60 years old, but in none of them was the stability or integrity of the structure in doubt. The incidence and structural significance of faults reported appears to be no greater than those in traditional cavity-walled dwellings of the same age. The Easiform house is a robust and substantial form of construction which is unlikely to be significantly affected by minor variations in workmanship or isolated cracking in the concrete.

The report also contains much useful information on Easiform construction which should be particularly helpful to lending institutions and their surveyors when considering mortgage applications, and also to local authorities and private owners when approaching the repair and maintenance of these dwellings.

Advertisement Regulations

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, following consideration of the response to his Department's consultation paper issued last October, he will announce his intention to amend the control of advertisement regulations so as to permit certain types of illuminated advertisements to be displayed with deemed consent on business premises and in retail parks.

Mr. Waldegrave: After careful consideration of the responses to the consultation paper, we have decided to amend the Control of Advertisements Regulations so as to provide for two new classes of illuminated advertisements to be displayed with "deemed consent" on specified "business premises" and in "retail parks". Each new class will be subject to carefully framed limitations to safeguard amenity and minimise any risk to public safety. In response to expressions of concern that the original proposals were likely to prove harmful to amenity if illuminated signs were displayed in conservation areas without the local planning authority's specific consent, we have decided to exclude these areas for the time being. Land and premises situated in national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty and areas of special control of advertisements will also be excluded from the new provisions.

The type of illuminated advertisements for which consent will be granted will be specifically limited to those in which each letter or character is internally illuminated, with any background remaining unilluminated; the maximum luminance levels for any advertisement displayed with deemed consent will have to conform to the recommendations of the Institution of Lighting Engineers for appropriate areas; advertisements which include any intermittent light source, moving feature or animation, or any exposed neon tubing will not be permitted by the consent; and certain height limits and maximum areas will be specified. We are satisfied that these conditions and limitations are essential in the interests of amenity and public safety.

My right hon. Friend intends in due course to lay before Parliament amendment regulations (under section 63 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971) to give effect to these proposals; to make the further amendments to improve and simplify the practical operation of the advertisement control regime which I announced in my written answer on 28 October 1987, at column 280; and to consolidate all the earlier amendments to the Control of Advertisements Regulations 1984 (SI 1984/No. 421).

Where those providing comments on the consultation paper have given their consent, copies of the responses are being placed in the Library in the usual way.

Water Authorities

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what ceiling his Department has set on the capital expenditure of each water authority in England and Wales for the year ahead; and what were the corresponding figures for each of the past five years, expressed in constant prices.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 1 July 1988]: The capital allocations given to each of the English regional water authorities for 1988-89 are set out in the adjoining table. These allocations relate to water services for which the Department is responsible and do not include flood defence works, which are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Allocations for Welsh water are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. In the last five years we have exercised an indirect control over capital expenditure and not made formal capital allocations. The allocations for 1988-89 are as follows:

	£ million
Anglian	135·0
Northumbrian	34·5
North West	214·0
Severn-Trent	171·0
Southern	81·0
South West	50·0
Thames	175·0
Wessex	64·5
Yorkshire	132·0

These allocations are being reviewed in the current round of corporate plan discussions.

Coast Protection

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent on coastal protection and sea defences for each year since 1980.

Mr. Gummer: I have been asked to reply because my Department has responsibilities with regard to capital spending on coast protection and sea defences.

The figures are as follows:

Capital spending on coast protection and sea defences

	£ millions
1980-81	27·3
1981-82	30·3
1982-83	36·4
1983-84	39·0
1984-85	35·4
1985-86	34·6
1986-87	38·6
1987-88	42·1

Swimming Facilities

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to introduce private management of local authority swimming facilities; and what representations he has received on the matter.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 1 July 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made on Friday 1 July, at columns 652-65.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education Reform

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what grounds home economics and business studies/commercial subjects, have been reduced to minority status subjects in the Government's education proposals for Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The proposals for a common curriculum for Northern Ireland, published in the consultation document, are not meant to be closely prescriptive, but rather are intended to represent what would be acceptable as the basic components of a broad and balanced curriculum necessary to enable young people to develop to their full potential. The absence of home economics or business studies from the proposed foundation subjects does not mean that they are held in any less esteem, and time will be available outside the foundation curriculum for schools to devote to other important subjects such as these.

Irish Language

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are his estimates of the percentage of people in Northern Ireland who (a) use the Irish language as their first language and (b) have a fluent knowledge of the Irish language.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 27 June 1988]: Information on the use of Irish as a first language is not currently available. Data collected in the continuous household survey in 1987 suggest that some 3·7 per cent. of the people of Northern Ireland have an elementary fluency in the Irish language and 0·55 per cent. have full fluency.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Alcohol Counselling

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what grants are available to voluntary organisations providing a pre-sentencing alcohol counselling and assessment service to magistrates courts; and what is the current spending on supporting such projects.

Mr. John Patten: Voluntary organisations which provide alcohol advice and counselling services receive grants from local authorities, health authorities and other sources. The probation service may co-operate with these organisations when preparing social inquiry reports for the courts on offenders with alcohol problems. No information is available centrally about the level of financial support which such organisations receive from public funds.

Prison Officers' Houses (Culcheth)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which company has purchased the empty prison officers houses in Culcheth; whether all the houses have now been sold; whether the hostel has been sold; what price was paid for the properties; and what arrangement was reached with Warrington borough council regarding the roads and services.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Agreement has been reached to sell these properties to the firm which submitted the highest tender but completion has yet to take place. This awaits the conclusion, which is expected shortly, of negotiations between the prospective purchaser and Warrington borough council on proposals made for minor changes to the layout of the roads. The specifications for the works to be undertaken by the purchaser to secure adoption of the roads and services have been agreed with Warrington borough council.

The name of the prospective purchaser and the price to be paid cannot be made public until the sale has been completed.

Trials (Merseyside and Liverpool Crown Court)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the time limit of 110 days between arrest and being brought to trial will apply to Merseyside and the Liverpool Crown court.

Mr. John Patten: We plan to extend custody time limits to other areas next year but it is too early to say whether Merseyside will be among them. We hope time limits will be in force throughout England in 1990.

Immigration and Nationality Department

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will specify the latest average waiting times for applicants for all application categories dealt with by the immigration and nationality department; and what changes have taken place in waiting times in each of the last five years on a quarterly basis.

Mr. Renton: Annual information is given in the following table for the major areas of work undertaken by the immigration and natonality department: the figures for extensions of stay and settlement and for refugee status involves a degree of approximation such that any quarterly fluctuation would not be of significance.

Average length of time between the receipt of an application and the decision, for cases decided during the year

A number of the companies listed have several branches accredited separately as agents. The list does not include Government Departments, which also have agency status at the Passport Office.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply of 27 June, if he will list the direct telephone numbers of his Department's caseworker staff with whom applicants and their representatives may check the progress of applications; and if he will also specify the times when such calls may be made.

Mr. Renton: No. If applicants or their representatives already have correspondence from case-working staff on which, as should generally be the case, a telephone number has been included, they may call that number to check on progress. Otherwise, telephone inquiries about immigration, nationality and passport matters should be made to the telephone inquiry bureaux for those departments. Telephone inquiries about other matters for which the Home Office is responsible should be made either to the number listed in the telephone directory for the office concerned, or to the general number for the Department's headquarters' offices.

Leeds Prison

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will supply figures for (a) the establishment and (b) actual staffing levels for medical staff at Leeds prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The figures are as follows:

Grade	(a) Complement	(b) Staff in post
Senior Medical Officer	1	1
Medical Officers	3¼	4
Prison Service Grade V (Hosp)	1	1
Prison Service Grade VI (Hosp)	2	2
Prison Service Grade VII (Hosp)	4	4
Prison Service Grade VIII (Hosp)	18	18

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the occasions, and the reasons, for closures of the medical wing at Leeds prision during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The medical accommodation at Leeds prison provides a total of 58 beds. On a total of 17 occasions between July 1987 and June 1988 local management decided that there were insufficient staff available to enable part of that accommodation, the 18-bedded observation ward, to be used. Over that period and for that reason the ward was taken out of use for a total of 12½ days.

The shortage of staff arose from the actual strength of hospital officers being at times two below the complement of 18, absences because of sick and annual leave, and the occasional need for hospital officers to be deployed on escort duties. There were also occasions when the use of the ward was retained by its manning with discipline officers. Since February the number of hospital officers in post has matched the authorised complement.

DNA Tests

Mr. Dennis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many recent cases involving applications to enter this country as relatives of British citizens already resident here DNA tests have been used; and in what percentage of these cases the results upheld the claims of the applicants.

Mr. Renton: This information is not available.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the reports of DNA testing to be published; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on Thursday 16 June at columns 200-201.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list what statistics can be produced by his Departments's computer on asylum seekers.

Mr. Renton: The refugee index computer records personal information about asylum seekers and their families, and details of their applications. In due course the outcome of each application is recorded, though this may be some considerable time later. A statistical bulletin aggregating some of this information is published annually by the Home Office. Home Office statistical bulletin 16/88, "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom 1987" is the most recent version. Copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate how often statistical reports produced on his Department's computer on asylum seekers have been sent to the United Nations High Commission for Refugees; how much time, in man hours, is needed to input the data on asylum seekers to his Department's computer; and how many staff are competent to do the data input.

Mr. Renton: There is no record of the number of occasions that statistics have been sent to UNHCR. UNHCR is sent copies of the annual Home Office statistical bulletin on refugees and we respond whenever practicable to ad hoc requests. From this year we have agreed to provide UNHCR with information quarterly but the first quarter's statistics have been delayed because the figures initially produced were incomplete.

We have no accurate estimates of the time taken to enter information on the computer. Details of a single case can be entered in minutes but in 1987 there were some 4,500 applications and 3,000 decisions. This work is done by 11 administrative officers in the refugee unit, all of whom have other responsibilities.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, columns 442-4, he will publish such information on the number of asylum seekers (a) refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom, (b) refused leave to enter and detained, (c) refused leave to enter and granted temporary admission and (d) granted temporary admission pending a decision, for the London airports and Dover seaports as is available to him from the weekly returns IS/86 38/20/1.

Mr. Renton: No. It would be misleading to do so since the limited information on the outcome of cases contained in these returns is accurate only at the point they are compiled. It is not updated to take account of subsequent action and so would not give a meaningful picture.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether discussions between his Department, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Kingdom Immigration Advisory Service about referral procedures for asylum applications have reached a conclusion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Following lengthy and constructive negotiations between Home Office officials, the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Kingdom immigrants advisory service, I have written to the London representative of UNHCR setting out new arrangements for the referral of asylum cases to UKIAS. These arrangements will commence on 1 September. A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library.

Filipino Domestic Workers

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate how many Filipino domestic workers were admitted into the United Kingdom for each of the last three years outside the provisions of the immigration rules.

Mr. Renton: Domestic servants engaged abroad and accompanying their employers here may be admitted outside the provisions of the immigration rules. However, the numbers involved cannot be separately identified in the statistics of passenger admissions.

Visa Applications

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the practice, when another country approaches Her Majesty's Government indicating that an individual applying for a visa to enter the United Kingdom may be a security risk to that other country, with regard to making inquiries to check the accuracy of that information; and what account is taken of such information in determining an individual's visa application.

Mr. Hurd: Any information relevant to a visa application is carefully considered and given due weight in reaching a decision on the application.

Mr. E. Dhillon

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, with regard to the application of Mr. E. Dhillon for leave to enter the United Kingdom, what was the nature and source of the information that came to light between May 1987 when he was last allowed to enter the United Kingdom and August 1987 when entry was refused.

Mr. Hurd: I was aware of Mr. Dhillon's previous visits to the United Kingdom when I decided to exclude him on grounds that for reasons of national security his presence would not be conducive to the public good. It would be contrary to long-standing practice to comment on the information which led me to that decision.

Data Protection Act 1984

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to undertake a review of the Data Protection Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: It has always been our intention to review the Act once it was fully in force and experience gained of its practical operation. We have now established an interdepartmental review committee, chaired by the Home Office for this purpose. The committee has been asked to review the implementation of the Act, particularly with regard to the impact on data users of the registration requirements, and to make recommendations.

As part of his general responsibility to monitor the operation of the Act, the Data Protection Registrar has, independently, recently begun a consultative exercise in order to help him assess the experience of those affected by the legislation. I have asked the registrar to make available the results of his consultation exercise to the review committee.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Institute of Hearing Research

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the work of the Institute of Hearing Research.

Mr. Jackson: I understand from the Medical Research Council that the programme of research at its institute of hearing research continues to progress well. The research conducted at the institute was last formally revised in 1985 when its work was found overall to be of a very high standard. The next formal review is due to take place early in 1989.

A-level Examination

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library his letter commissioning Professor Gordon Higginson to look into the future of the A-level examination system in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend published the terms of reference of the committee on A-levels on 25 February 1987, at columns 131-32 in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Toronto Summit

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what foreign policy initiatives were discussed at the Toronto Heads of Government meeting.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 23 June, at column 1259.

Edward Besprozvany

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise with the Soviet authorities the case of Edward Besprozvany, who has been offered a place at the London School of Economics but who has been refused an exit visa.

Mr. Mellor: We were not hitherto aware of this case which I understand is being pursued by the Student and Academic Campaign for Soviet Jewry. We regularly raise similar cases with the Soviet authorities. The recently established mechanism of bilateral human rights talks will provide further opportunities to make our concerns known.

Anguilla

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, who is responsible for the police force on Anguilla; what instructions have been given them in relation to the threat to public safety posed by wild dogs; what representations have been received by the Governor seeking action on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Operational control of the police force in Anguilla is a responsibility reserved to Her Majesty's Government through the Governor, although day-to-day management of the force is delegated to the island's commissioner of police. Neither the Governor nor the Anguilla Minister of Agriculture, whose Ministry is responsible for the control of pests, is aware of any threat to public safety by wild dogs and no instructions in this regard have therefore been issued to the police.

Except for a conversation recently with Mr. Albert Lake, which took place in the hon. Member's presence during the latter's visit to the island in early June, no representations have been made to the Governor seeking action on this matter. However, we understand the Minister of Agriculture has received several complaints about this problem and has organised control programmes.

Iran

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any person connected with the Church of England has made contact either in the United Kingdom or elsewhere during the past year with any representative of Her Majesty's Government regarding the admission to the United Kingdom of Iranian nationals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The admission of foreign nationals to the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, not the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. But my hon. Friend may have in mind representations made by a representative of the Church of England last year concerning a possible application for entry into the United Kingdom of Mohammed Rahmani Tabor for urgent medical treatment. We are always prepared to consider such humanitarian cases sympathetically, and, where possible, we try to process such applications speedily. However, there can be no question of any Iranian national entering the United Kingdom without valid entry clearance, and no discussions along these lines took place. In the event, Mr. Rahmani Tabor did not submit an application.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all third parties used by Her Majesty's Government in its dealings with the Iranian Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Britain maintains diplomatic relations with Iran and all communications with the Iranian Government are conducted through conventional diplomatic channels. In the absence of British representation in Tehran, our interests there are looked after by the Swedish embassy.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 20 June 1988]: Approximately 70 per cent. of senior grade officers in the diplomatic service were educated at private schools and the remainder at state schools.

Customs Restrictions

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will bring forward proposals in the EEC for the repeal of directive 69/169 with effect from 1 January 1993 so as to remove restrictions upon the right of citizens of the United Kingdom to bring without restriction into the United Kingdom goods purchased elsewhere in the European Community.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

The Commission has already submitted to the Council a proposal to complete and amend directive 77/338 for the removal of fiscal frontiers within the European Community. This proposal includes a provision to repeal directive 69/169 on 31 December 1992 in respect of intra-Community traffic.

It is now the subject of discussion in the Economic and Financial Affairs Council as one of the measures put forward for the completion of the single market.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Illegal Radio Stations

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the maximum penalty that can be imposed on people running illegal radio broadcasting stations.

Mr. Butcher: The maximum penalty under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 for the unlicensed use of a radio transmitter is a fine of £2,000 and/or three months' imprisonment.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the names of the illegal radio stations operating in the London area, and the number of times such stations have been raided by officers of his Department in each of the last three years.

Mr. Butcher: The following is a list of unlicensed broadcasting stations raided by my Department's radio investigation service during 1988 together with the number of times they were raided in each of the preceding three years.

A further eight unidentified stations have been raided on 27 occasions so far during 1988.

Enterprise and Deregulation Unit

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 20 June, Official Report, column 407, with which organisations representing small businesses the enterprise and deregulation unit has contact; and how frequently such contact takes place.

Mr. Maude: The enterprise and deregulation unit has contact with the following organisations which particularly represent small businesses:

Alliance of Small Firms and Self Employed People
Association of British Chambers of Commerce
Association of Independent Business
Confederation of British Industry and its Small Firms Directorate
Engineering Industries Association
Forum of Private Business
Smaller Practitioners Committee of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales
Institute of Directors
National Chamber of Trade
National Federation of the Self-Employed and Small Businesses Ltd.
Retail Consortium
Union of Independent Companies

Contact occurs whenever the unit or any one of these organisations wishes to consult the other about an issue, and the frequency therefore varies.

Mercury Soaps (Prohibition Order)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will name the company exporting mercury soaps from the United Kingdom, which has been served under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 with a prohibition order; and if he will state what subsequent action has been taken by his Department.

Mr. Butcher: The manufacturers of mercury soap on whom I served the prohibition notice were Shakespeare Soap and Beauty Products Ltd. of Stockport. At my Department's request, trading standards officers of Cheshire county council have since visited the firm to ensure that it has stopped supplying mercury soap for export.

Nicaragua

Ms. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the categories of goods currently imported from Nicaragua; and if he will state whether there are any quota or other restrictions placed thereon.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the first five months of 1988, statistics show significant imports from Nicaragua of coffee, oilseeds, organic chemicals and textiles. None of these products is subject to quantitative restrictions on import from Nicaragua.

Unichem Ltd.

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, in view of the financial losses that are being sustained by other companies as a result of the scheme in question, he will instruct the Director General of Fair Trading to expedite his consideration of alleged breaches by Unichem Ltd. of the Competition Act.

Mr. Maude: No. The conduct of investigations under the Competition Act is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. However, I understand that the Director General is fully aware of the need for urgency and is consequently proceeding with all possible speed.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the permanent secretary of his Department last met representatives of Westland plc, what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Sir Brian Hayes' last meeting with representatives of Westland plc was on 17 October 1986. The purpose of the meeting was to give the Department an account of the company's progress.

British Airways and British Telecom

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the percentage increase in the price to domestic and commercial consumers of the services of (i) British Airways and (ii) British Telecom for each year since their privatisation.

Mr. Butcher: British Telecom's licence provides for a system of control of annual price changes on certain basic network services (that is, business and residential line rentals and directly dialled inland calls) which together make up a basket. The aggregate level of prices of services within the basket cannot be increased by more than RPI-3 percentage points (where RPI is the general rate of inflation as measured by the retail prices index). Table 1 in the Director General of Telecommunications' consultative document of January 1988, "The Regulation of British Telecom's Prices," a copy of which is in the Library, provides a summary of price changes controlled by the licence since privatisation. Not all of British Telecom's services are covered by the basket.

Questions concerning British Airways should be addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. I understand that the British Airways annual report gives information on the yields on scheduled services.

North Peckham Task Force

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations have been received about the competence and financial integrity of David Levy, project leader of the north Peckham task force.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why the contract of Mr. David Levy, north Peckham task force leader, was ended prematurely.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Daniel Levy is not leaving the North Peckham task force prematurely. He was not engaged for any fixed term and he has decided that he would now like to return to private consultancy. I am grateful for his work in north Peckham and I think he is entitled to regard his tenure of a difficult post as a success.

Trade Surpluses and Deficits

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is, for each year since 1974, the variation in trade surplus or trade deficit of the following countries (a) Belgium, (b) Canada, (c) Denmark, (d) France, (e) the Federal Republic of Germany, (f) Italy, (g) The Netherlands, (h) Norway, (i) Sweden, (j) the United States of America and (k) the United Kingdom, both in percentages and in pound sterling of 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: As the sign of the balance can vary from year to year, it is not appropriate to measure changes in the balance of trade in percentage terms. Data in constant value terms are not readily available.

Balances in sterling terms at current prices and exchange rates are in the following table.

Crude Balance of Visible Trade

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what resources are available to the Securities and Investments Board to carry out investigations under the powers given it by the Financial Services Act 1986; and what use has been made of those powers since the board was created.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 1 July 1988]: This is a matter for the board.

ENERGY

Combined Heat and Power (Leicester)

10. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to visit Leicester to discuss the development of combined heat and power.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I visited Leicester Energy Ltd. last autumn to discuss its planned combined heat and power and district heating scheme and my officials maintain close contact with it on factors affecting the implementation of this project.

Private Coal Mining

13. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to relax restrictions on private coal mining.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We are considering changing the statutory limits on the size of private sector mining; no decisions have yet been made.

Gas and Electricity (VAT)

14. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with British Gas and the electricity boards about the implications of the recent decision of the European Court of Justice about value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: None. However, I can assure my hon. Friend, that the Government intend to consult all interested parties on how the judgment can best be applied in practice.

Solar Energy

15. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much energy he expects to be generated from solar sources during the current year; what was the comparable figure five years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Passive solar design of buildings is the best way to utilise solar energy in the United Kingdom. My Department is supporting a major research and development programme aimed at encouraging the take-up of the technology by the building industry.

Electricity Industry (Privatisation)

16. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what guarantees will be given to consumers on price increases following privatisation of the electricity industry.

Mr. Parkinson: As the hon. Member will be aware from the answer he received on 23 November 1987 at col. 21, the Government believe that privatisation, by introducing competition and increasing efficiency, will exert a downward pressure on costs and prices.

17. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received in the last month on the privatisation of electricity generation and supply.

Mr. Parkinson: I continue to receive a large number of representations.

20. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to meet the Major Energy Users Council to discuss electricity privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: I have no such plans at present; but I have received representations from a number of groups representing electricity consumers, and will consider them in preparing plans for privatisation.

29. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has conducted a detailed study into the likely effects of electricity privatisation on employment in the coal industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The employment consequences of electricity privatisation for the coal industry will depend on the terms for the supply of coal, which will be a commercial matter for negotiation between British Coal and the privatised electricity generating companies.

30. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on operating costs in the electricity supply industry after privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Operating costs after privatisation will be a matter for the companies concerned. Competitive pressures and the regulatory regime will protect the interests of customers, including the prices they are charged.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the implications for privatisation of electricity of the outcome of recent discussions in the European Community on the issue of flue gas desulphurisation of United Kingdom electricity-generating plant.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Privatisation will make no difference to the environmental standards that the electricity industry has to meet.

Energy Efficiency

22. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to promote energy efficiency among British cooling and freezing technology manufacturers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My energy efficiency office has provided £3·4 million for research and development and demonstration projects on new energy efficient refrigeration technologies and the closely allied technologies of heat pumps. It has also published technical advice for users of refrigeration plant and supported development of a monitoring and targeting system for refrigerated food factories.

28. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on energy efficiency initiatives in the public sector.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The energy efficiency office supports a number of initiatives to improve energy management in the public sector. For example, I recently met energy managers from Government Departments. I told them I strongly supported their work, which presently includes the development of annual energy reports.

As Departments become more fully responsible for energy management and other accommodation matters, and gain access to other sources of expertise as well as the Property Services Agency, they will have a greater incentive to exercise effective control over their progress. I believe this must be a positive development.

British Gas

23. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received seeking amendment of the licence issued to British Gas in respect of the debt repayment provisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Any amendment to the authorisation to British Gas is in the first instance a matter for the Director General of gas supply.

Coal Industry (Privatisation)

24. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to discuss the privatisation of the coal industry with the chairman of British Coal.

Mr. Parkinson: The Government have made clear their ambitions to return the coal industry to the private sector. However, we have no plans to do so before the next general election and no detailed discussions have therefore taken place with the British Coal Corporation.

Mersey Barrage

25. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress is being made towards the proposed Mersey barrage project; and what contribution his Department is making towards its achievement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I recently announced an extended second phase of the Mersey barrage feasibility studies costing £1·3 million, jointly funded with the Mersey Barrage company. This brings the total Government support for the project to £951,000. The studies will further examine engineering, economic and environmental aspects and will be completed in about two years.

Central Electricity Generating Board

26. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what topics he plans to discuss.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the chairman of the CEGB from time to time to discuss various matters relating to the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Sizewell B

27. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the basis of calculation carried out by his Department's economists and statisticians referred to in the Secretary of State's decision letter of 12 March 1987 to the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board, regarding the board's application to construct Sizewll B.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer) on 11 May 1988 at cols 111-112.

Opencast Coal Mining

18. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate he has of the anticipated annual effect on the output from opencast coal production from the operation of the Department of the Environment and Welsh Office circular MP93, up to the year 2000.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The effects of the Department of the Environment's new guidance circular on coal production will depend on the decisions of the mineral planning authorities. It is neither possible nor desirable to anticipate these decisions.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of licences granted for opencast mining projects in the last five years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The British Coal Corporation is responsible for the issue of licences for private opencast mining operations. I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the figures for opencast coal production for the last five years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Figures for British Coal's opencast coal production are shown in its annual report and accounts. Information on licensed opencast production would have to be sought from the corporation.

Oil-related Industries

19. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current and proposed levels of activity in the United Kingdom oil-related fabrication sector.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Following the recovery from the oil price fall of 1986 there is now renewed confidence in the future of the offshore oil-related fabrication sector. I have approved a total of 14 projects this year so far with a total capital cost in excess of £1·65 billion (at 1988 prices). Orders for these projects and for those approved last year are already coming through.

Alternative Energy Sources

21. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he plans any further initiatives relating to funding of research into alternative and renewable forms of energy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Energy Paper number 55 "Renewable Energy in the UK: The Way Forward" has recently been published. It gives our view of the development strategy for renewable energy to the year 2000, together with an estimate of support to be shared between Government and industry on an increasing level of collaboration.

Electricity Prices

31. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received regarding electricity prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received a number of such representations.

Fusion

32. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his future plans for funding the research and development of fusion, in the light of recent statements by the European Parliament's scientific and technical options assessment unit.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom is making a major contribution to the Community fusion programme, including the joint European torus project at Culham, whose life is to be extended to 1992. It is common ground between the United Kingdom and its partners that any decision on whether to proceed to a detailed engineering design (next European Torus) cannot be made before 1990 or without a thorough independent evaluation of the Community fusion programme.

British Coal (Ambulance Service)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now issue a direction to British Coal instructing it to cease any further cuts in British Coal's ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The management of its ambulance service is a matter for British Coal, subject to statutory regulations which come under the supervision of the Health and Safety Executive.

Hinkley Point C

33. Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any new assessment of the health, environmental and economic implications of nuclear power that takes into account factors that have emerged since the Sizewell public inquiry, will be given by his Department to the Hinkley Point C inquiry.

Mr. Parkinson: As required by the procedure rules governing this inquiry I have made a statement of those matters which appear to me to be relevant to my consideration of the CEGB's application. These concern economic, safety, environmental and planning matters and were reported to the House in my answer of 21 March 1988 to the hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) at columns 21-22.

A Department of Energy witness will appear at the inquiry to clarify the Government policies referred to in paragraph (1) of my statement. The Department of the Environment, the Department of Transport and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have also offered witnesses to clarify relevant Government policies for which those Departments are responsible. The nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive will give independent expert evidence on safety aspects.

The conduct of the inquiry is the responsibility of the inspector, who is able to invite expert witnesses to give evidence on any relevant matters which, in his view, might not otherwise be properly covered.

Superconductivity

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps his Department is taking to ensure that the electricity supply industry reduces the loss of electricity in transmission and promotes increased research into superconductivity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Transmission and distribution losses are discussed regularly with the electricity supply industry, which seeks to keep such losses to the economic minimum. The industry's research proposals are considered each year by my right hon. Friend's Advisory Council on Research and Development. The current research programme includes work on superconductivity and various other techniques for reducing system losses.

Indonesia (Nuclear Energy)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, during his recent visit to Indonesia, he met the Indonesian Finance Minister to discuss the economic benefit for Indonesia of nuclear energy.

Mr. Parkinson: I met Professor Dr. Sumarlin, but this issue was not one of those discussed.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, during his recent visit to Indonesia, he discussed the export opportunities for Britain's nuclear industry with the Indonesian Mines and Energy Minister and officials from Indonesia's National Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Parkinson: In my meeting with Mr. Ginandjar, I spoke of the United Kingdom's experience of nuclear power. I am not aware of having met any official of the agency mentioned.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, during his recent visit to Indonesia he discussed the prospects of British assistance with nuclear power with officials of Indonesia's National Electricity Company.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

Indonesia (Environmental Problems)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, during his recent visit to Indonesia, he met officials of Walhi, the Indonesian environmental forum, to discuss energy supply and associated environmental problems.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

Hong Kong

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if, during his recent visit to Hong Kong, he discussed with the nuclear safety authorities the dangers posed to the Crown colony by the operational and safety record of the near-by Nanwung twin 951 MW pressurised water reactor nuclear plant on Taiwan;

(2) if, during his recent visit to Hong Kong, he discussed with the relevant local authorities the construction delays with the Daya bay nuclear plant.

Mr. Parkinson: I had no formal meetings during my short stay in Hong Kong, and these topics were not discussed.

Daya Bay (Nuclear Plant)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, during his recent visit to Hong Kong and the People's Republic of China, he discussed with the authorities in charge of the Daya bay pressurised water reactor nuclear plant the involvement of three Taiwanese nuclear experts in the on-site contruction of the nuclear plant.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

China (Nuclear Energy)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, during his recent visit to the People's Republic of China, he discussed with his counterpart the potential benefits of amending the restrictive arrangements for information disclosure set out under article III(i) of the Anglo-Chinese agreement on the co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, dated 3 June 1988.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, during his recent visit to the People's Republic of China, he made any attempts to update the Anglo-Chinese agreement on the co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy dated 3 June 1988.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

China (Power Generation Aid)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, during his recent visit to the People's Republic of China he discussed with his counterpart in the Chinese Government specific assistance projects for power generation, technology and equipment under article X of the protocol on the agreement on scientific and technological co-operation between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the People's Republic of China, dated November 1978.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

Kalpakkan Nuclear Plant

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has received any representations from the Indian Atomic Energy Board seeking technical assistance from United Kingdom nuclear experts at the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to resolve the problem of jellyfish clogging the coolant water inlet and outlet ducts at the Kalpakkan nuclear plant.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies have been carried out to consider whether the Wellman-Lord regenerative process for flue gas desulphurisation is a viable and feasible option in helping to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions from Great Britain's coal-fired power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am informed that the Central Electricity Generating Board has, as part of its investigations into flue gas desulphurisation, examined a detailed study of the Wellman-Lord technology. Decisions about its commercial application in power stations are a matter for the CEGB and its successor companies.

British Coal

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he or his Department have had any discussions with prospective purchasers of British Coal mining interests in the north of England.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government have made clear their ambition to return the coal industry to the private sector, but there are no plans to do so in the present Parliament. Therefore the Department of Energy is not in a position to enter into any substantive discussions about sales of mining assets.

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many refineries in the United Kingdom have the capacity to produce lead-free petrol

Mr. Peter Morrison: All 10 United Kingdom refineries supplying the United Kingdom petrol market have the capacity to produce unleaded petrol.

Oil and Pipelines Agency

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, in the light of the Government's decision to end the trading activities of the Oil and Pipelines Agency, he will describe what discussions he proposes to have with those concerned as to the best method of achieving this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Discussions will be held with the industry on the proposed ending of participation agreements. Legal notices announcing termination of OPA's trading activities were issued to all licensees on 22 June.

Coal Production (ECSC Levy)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been Britain's contribution in each year since 1973 to the ECSC budget by way of the levy made on coal production.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 22 June 1988]: United Kingdom contributions to the ECSC levy on coal production since 1973 have been:

Calender Year	ECSE coal levy £ million
1973	0·7
1974	2·0
1975	3·0
1976	3·7
1977	5·6
1978	6·4
1979	7·1
1980	7·5
1981	7·9
1982	9·3
1983	11·0
1984	10·0
1985	4·0
1986	11.0
1987	14·0

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the levy per tonne set each year since 1973 on coal production for the ECSC budget; and how much was raised each year by the levy on production in (a) British Coal NCB deep mines, (b) opencast sites and (c) licensed mines.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 22 June 1988]: The rate levied since 1973 has been:

Calendar year	Rate
1973	0·0219	£/tonne
1974	0·0285	£/tonne
1975	0·0331	£/tonne
1976	0·0880	ECU's
1977	0·102	ECU's
1978	0·112	ECU's
1979	0·121	ECU's
1980	0·140	ECU's
1981	0·164	ECU's
1982	0·197	ECU's
1983	0·219	ECU's
1984	0·228	ECU's
1985	0·236	ECU's
1986	0·253	ECU's
1987	0·254	ECU's
1988	0·241	ECU's

N.B. Since 1975 all rates have been set in European Currency Units, the present value of which is £0·64.

The amount levied on production for British Scales deep-mines and opencast mines since 1973 has been:

£ thousand

Financial year	Deep-mines	Opencast mines
1972-73	594	41
1973-74	1,833	158
1974-75	2,759	202
1975-76	3,287	288
1976-77	5,098	485
1977-78	5,676	684
1978-79	6,302	754
1979-80	6,885	759
1980-81	6,503	910
1981-82	7,914	1,026
1982-83	9,555	1,255
1983-84	9,192	1,292
1984-85	2,943	1,368
1985-86	10,390	1,458
1986-87	11,871	1,717
1987-88	11,106	1,902

Figures for licensed mines are not available, but a number are thought to fall below the threshold for paying the levy. The total contribution would be small as licensed mines produce less than 2·5 million tonnes of coal per annum.

SCOTLAND

Audiological Centres

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the number of people waiting for appointments at audiological centres in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Ear, Nose and Throat Patients

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes there have been in the numbers on ear, nose and throat in-patient waiting lists in Scotland between 1982 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of persons on ENT in-patient waiting lists for NHS hospitals in Scotland at 30 September in each year is as follows.

Year	Number
1982	13,352
1983	14,598
1984	13,918
1985	13,659
1986	14,786
1987	13,811

Capital Expenditure (Glasgow)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about problems faced by Glasgow district council following the change of definition of capital expenses, and the implication for the council's ability to finance vehicle and equipment purchases; if he will agree to make a further permanent adjustment to the council's basic capital allocation to take account of the different treatment of such expenditure in the council's accounts of previous years.

Mr. Lang: Glasgow district council and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities have made representations about the Definition of Capital Expenses (Scotland) Order 1987. Glasgow district council's capital consent allocation for 1988-89 takes account of such capital expenses financed from current revenues as the district council itself reported in earlier years. I have explained to the council and to the convention that we have applied this procedure consistently to all authorities. In Glasgow the amounts involved were small, and the previous practice irregular. Any increase in Glasgow's capital allocation for 1988-89 now would be at the expense of other authorities and I cannot see any justification for that.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the net capital expenditure allocations including capital met from current revenue for general services in each of the years 1985-86 to 1988-89 expressed per head of population for (a) Glasgow district council, (b) the average Scottish district and (c) the district with the highest figure.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table.

Capital consent allocation expressed per head of population for:

	1985-86 £	1986-87 £	1987-88 £	1988-89 £
(a) Glasgow district council	6·54	5·86	5·45	5·87
(b) The average figure for Scottish district councils[1]	7·177	7·60	7·74	7·96
(c) The district with the highest per capita figure	15·91	17·35	19·10	19·10

---

Health Authorities (Nurses)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names and addresses of (a) all nurse members on health authorities and special health authorities and (b) generalist members on health authorities who are nurses.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

Argyll and Clyde Health Board
Mr. J. D. Barnett, Lochgilphead—generalist member

Borders Health Board
Mrs. F. M. Nisbet, Innerleithen—nurse member

Dumfries and Galloway Health Board

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the total number of written representations he has received in support of the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association's application for a revenue grant under section 10(1) of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968; and whether his Department has yet reached a decision.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 4 July 1988]: I have received 22 letters about the funding of the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association in Scotland in the last few months. The association already knows that it has not proved possible to pay a grant in 1988-89, but the case for the following financial year will certainly receive careful consideration if an application is made at the appropriate time.

Fish Farms (Pesticides)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions the pesticide Nuvan 500 EC was used on salmonid fish farms in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 June 1988]: No records are maintained centrally of the level of use of pesticides on fish farms.

DEFENCE

United States Forces

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the United States forces locations in the United Kingdom which are, or will be, connected to the digital European backbone system, indicating which will be user sites and which will be repeater sites;

(2) if he will list all United States unmanned military facilities similar to that at Rugby in the form of his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton of 20 June, Official Report, columns 431-32.

Mr. Freeman: The digital European backbone microwave communications system is a defence communications system for United States forces supporting NATO. It also provides communications for other allied nations, including the United Kingdom. However, on security grounds, I am not prepared to list all the sites in the system.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role does the unmanned United States relay station at Rugby play within NATO.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing to add to my answer of 23 June 1988 to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short), at column 716.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those military facilities in the United Kingdom which are under joint United Kingdom-United States command.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are no military bases or facilities in the United Kingdom under joint United Kingdom-United States command.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military construction projects at installations in the United Kingdom used by United States forces for which he has been informed that funding in fiscal year 1988 has been given.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I understand that funding in fiscal year 1988 has been given for the following United States military construction projects:

RAF Alconbury:
Squadron operations facility—chemical warfare protection
Installation of fire suppression system

RAF Bentwaters:
Office accommodation
Medical logistics storage

RAF Chicksands:
Communications upgrade

RAF Croughton:
Alter/add to water distribution system

RAF Lakenheath:
Base operations building
Control Tower
Combat arms range
Base supply storage
Post Office

RAF Welford:
Air based ground defence munitions storage

RAF Wethersfield:
Communications upgrade
Medical logistics storage

RAF Woodbridge:
Accommodation for unaccompanied enlisted personnel

Arms Exports

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the Government will not disclose any information on specific arms export contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Members for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell) and for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 28 June 1988.

Chile (Arms Sales)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to ensure that arms purchased by the Chilean Government at previous Army equipment exhibitions have not subsequently been used against the civilian population in Chile; if he will make it his policy that the Chilean Government are not represented at this year's exhibition; what representations he has received on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Human rights considerations are taken fully into account before a decision is made on whether or not a proposed sale to Chile or any other country should go ahead. We take great care to ensure that we do not supply items that in our judgment are likely to be used for internal repression; and we are not aware of any British defence equipment being used for this purpose in Chile. A number of representations have been received expressing concern about invitations to the British Army equipment exhibition issued to individuals from countries with questionable human rights records. However, it has been the policy of this and previous Administrations not to release details of invitations to individuals or their countries.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the minimum permitted height for fixed-wing military aircraft operating over the landward portions of (a) the Garvie Island danger area, D 803, (b) the Barry Budon danger area, D 604 and (c) the Lulworth danger area, D 026;

(2) what is the minimum permitted height for fixed-wing military aircraft operating in the Salisbury Plain danger areas, D 123, D 124, D 125, D 126 and D 128.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

a. when the range is active at Garvie Island, aircraft with the exception of those participating in the exercise must not fly below 40,000 ft;

b. when the danger area is activated at Barry Buddon training area, a minimum operating height exists of 1,500 ft, except for parachute flying, where drops from 500 ft may be authorised by the range commandant;

c. from Monday to Friday, between 0800 and 1800, when the Lulworth range danger area is activated, aircraft must fly above 15,000 ft;

d. on Salisbury Plain danger area D 123, the minimum is 50,000 ft when activated; for area D 124 no one may enter the area from 0800 to 2000 from Monday to Friday as the danger height is unlimited when the area is active from 2000 to 0800 the minimum height is 30,000 ft when in use; for area D 125 the minimum is 50,000 ft when active; area D 128 has a minimum operating height of 1,400 ft when in use.

The information given in my reply to the hon. Member on 23 June, at column 717, relating to minimum separation distance and to transit of the areas with prior authority is equally applicable to all the above areas. However, on some ranges, aircraft may descend below the 250 ft MSD during their approach to a target.

NATO

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those United Kingdom forces specified in NATO force goals but not assigned to NATO command in time of crisis or war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Details of NATO force goals are classified.

USAF (Flight Diversions)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the reasons for the diversion of flights by United States air force F-111s from RAF Upper Heyford over the village of Steeple Aston.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 20 June 1988, at column 221.

Central Ordnance Depot, Donnington (Fire)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to receive the report of his Department's inquiry into the fire at Central Ordnance Depot, Donnington.

Mr. Freeman: The board of inquiry has been tasked with producing its report by 15 August. However, progress is dependent on that of the inquiries of the civil police and there is therefore a possibility that the board may not be able to report by that date. I expect to receive a copy of the report soon after its completion.

Michael Tighe

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requests have been received from the coroner for Armagh for the attendance of (a) military and (b) civilian personnel as witnesses and for the production of written or taped evidence in connection with the inquest into the death of Michael Tighe in 1982; what response has been made to those requests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My Department has received no such requests.

Military Stores (Fires)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which recommendations arising from inquiries into fires at military stores since 1979 have not yet been fully implemented, giving the reasons in each case.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 June 1988]: A comprehensive programme of fire protection improvements has been developed for military stores. These include dispersal of the more valuable stocks and compartmentation of storage buildings together with the introduction of enhanced detection and suppression systems, although the value of the latter would be limited in buildings where the contents are stacked intensively with high racking.

EMPLOYMENT

Caravans and Home Parks

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs are provided by the caravans and home parks industry.

Mr. Lee: Information relating specifically to the number of jobs provided by the caravans and home parks industry is not available. However, figures are available for all tourist or short-stay accommodation other than hotels, which includes caravans and home parks. The number of jobs in the industry is highly seasonal and to reflect this the following table gives the information at quarterly intervals during 1987.

Employees in employment in all tourist or short-stay accommodation other than hotels:

1987	Number
March	14,000
June	32,000
September	33,000
December	13,000

Notes:

1. The estimates shown in the table are subject to considerable potential estimation errors due to the relatively small number of employees in the industry.
2. The estimates include all employees in camping and caravan sites, holiday camps and other tourist or short-stay accommodation. (SIC 80 Activity Heading 6670).

In addition to the estimates given above, the census of employment showed that there were 4,000 employees employed in caravan manufacture in September 1984. Later estimates are not available.

Beach Erosion

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what studies he has conducted into the economic impact on tourism of beach erosion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I understand that my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has commissioned research on the economic impact of coastal erosion. This research includes an investigation into the effects on tourism.

Management Extension Programmes

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many management extension programmes were organised by the Manpower Services Commission in Keswick during 1987; which host firms participated; how many weeks each management extension programme lasted; how many participants found permanent employment within six months of completing their management extension programmes; and how many participants found permanent employment with their host firm.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 29 June 1988]: No management extension programmes were organised in Keswick during 1987.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people participating in management extension programmes organised by the Manpower Services Commission found employment with their host firms since management extension programmes began.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 29 June 1988]: The management extension programme started in 1980. The statistics requested are only available for the years from 1985-86 and are set out below.

Years	Persons
1985-86	108
1986-87	138
1987-88	84

Up to September 1987.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many host firms have participated in the management extension programmes organised by the Manpower Services Commission in each year since management extension programmes began;

(2) what is the total number of host firms which have participated in management extension programmes organised by the Manpower Services Commission since management extension programmes began.

Mr. Cope [holding reply 29 June 1988]: These statistics are not held centrally, and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many management extension programmes organised by the Manpower Services Commission have lasted for 12 weeks for each year since management extension programmes began.

Mr. Cope [holding reply 29 June 1988]: This information is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the total number of management extension programmes organised by the Manpower Services Commission in each year since management extension programme began;

(2) how many people have participated in management extension programmes organised by the Manpower Services Commission since management extension programmes began.

Mr. Cope [holding reply 29 June 1988]: The total number of people who have participated in management extension programmes in each year since the programme began is

Years	Persons
1980-81	50
1981-82	32
1982-83	123
1983-84	493
1984-85	764
1985-86	1,695
1986-87	2,470
1987-88	2,198

A separate programme is organised for each participant in the management extension programme.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, pursuant to his answer of 27 May, Official Report, column 393, the maximum disregarded sum of £250 and the weekly premiums of £10 to £12 will be treated as income for tax purposes when assessing the tax status of a claimant entering employment subsequent to finishing employment training.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to her on 21 June at column 508.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made of those qualifying for transitionsl protection under the housing benefit scheme who will not apply therefor; what publicity he has undertaken to maximise take-up; how much of that has been made available in minority languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have not estimated what the level of take-up will be. Leaflet RR4 ("Housing Benefit—New Rules") is available from a number of agencies including the transitional payments unit, DHSS local offices, local authorities and post offices. This leaflet explains who can qualify and it contains an application form for dispatch by Freepost to the unit. A national press advertising campaign was carried out during the week commencing 23 May which, as well as explaining the transitional payments scheme, publicised the Freepost and Freeline services. I am considering a further campaign this month.

The material has been published in English only.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the number of students affected during the academic year 1987-88 by changes in housing benefit regulations and the average amount of benefit lost per student.

Mr. Portillo: We published estimates of the impact of the social security reforms in October 1987. There is no analysis of the impact on students specifically.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many voluntary advice agencies in Bradford, which have contacted the special Glasgow housing benefit unit for supplies of application forms for those wanting help after losing more than £2·50 a week, have received the quantity of forms requested;

(2) what discussions are taking place with local authorities, housing associations and other organisations, about the distribution of application forms for help to those who have lost more than £2·50 in housing benefit; and why the Glasgow unit was unable to supply Bradford council with a request for 17,000 application forms it required to circulate to Bradford people it had identified as being eligible for help.

Mr. Michael Portillo [holding answer 22 June 1988]: The transitional payments unit in Glasgow is able to issue application forms in response to requests from individuals through the Freepost and Freeline services. At the beginning of June we issued all local authorities with an initial supply of leaflets and at the same time we informed them of the address of the marketing firm from which further copies could be obtained. This address was given to local authorities again in circular HB88(7) which was issued to all local authorities on 1 June.

No record is held of the number of leaflet requests received from advice agencies in Bradford but all are being met in full with no restriction on the numbers issued; 17,000 leaflets were issued to Bradford council on 29 June 1988.

As made clear in previous answers and in the press campaign, the application form for transitional payments (leaflet RR4: "Housing Benefit—New Rules") is available from a variety of sources including DHSS offices, local authorities and post offices.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange an early media advertising campaign to advise people who have lost more than £2·50 housing benefit a week and eligible for assistance what action they need to take to apply for help; and if he will ensure that newspaper media advertising includes coupons for an applicant to send to his Department to apply for help.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 June 1988]: A national press publicity campaign was carried out during the week commencing 23 May. These advertisements gave details of the transitional payments and the changes to capital rules as well as announcing the availability of leaflet RR4 ("Housing Benefit—New Rules"), which contains an application form. I am considering a further campaign this month.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many leaflets have been printed giving advice about how people who have lost more than £2·50 housing benefit can apply for help; how many application forms applicants are required to complete; how many forms of each type have been printed; how many such forms have been supplied to the Glasgow unit; how many forms have been despatched by the Glasgow unit; and what arrangements have been made for more application forms to be printed.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 June 1988]: A total of 8·5 million copies of leaflet RR4 ("Housing Benefit—New Rules"), which gives information about housing benefit transitional payments, and contains an application form, have been printed. Each person is required to complete only one application form and return it to the transitional payments unit in Glasgow. Copies of the leaflet are available from the unit but also from local DHSS offices, local authorities, post offices and voluntary agencies. 60,000 copies of leaflet RR4 have been supplied to the unit and 37,000 have been issued. As current stocks are plentiful, there are no plans to reprint the leaflet at present.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the special unit set up to handle claims for discretionary payments in respect of his Department's claimants who have lost more than £2·50 weekly as a result of the housing benefit reforms is now expected to be fully operational; when constituents in South Hams will be able to claim; where the unit will be based; how long the claims will take to process; whether they will be backdated to 1 April; and what factors have delayed the establishment of the unit.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 27 June 1988]: I expect the transitional payments unit in Glasgow to be fully operational this month and the first payments issued will include arrears from April. Leaflets RR4 ("Housing Benefit—New Rules") have been available for several weeks from DHSS local authorities, local authorities, post offices and through our Freepost and Freeline services. These contain an application form to be returned to the unit. The processing time will depend upon the rate and number of applications received.

War Widows

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will instigate the automatic award of war widows' pensions to the widows of all men who are in receipt of a war disablement pension and who die aged 70 years or over leaving a widow aged 65 years or over.

Mr. Scott: War widows pensions are awarded where the husband's death was due to or substantially hastened by service in the armed forces. War widows are paid significantly higher rates of pension than other widows and also receive age allowances and other preferential treatment. This can only be justified where the cause of death is clearly related to service in the forces.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps have been taken to implement the recommendation of the National Audit Office's 1987 report on competitive tendering for support services in the National Health Service, that his Department should ensure that factors which could restrict the scope for competition in laundry tendering, are identified.

Mrs. Currie: Detailed guidance has been issued to health authorities by the Department, most recently last November, which seeks to ensure that all tendering for laundry and other services is carried out even-handedly and in a way that encourages fair competition. Copies have been placed in the Library. Where complaints of unfair competition arise, they will be followed up in the first instance by the appropriate regional health authority, and will then come to the Department if unresolved.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent health authorities are required to publish the criteria by which they evaluate proposals for competitive tendering; and what steps he has taken to assess whether such criteria are generally reasonable.

Mrs. Currie: Departmental guidance to health authorities includes the framework to be used for the comparison of the costs of tenders received, and the other action to be taken, and factors to be considered, in the overall evaluation of tenders. Copies of the most recent guidance have been placed in the Library. Authorities are expected to brief unsuccessful tenderers as fully as possible on how the contract decision was reached, and why their bids were not successful. Regional health authorities need to be informed of cases where the lowest tender is not accepted, and will consult the Department where any doubt arises over the decision taken.

Benefits

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the number of applications for (a) invalid care allowance, and (b) family credit received daily at the invalid care allowances unit, Palatine house, Lancaster road, Preston and the family credit unit, Government buildings, Warbreck house, Blackpool, respectively; what is the average length of time taken to process a correctly completed application form at each office; and what is the total number of applications for these benefits currently waiting to be processed.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is shown in the table.

Benefit/ Allowance	Average daily intake[1]	Average clearance time[1]	Claims awaiting decisions[2]
Invalid care allowance	228	20·3 weeks	[3]25,956
Family credit	2,500	5·1 weeks	[4]74,500

[1] At May 1988.

[2] At 24 June 1988.

[3] Includes some 5,025 cases awaiting decision on the disabled person's entitlement to attendance allowance.

[4] Includes some 35,000 claims where initial action has commenced and replies to enquiries are awaited.

Departmental Rent Arrears

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a current estimate of the rent arrears owed by his Department to charitable and voluntary organisations providing hostel accommodation for the single homeless.

Mr. Portillo: I regret the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Retinitis Pigmentosa

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what treatments are available for Retinitis pigmentosa; what advice his Department has given to general medical practitioners about this disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Treatment of retinitis pigmentosa, which is a congenital degenerative disease of the eye, will be for the clinical judgment of the consultant in charge of the individual patient's case. This is not a matter on which the Department would give advice.

Audiological Consultants

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the number of audiological consultants currently employed by the National Health Service, by region.

Mr. Newton: The latest available information is set out in the table.

Audiological Centres

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has as to the number of people waiting for appointments at audiological centres, by regional health authority;

(2) what information he has to the average waiting time for an appointment at a specialised audiological centre.

Mr. Tony Newton: I regret that the information is not available centrally.

Single-parent Families

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) single parents, and (b) persons in single-parent families there were in (i) 1979 and (ii) in the current year; and how many in (a) and (b) were dependant on state or family support.

Mr. Portillo: The figures show the most recent information available. Details of the number of persons in single parent families are not available by benefit but the average number of dependent children per family in lone parent families is estimated at 1·6 for 1982-84.

	1979	1984
Number of lone parent families[1]	815,000	940,000
Number of lone parent families receiving supplementary benefit or FIS at 31 December[2]	363,000	598,000
[Number of lone parents receiving one-parent benefit	381,000	517,000]

[1] Based on a sample survey from the GHS and averaged over the appropriate three years (see "One Parent Families in GB" Population Trends 45 pp 5-13 HMSO 1986.)

Dental Hospitals (Funding)

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to ensure that funding identified for dental hospitals under the service increment for teaching allocation is reaching the teaching hospitals concerned.

Mr. Newton: The service increment for teaching is separately identified as a cash sum in regional health authority allocations. It is for the regions to determine how their SIFT allowances should be apportioned between districts, as part of the wider process of planning and funding the full range of teaching districts and teaching hospital activity within their region.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will express the number of unemployed claimants and their dependants as a percentage of all claimants for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Portillo: The table shows the number of unemployed supplementary benefit claimants and their dependants as a percentage of all supplementary benefit claimants and their dependants.

There was no annual statistical inquiry in 1985; the one due in December that year was deferred until February 1986.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of claimants and dependants on supplementary benefit at the latest available date.

Mr. Portillo: In May 1987, the latest date for which this information is available, 4,896,000 claimants had a total of 3,309,000 dependents.

Health Authorities (Nurses)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names and addresses of (a) all nurse members on health authorities and special health authorities and (b) generalist members on health authorities who are nurses.

Mrs. Currie: The names of nurse members of regional health authorities and of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals are listed as follows. It is not our practice to disclose other personal information.

We do not systematically update information about the occupation of health authority members. I am unable therefore to supply details of any other members who may have a nursing background.

District health authority members are appointed by the relevant regional health authority and information about them is not held centrally. The hon. Member should, however, be able to obtain the information sought from the regional health authority chairman concerned.

Intensive Care Nurses

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many nurses with special skills required for children's intensive care are employed in each of the regional health authorities, and by hospital; how many posts are funded, region by region; and how many of those are currently unfilled;

(2) what he has done to encourage trained children's intensive care nurses who have left the profession to return; how many of those currently employed have returned; and what special arrangements have been agreed to provide transport, flexible working hours and child care facilities.

Mr. Newton: Nationally, the recent pay awards and the new clinical grading structure should encourage specialised nurses who have left the profession to return and a NHS/DHSS working group on equal opportunities for women will in particular be making recommendations on managing the career break. Information on the number of nurses who have returned to the service is not available centrally.

We are encouraging health authorities to be more flexible in their working arrangements, but it is for the individual authorities to decide what facilities need to be provided for their staff in the light of the local situation.

Information on the number of nurses holding specific qualifications and the number of funded and unfilled posts is not collected centrally. A survey of nurses in high technology care, which includes paediatric intensive care and special care baby units is currently being carried out by the Department and will provide additional information later this year. The total number of nursing and midwifery staff working in paediatric intensive care units and special care baby units in regional health authorities and special health authorities in England is given in the table. Information by hospital could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why he has postponed the commencement of the Birmingham training course for intensive care nurses for children from July, as agreed in February, to autumn 1988.

Mr. Newton: The start of the training course has not been postponed. In February this year I informed the hon. Member that the start date had been brought forward from January 1989 to October 1988. The course requires approval by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, which I am glad to say was given on 15 June.

Orthopaedic Waiting List (Oswestry)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people from North Staffordshire district health authority are on the orthopaedic list at Oswestry hospital; and what is the average length of time for waiting.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Shropshire health authority for the information.

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (Disablement)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received the first report of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys survey of disablement; and whether he will place a copy in the Library forthwith.

Mr. Scott: The Department received at the end of May the first report by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on its surveys of disablement. I refer the hon. Member to my replies to her on 21 January at column *850*and on 7 June at column 575 so far as the availability of the report is concerned.

NHS (School Leavers)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of school leavers were recruited by the National Health Service in 1987-88, or the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: Details of the number of school leavers who enter the NHS directly from school are not available centrally.

Information by age distribution of under 18 and 18 to 20-year-olds employed in the NHS is shown in the table together with the number of school leavers expected to be available for employment. (Both Great Britain).

Family Practitioner Services

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost per head of the population of family practitioner services in 1987-88, or the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: Gross expenditure on family practitioner services, including the costs of administration, is estimated to have amounted to £91 per head of population in England in 1987-88.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the total cost of family practitioner services was attributable to management and administration in 1987-88, or the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: It is estimated that 2·3 per cent. of gross expenditure on the family practitioner services in England in 1987-88 was accounted for by the related administration costs, which comprises those of the associated administrative bodies (mainly family practitioner committees, the Prescription Pricing Authority and the Dental Estimates Board).

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the total cost of hospital and community health services was attributable to management and administration in 1987-88, or the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: Following is information for hospital and community health services derived from annual accounts submitted to the Department for 1986-87 (the latest year available):

Expenditure on headquarters administration £000	As a proportion of total current expenditure per cent.	As a proportion of total expenditure (Current and Capital) per cent.
434,739	4·21	3·86

Figures for 1987-88 will be available in the autumn.

Source:

Annual financial accounts of regional and district health authorities in England and those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals.

Notes:

1. Hospital and community health services includes ambulance, blood transfusion, mass radiography and other services.

2. Expenditure on headquarters administration includes all current expenditure on the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines (including general managers) employed at headquarters levels and their office costs and overheads. It excludes the cost of clerical and secretarial support staff employed in departments at hospital and unit levels: such costs are regarded as operational.

3. Expenditure by certain bodies and special health authorities providing central services for hospital and community health services (for example, the Central Blood Laboratories Authority and the Netional Health Service Training Authority) is excluded.

District Health Authorities (Spending)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has now received the returns from district health authorities on spending by specialty referred to in his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 709; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The new annual returns providing information on district health authorities' spending by specialty groups are in course of receipt by the Department along with those authorities' annual accounts and other financial returns for 1987-88. When complete, this material (which is in part subject to audit) will require analysis within the Department and hence information for 1987-88 is expected to be available in the autumn.

I will write to my hon. Friend when the information he seeks is available.

Medical Secretaries (Pay)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he proposes to take any action to lift the pay levels of medical secretaries; whether he proposes any review to assess the skills of medical secretaries and their importance to the National Health Service; what study he has made of the effects of different pay levels in different areas for medical secretaries with particular regard to Sheffield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The pay and conditions of medical secretaries in the NHS are matters for negotiation in the administrative and clerical staffs Whitley Council. On 3 June the staff side agreed to recommend to constituent organisations an offer to increase pay from 1 April and to continue discussions on restructuring which would introduce a facility for some local flexibility in pay. I hope an early settlement will be reached. The grading of posts is a matter for individual employing authorities. In 1987 a working party chaired by the Department's deputy chief medical officer reviewed the secretarial and support services for hospital medical and dental staff, and concluded that the existing grades provided for an adequate reflection of the skills and importance attaching to the duties.

Single Homeless People

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the voluntary and charitable organisations providing hostel accommodation and support services for single homeless people; and if he will give estimates of Government funding made available to each.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give (a) a current estimate of the number of single homeless people who are registered with a history of psychiatric illness and (b) estimates for each year since 1983.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available in the form requested. During the first quarter of 1988 approximately 3 per cent. of the 31,100 households accepted as homeless by local authorities in England were regarded as vulnerable on the grounds of mental illness. This information is not precise enough to enable valid comparisons with earlier years to be made.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give an estimate of the funds he has made available for each year since 1983 to provide the single homeless with training and employment incentives.

Mr. Portillo: We make no such provision. Training and employment incentives are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Single Payments

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications were made, and how many were successful, for supplementary benefit single payments in May 1985, May 1986 and May 1987, in each of his Department's local offices in the counties of Cleveland, Cumbria, Durham, Northumbria and Tyne and Wear.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 27 June 1988]: Information concerning the number of applications made for single payments is not kept and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The table includes the number of decisions made and the number of single payments given during the four weeks ending 4 June 1985, 3 June 1986 and 2 June 1987, respectively. The local offices shown are those situated within the counties requested, but office and county boundaries are not conterminous.

[1] The figures for 1987 are provisional and subject to amendment.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have incomes of less than £150 a week; how many pensioners have incomes of less than £100 per week; and what would be the cost to the Exchequer if the tax threshold for (a) a married couple were raised to £120 per week, (b) single persons to £80 per week and (c) pensioners to £100 per week.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

The latest year for which information from the family expenditure survey is available is 1985. In that year, about 13 million married couples and single people had gross incomes under £136 per week and, of these, about 3 million were pensioners with incomes under £91 per week. These levels of income are broadly equivalent in real terms to those specified in the question for 1988. Gross income includes all sources of income, including social security benefits, and is before deduction of income tax or national insurance.

The direct revenue cost in a full year at 1988-89 levels of income increasing personal tax allowances, above the levels proposed for 1988-89, to the levels specified in the question are estimated to be as follows:

	£ billion
(a) married man's allowance, including age allowances, to £6,240	6
(b) single allowance, including wife's earned income allowance and age allowances, to £4,160	5
(c) further increase in single age allowances to £5,200	0·2

THE ARTS

Leicester

39. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to visit Leicester to discuss funding with local arts organisations.

Mr. Luce: I hope to visit Leicester in the autumn and as part of that visit expect to hold discussions with the director of East Midlands Arts.

Library Sites (Redevelopment)

40. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to issue new guidelines to local authorities on the redevelopment of library sites by the private sector.

Mr. Luce: Such developments will be subject to the regulations and guidelines for local authorities issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, and I do not propose to issue separate guidelines.

National Collections

41. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has had further recent discussions with the trustees of the national collections about the display of items held in store.

Mr. Luce: I am presently meeting each of the national museums and galleries in turn to discuss their corporate plans. The question of improving access to their collections, in particular those items in store, is a feature of these discussions.

Regional Arts

42. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Minister of the Arts what progress has been made with regard to increasing regional involvement in the arts.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council promotes arts developments in the regions and the regional arts associations play a leading part in bringing together local authorities, business interests and individuals to foster all art forms. I have recently appointed three regional representatives to the Arts Council, to ensure that regional views are fully represented there.

National Sound Archives (Noise Reduction System)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what have been the total development costs to date of the noise reduction system for the national sound archives; and what is the remit of this development.

Mr. Luce: The CEDAR system at the British Library's national sound archive has cost £40,000. The remit for this development was to obtain the best possible system for preserving the sound content of the collections, and to achieve successful commercial sales of similar equipment for the financial benefit of the archive and the British Library.

National Musem of Photography, Television and Film (Bradford)

44. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what are the latest figures for attendance at the national museum of photography, television and film in Bradford.

Mr. Luce: The number of visitors to the national museum of photography, film and television in 1987 was 706,319.

Polymer Book Preservation Programme

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what have been the total development costs to date of the polymer book preservation programme; and what it the remit of this development.

Mr. Luce: Grants to external contractors for the graft co-polymerisation paper strengthening programme have totalled £290,000. The remit for this development was to satisfy the special conservation needs of the British Library which cannot be met by the use of processes available elsewhere.

National Heritage Memorial Fund

46. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister for the Arts what progress the national heritage memorial fund has made in saving major works of arts for the nation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Lord Charteris and the trustees of the NHMF are to be congratulated on an outstanding record of achievement to date. The trustees have chosen carefully among the hundreds of applications for assistance. I commend their annual reports to my hon. Friend for the descriptions of the wide range of land, buildings, artefacts and works of art saved for the nation with contributions from the fund. I have every confidence in their continuing success. The table illustrates the major works of art which have been saved with NHMF assistance.

Library Services (Sheffield)

47. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will visit Sheffield to see the range of services offered by the city council's libraries committee.

Mr. Luce: I have no immediate plans to do so. But the director of libraries at Sheffield is a valued member of my Library and Information Services Council.

Tourism

48. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the contribution of the arts to inward tourism to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce: A full estimate of the contribution of the arts to inward tourism will be published soon by the Policy Studies Institute, as part of a larger study. Its preliminary figures suggest that the level of expenditure by overseas tourists in Britain specifically induced by the arts was £1·5 billion in 1985-86.

Business Sponsorship

49. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on his plans to encourage business sponsorship of the arts.

Mr. Luce: I have received great support from both the arts and business world, whom I meet at many sponsorship receptions and arts events.

51. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what business sponsorship has been received for opera in the regions in the last two years.

Mr. Luce: Figures for all forms of business sponsorship of opera in the regions are not available. Under the business sponsorship incentive scheme, opera in the regions has received £74,568 in awards in the last two years to match £132,000 of new sponsorship.

Museums and Galleries (Opening Hours)

50. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to visit a museum or gallery in London to discuss their opening hours.

Mr. Luce: I am at present undertaking a series of meetings with the national museums and galleries sponsored by my Department to discuss their corporate plans. These discussions cover the full range of each institution's activities. I encourage museums and galleries to extend their opening hours where this is feasible and there have been a number of encouraging developments in this direction.

Scottish Arts Council

52. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the Scottish Arts Council; and what topics they discussed.

Mr. Luce: I met the chairman of the Scottish Arts Council during my visit to the Edinburgh international festival in August last year. We discussed arts developments in Scotland and their funding.

Nottingham

53. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Arts what measures he will bring forward to encourage the arts in Nottingham, north.

Mr. Luce: Encouragement of the arts in Nottingham is the responsibility of East Midlands Arts, in partnership with the Arts Council and the local authorities. I support the Arts Council's endeavour to develop the arts in the regions and I hope that arts bodies in Nottingham, as elsewhere in the region, will be able to take full advantage of the council's incentive funding scheme, for which I have made £3·5 million available this year.

Tate Gallery of the North

54. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts what educational and library services will be offered by the new Tate Gallery of the north in Liverpool.

Mr. Luce: The Tate Gallery, Liverpool, offers an extensive and flexible education service accessible to any school or group wanting to use the gallery for educational purposes. The schools programmes have been designed to respond to a full range of curriculum demands. A series of workshops will be offered each term for teachers. Throughout August there will be summer schools for sixth formers. From September a community trailer will tour local schools. The education department is currently developing links with the city college and Liverpool university's adult education programme. A special project on sculpture is planned for the autumn, linked to the gallery's three-year sculpture exhibition. Workshops for the disabled and those with special needs are also planned.

In addition, the education department provides a comprehensive range of literature for exhibition and organises lunchtime and evening lectures.

The gallery's reference library continues to grow and already provides users with a variety of books donated by publishers and an extensive range of catalogues. A video library with five screens is also available.

Apollo Group IV Facsimile System

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what have been the total development costs to date of the Apollo group IV facsimile system; and what is the remit for this development.

Mr. Luce: Development of Apollo equipment has been the responsibility of the European Space Agency, not the British Library.

British Library

43. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much Government funding he now intends to give to the British Library project in the next three years.

Mr. Luce: The funding authorised for 1988-89 is £33·1 million.

Planned funding for 1989-90 and 1990-91 is £41·5 million and £46·2 million respectively.

45. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the benefits arising from the new British Library complex at St. Pancras when it is fully operational.

Mr. Luce: The new building at St. Pancras will bring together under one roof the majority of the British Library's London-based reference collections which now occupy 19 buildings in London. The housing of these priceless collections in a controlled, pollution-free environment for the first time will bring immense benefits in respect of their conservation. It will also bring considerable advantages for scholars who will be able to study different subjects in one building, and will benefit from much quicker delivery systems and modern technological aids. The new building should also enable the Library's management to operate more efficiently, and there will be other savings following the vacation of existing premises.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the total cost to date of automation of the British Library and Copyright Agency.

Mr. Luce: The total cost of automation in the British Library from 1981-82 to 1987-88 inclusive was £29·7 million. Figures for earlier years are not available. The copyright agency is not the responsibility of the British Library.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the total cost of development of, and the return on investment on, the British Library digital rare book copier compatible with Apollo group IV facsimile; and what is the remit for this development.

Mr. Luce: I am informed that the digital book copier is not compatible with group IV facsimile. The development of a group III compatible copier by external contractors cost £187,000. Six machines were produced for assessment and use. No further development is planned. The remit for this research and development project was to satisfy the special needs of the British Library and other research libraries for copying equipment which could not be met by commercially available products at that time.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what were the total development costs and return on investment in the British Library archivist book copier; and what was the remit for this development.

Mr. Luce: The development cost of the archivist book copier was £60,000. Royalties from commercial sales so far total £14,000 and sales are expected to continue for several years. The remit for this development was to satisfy the need for a copier which would minimise damage to the books.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much new open access accommodation has been provided for British Library readers at Holborn since 1972; and at what cost.

Mr. Luce: An extension to the reading room area of the lower ground floor at Holborn yielded an additional 400 linear feet of shelving and some additional seating at a cost of approximately £19,000 for 1984-85. Approximately 135 linear feet of open access shelving have been added by ad hoc reorganisation since 1985 at negligible cost.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the total cost to date of the first phase of the British Library, corn merchant's store conversion at Boston Spa.

Mr. Luce: The cost of the corn merchant's store conversion was £1·7 million for building and £609,500 for shelving (both including VAT).

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much, and what proportion, of the increase since the original estimate for the costs of the British Library's St. Pancras site buildings is attributable to (a) changes in value added tax regulations and (b) inflation.

Mr. Luce: The proportion and value of the increase (since the original estimate in 1979) for the stage under construction of the new British Library building attributable to (a) changes in VAT regulations is 3 per cent. of £3·82 million; and (b) inflation is 67 per cent. or £84·6 million.

The remainder of the difference between the two estimates is mainly in respect of design changes and the need to build in a higher risk contingency.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the extent to which the British Library's periodical collections meet the minimum documentation rule 34 of the patent co-operation treaty regulations.

Mr. Luce: The science reference and information service of the British Library takes all the periodicals in the list published in the "World International Patents Organisation Handbook on Patents Information and Technology" as updated to October 1987.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will itemise the total investment by the British Library in compact disc with read only memory technology.

Mr. Luce: The British Library has spent approximately £108,000 on CD-ROM equipment.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts why details of open access provisions to the science and technology holdings in the new British Library have not been made publicly available.

Mr. Luce: The final extent of open access provision for the science reference and information service (SRIS) in the British Library's new building will depend upon ministerial decisions about further construction. This is the subject of a feasibility study currently being undertaken.

Open access provision for the SRIS in the stage which has been authorised and is currently under construction will be 13 km of shelving and 178 reader seats.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts when the British Library's plans for business information will be published; and under what authority this collection has been formed.

Mr. Luce: The British Library's plans for business information will be published as part of the science reference and information service overall information plan in the context of the library's new strategic plan which is due for publication in 1989. General authority for the formation of the collection lies in clause 1(2) of the British Library Act which requires the board to manage the library as a national centre for reference, study, and bibliographical and other information services. Specific authority is derived from the recommendations of a working party on business information in 1980. Its membership comprised mainly external experts in the business field and the report was entitled "Business Information: the Role of the British Library". A revised edition was published by the British Library in 1982.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will take steps to ensure that the British Library provides date-stamped printed publications and abstracts of journals.

Mr. Luce: Publications (or in the case of patent specifications, registers) are stamped with the date of shelving at the science reference and information service (SRIS) as a service for those who need to be aware of the earliest dates of availability upholdable in courts of law. The service is particularly used in connection with novelty of patent applications. All journals including abstract journals received by the SRIS are date stamped and are generally shelved within 24 hours.

CIVIL SERVICE

Agencies

59. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether any further potential agencies have been identified in the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: I will report on the progress of the next steps initiative before the summer recess.

Offices (Ministerial Visits)

60. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service which Civil Service offices outside London he has visited in the last 12 months.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased that I have been able to visit nine Civil Service offices outside London in the period 30 June 1987 to 30 June 1988, details of which are as follows:

C88/3230

Civil Service Offices outside London visited by the Minister for the Civil Service between 30 June 1987 and 30 June 1988

	1987
Cabinet Office, Civil Service Commission, Basingstoke	15 July
Her Majesty's Treasury, Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, Norwich	17 July
Cabinet Office, Civil Service College, Sunningdale	12 October (also 9 November)
Department of Health and Social Security, National Health Service Auditors Office, Bristol	11 November
	1988
Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, VAT Central Unit, Southend	13 April
Department of Employment, Local Office, Birmingham (Kingsheath)	14 April
Royal Mint, Llantrisant	18 May
Scottish Office, Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Aberdeen	17 June
Department of Health and Social Security, Integrated Local Office, Leeds, East	30 June

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will issue guidance to the Departments of Trade and Industry, Employment and Health and Social Security on the efficient maintenance of staff records, so as to enable them to answer parliamentary questions on the educational background of senior civil servants without involving disproportionate cost, in a manner similar to other Government Departments.

Mr. Luce: No. This is a matter for individual Departments.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Dr. Reid: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to make a statement about the future of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans at present to make a further statement.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the fishing industry about the future funding of research and development in fisheries.

Mr. MacGregor: I met Dr. Balfour, deputy chairman of the Sea Fish Industry Authority, on 13 April when she and other senior figures from levy-funded bodies came to discuss industry funding of research in agriculture, fisheries and food.

Television Advertising (Levy)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the fishing industry regarding the proposed SFIA levy to fund television advertising.

Mr. Gummer: The Sea Fish Industry Authority proposes to increase its levy with effect from 1 April 1989. It is currently discussing its ideas with the sea fish industry before making a firm proposal in the autumn. I shall be informed of the industry's views once a formal proposal is made.

Farming Practices (Environmental Improvement)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning recent European Community proposals for environmental improvements in farming practices.

Mr. MacGregor: The EC Commission recently published a document entitled "Environment and Agriculture", which aims to establish guidelines for the development of future policies. At the Council of Agriculture Ministers on 13-17 June, the Commission invited Agriculture Ministers to consider the document. While acknowledging that a number of measures have already been adopted in the agricultural sector which serve to protect and enhance the environment, the Commission states its intention to bring forward additional proposals before the end of 1988.

Set-Aside

Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the response from the agricultural industry to his set-aside announcement.

Mr. MacGregor: My proposals have been broadly welcomed.

Organic Farming and Horticulture

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further proposals he has in relation to the future role of organic farming and horticulture.

Mr. Gummer: The future role of organic farming and horticulture will depend on demand in the market place. This is why the Government have placed particular emphasis on the setting of production standards for organic produce which, once agreed, are likely to exert a significant influence on retail sales. In addition, the needs of such production will continue to be considered alongside those of more conventional production systems.

EC Internal Market

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what preparations his Department is making for the operation of the internal market in the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 9 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) at column 675.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he has made an assessment of how the completion of the internal market in the European Community will affect the agricultural industry; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has made an assessment of how the completion of the internal market in the European Community will affect the food industry; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he has made an assessment of how the completion of the internal market in the European Community will affect the agricultural supply trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: There is much still to be done before the arrangements for the operation of a single market are fully in place, but the new market will clearly offer both wider opportunities and a challenge. It is too early to make a proper assessment, but the Government are encouraging all sectors of the industry to continue to make thorough policy to capitalise on the opportunities which will be provided by the single market.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his assessment of the impact of the movement towards the internal market on the agromonetary system of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I strongly support the Commission's objective of removing all mcas by 1992, since they are incompatible with a common internal market. The Commission and the Council have affirmed that the devaluations agreed at the recent price fixing are a first stage in that process, and the Commission has agreed that it will report in the autumn on the most appropriate means of completing it.

Food Prices

Mr. Madel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates his Department will be making of the effect of the current drought in the United States of America on British food prices, between now and 5 April 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department monitors continuously developments in agricultural and food markets. The drought in the United States is clearly severe, and is already affecting world commodity prices. It is, however, much too soon to be certain of the full impact on product markets given the existence of substantial stocks of some commodities.

In the case of cereals, price levels under CAP regimes remain substantially above those obtaining on world markets and this will insulate the United Kingdom market from much of the impact of firmer world prices. Higher soya bean prices are likely to affect the cost of feeding stuffs although the consequences for food retail prices will take time to work through the chain. Overall, the impact on the food retail prices index is likely to be modest over the next few months although for the longer term much will depend on the duration of the drought.

EC Price Review

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional spending was transferred from the European Economic Community to member states in consequence of the price review agreement; and if, in particular, he will explain the nature and extent of the additional direct payments to be made to sugar refiners.

Mr. MacGregor: The price review does not transfer any additional financial responsibility from the Community to member states. There are two new provisions for sugar cane refiners. One is for an aid (initially about 52p per tonne) which replaces a temporary compensation scheme and is wholly funded by the Community. The other authorises the United Kingdom to supplement the margins of its cane refiners further by up to about £3·28 per tonne of sugar imported under preferential terms from the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries. This aid is discretionary and therefore only 25 per cent. funded by the Community.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Commission has revealed the nature and extent of the management economies it intends to introduce as a means of keeping common agricultural policy expenditures in 1989 within the guidelines agreed at the European Council; and if it will be reporting to the Council on the implementation of these measures.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission has reduced by 12½ per cent. the rates of aid payable on skimmed milk used in animal feed and to manufacture casein. It has also cut the minimum level of skimmed milk powder incorporated in animal feed from 60 per cent. to 45 per cent. The Commission estimates that these measures will produce savings of 285 mecu (£191 million) in 1989. In addition, the Commission has reduced the provision for expenditure on export credits for sales of agricultural products to developing countries by 24 mecu (£16 million). The Commission is obliged by the new arrangements for tighter budget discipline to report monthly to the Council and European Parliament on developments in expenditure for each major agricultural product.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what increase in common agricultural policy expenditure has been estimated by the Council to take place in 1989 in consequence of the price review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission estimates that the price review will add 289 mecu (£194 million) to expenditure in 1989 compared to the proposals which were originally forwarded to the Council, but these additional costs will be more than offset by management economies.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the budgeted and actual expenditure on the common agricultural policy in 1987; and what is the budget figure for 1988 and 1989, respectively.

Mr. MacGregor: Expenditure on the guidance and guarantee sections of the common agricultural policy, including fisheries, is:

	mecu
1987 Supplementary and Amending Budget	24,101
1987 Outturn	[1]23,996
1988 Budget	[2]31,104
1989 Preliminary Draft Budget	[3]32,340

Notes:

[1] 4,535 mecu of guarantee expenditure in November and December 1987 could not be met from the 1987 Budget and will fall on the 1988 Budget.

[2] Covers guarantee expenditure from November 1987 to 15 October 1988. Includes provision of 1,240 mecu for depreciation of old stocks and a monetary reserve of 1,000 mecu.

[3] Covers guarantee expenditure from 16 October 1988 to 15 October 1989. Includes 640 mecu for depreciation of old stocks, 800 mecu for reimbursement of butter disposals in 1987-88 and a monetary reserve of 1,000 mecu.

Trees (Storm Damage)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to ensure that trees planted with the recently announced increased incentive payments for storm-damaged woodland replanting are appropriate replacements for those lost.

Mr. Gummer: All applications for grant-aid are carefully considered to ensure that the nature of the planting is appropriate to the site.

Rights of Way

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he is giving farmers about the maintenance of public rights of way in the countryside.

Mr. Gummer: My Department sent a booklet called "The Ploughing Code" to all farmers in England and Wales in 1986. This booklet sets out farmers' rights and responsibilities in relation to rights of way and forms the basis of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service's advice to farmers. It was published jointly with the Countryside Commission.

Public Houses (Tenant Security)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he intends to take following the representations of the Sheffield and District Licensed Victuallers Association with regard to the current lack of tenant security of those living in public houses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) on 14 June at column 135.

Wet Land Grazing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of land were converted from arable production to wet land grazing since 1985 under the Broads grazing land (Halvergate) conservation scheme.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 30 June 1988]: Five hectares of land were converted from arable production to permanent grassland within the area of the Broads grazing marshes conservation scheme 1985-87. However, the main objective of this experimental scheme was halting the conversion of grassland to arable and this was achieved. In the Broads environmentally sensitive area, which succeeded the experimental scheme, applications have been received to convert 83 hectares of arable land to grassland within the area covered by the earlier scheme.

EC Prices

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southend, East of 27 June, if he will publish the statement made by the Commissioner to the effect that the recent agreement on prices will conform to the 1989 guidelines; what is the size of the management economies which will be required to ensure this; and if these economies will include transferring financial responsibilities to member states.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 30 June 1988]: The statement was:

> "The Commission states that it is in a position to comply with the 1988 budget and the 1989 preliminary draft budget, and therefore the guideline, thanks to management measures such as, for example, less use of skimmed milk powder in animal feed."

The Commisson is now amending the 1989 preliminary draft budget to take account of the price package and savings from management economies which together will reduce expenditure by 20 mecu (£13·4 million). Management economies total 309 mecu (£207 million) and will not involve a transfer of financial responsibilities to member states.

EC Council (Price Cuts)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southend, East of 27 June, if he will publish a list of the price cuts agreed at the recent Council meeting which were agreed to ensure that the guidelines of the European Council will be adhered to; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 30 June 1988]: The price package includes a cut of 5·2 per cent. in the durum wheat intervention price as well as reductions in monthly increments for cereals rice and oilseeds. In addition, weakening of arrangements for beef intervention is estimated to be equivalent to a 4 to 5 per cent. price cut.

Green Pound

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the various green pound charges agreed at the recent meeting of the council.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 30 June 1988]: The green pound changes being proposed to take effect from 1 January 1989 are:

Sector	Existing green rate (1 ecu = £. . .)	New green rate (1 ecu = £. . .)
Crops	0·656148	0·675071
Pigmeat	0·704020	0·725849
Sheep	0·652575	0·671291
Other livestock products except beef	0·665557	0·685035

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the additional costs stemming from the green pound changes agreed at the recent meeting of the Council; and to what extent these will be borne by the European Economic Community member states and consumers, respectively.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 30 June 1988]: Changes to the green pound decided at the Council on 23-34 June will add 31 mecu to the Community budget in 1989, and increase United Kingdom public expenditure by about £5 million in 1988-89 and by about £50 million a year thereafter. The effect on consumers, which will be from the package as a whole, will be an increase in the retail prices index of about 0·04 per cent., once all the effects have worked through.

Organic Food

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, if in considering measures being taken to help the farming industry, he will give financial support to encourage organic food production and sales.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 28 June 1988]: This Department is already encouraging the development of organic food production in a number of ways; through our initiative on the United Kingdom register of organic food standards in setting production standards, through the provision of specialist advice; and through our general research programme which includes topics such as nitrogen fixation and biological control as well as specific projects on organic farming. We are also studying the scope for the implementation of the EC extensification scheme where conversion to organic farming may be a possible option. In addition, those farming organically benefit in the same way as other farmers from the various agricultural support measures.

Civil Servants (Conferences)

Mr. John: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Pontypridd, Official Report, 20 June, column 426, what is his policy in respect of civil servants addressing conferences and expressing views on agricultural matters which are not consonant with Her Majesty's Government policies.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 1 July 1988]: This is a matter for the internal management of my Department.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service (Recruitment)

61. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to promote late recruitment of university teaching and research staff into the Civil Service.

Mr. Brooke: University teaching and research staff can enter all competitions run by the Civil Service Commission on behalf of Government Departments, provided they meet the eligibility criteria established for individual schemes. All recruitment competitions are widely advertised and candidates are selected on merit, on the basis of fair and open competition. The Civil Service advertises vacancies in many disciplines, including lecturer and research officer, without an age limit.

Charitable Donations

62. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants are now using the payroll donation schemes for the purpose of making charitable donations.

Mr. Brooke: Two thousand one hundred and fifty.

Taxation Changes

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will identify the benefits to (a) single men and (b) married men with two children as a result of changes in taxation since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A single person on average male earnings pays £16·01 a week less in income tax than he would have had the 1978-79 income tax regime been kept in place and simply indexed for inflation. On the same basis, a married man on average male earnings pays £15·62 less. Child tax allowances are not included in the indexed 1978-79 income tax regime as they were being phased out.

Child Benefit

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many, and what proportion of, families with children receive more in child benefit than they pay out in income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is estimated that, in both 1987-88 and 1988-89, about 2 million families, between a quarter and a third of the total number of families claiming child benefit, will receive more in child benefit than they pay in income tax.

Postmasters

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to remove the liability to tax of gratuities for retiring postmasters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I assume that the hon. Member has in mind sub-postmasters rather than postmasters. The gratuity received by sub-postmasters when they retire is taxable because it forms part of their pay.

Income Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the reduction in income tax liability for each year since 1979 of the (a) top 1 per cent., (b) top 5 per cent., (c) top 10 per cent., (d) bottom 70 per cent., (e) bottom 60 per cent., (f) bottom 50 per cent., (g) bottom 30 per cent. and (h) bottom 10 per cent. of taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest estimates are given in the table. For each financial year shown in the table, the yield from the tax regime in that year is compared with the yield under the 1978-79 tax regime. All estimates are based on a provisional 1988-89 income base projected from the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and all tax regimes are indexed to 1988-89 levels according to the statutory formula. The comparison therefore allows for budgetary changes in income tax since 1978-79 but not for changes in definition or any other factors which might affect the income base.

[1] Based on 20,900,000 single people and married couples expected to pay tax in 1988-89 and excluding 1,100,000 who would pay tax under the revalorised 1978-79 regime.

[2] All information is in terms of tax units, i.e. married couples are counted as one and their incomes combined.

[3] Including reductions and/or increases for those paying tax in 1988-89 and reductions for other units who would pay tax under the revalorised regime for the year specified or 1978-79.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give (a) the number and proportion of people of pensionable age who are liable for income tax, (b) the total tax yield from people of pensionable age, (c) the average income of people of pensionable age before and after tax and (d) the average percentage of income paid in tax by people of pensionable age.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Provisional estimates for 1988-89 are given in the table. They refer to married couples in which at least one partner is aged 65 or over and single people aged 65 and over. All figures are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes.

Tax liability of aged married couples and single people, 1988-89

	Amount
Aged taxpayers liable to income tax	[1]2,350,000
Aggregate tax liability	£4·8 billion
Average income before tax[2]	£11,560
Average income after tax[2]	£9,530
Percentage of income paid in tax[2]	17·5 per cent.

[1] About one third of the total number of aged married couples and single people.

[2] By reference to those liable to income tax.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people eligible for, or in receipt of, age allowances are (a) on high marginal tax rates, (b) on basic rate tax or (c) pay no income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Provisional estimates for 1988-89 are as follows:

Married Couples and Single People Eligible for Age Allowance

	thousands
Liable at higher rate of tax	170
Liable at basic rate of tax only	2,180
Not liable	4,500

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the reduction in income tax liability on unearned income that will result from the Budget measures for (a) the top 1 per cent., (b) the top 5 per cent., (c) the top 20 per cent., (d) the bottom 70 per cent. and (e) the bottom 50 per cent. of taxpayers in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Provisional estimates are given in the table. All estimates are uncertain because they are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes. Also, the data on investment income from the survey have been adjusted to allow for investment income not reflected in the survey in some cases where basic rate liability is satisfied by deduction of tax at source. Figures for the top 20 per cent. and bottom 70 per cent. and 50 per cent. are particularly tentative.

[3] Includes 240,000 single people and married couples taken out of tax by increases in allowances over indexation.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what savings would be made if all mortgage interest relief was abolished; how many tax units receive mortgage interest tax relief; and what is the average cost per unit.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost of mortgage interest relief in 1988-89 is estimated to be about £4,250 million. About 8·6 million tax units benefit from this relief and the average value of the relief is £490.

The Exchequer savings which would arise from the abolition of all mortgage interest relief would depend on the behavioural response of mortgagors.

Tourism

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he can give of the net deficit on the tourism and travel account in 1988-89 on the first three months' figures; and what has the outturn balance on the travel and tourism account in each financial year since 1980.

Mr. Major: It is too early to say with any confidence what the balance on the travel account in the balance of payments will be in 1988-89.

The latest figures relate to the final quarter of 1987-88. These, together with quarterly information back to 1980, can be obtained from the Central Statistical Office's databank which is available in the Library.

VAT

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the revenue implications of an extension of value added tax exemption to memorial headstones expressed (a) as a percentage of total value added tax receipts, and (b) in cash.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information is not available on which to base an estimate.

Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the end of each year from 1979 to the year before privatisation in each case (a) the major public corporations reclassified to the private sector since 1979, and (b) the contribution of each to the totals of public corporations' (i) tangible assets (ii) financial assets and (iii) financial liabilities, as shown in table 11·6 of the United Kingdom National Accounts 1987 edition, breaking down the figures for financial assets and liabilities between (y) claims on or liabilities to central Government and (z) other claims or liabilities.

Mr. Major: The information requested is supplied to the Central Statistical Office in commercial confidence by the companies concerned.

Gross Domestic Product

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in the light of the recent publication by his Department of the medium term financial strategy assumptions since 1980 relating to money gross domestic product, he will provide all the parallel assumptions relating to real gross domestic product, personal consumption, manufacturing and total private investment, the balance of payments and unemployment.

Mr. Major: Medium term financial strategy assumptions since 1980 for the growth of real gross domestic product can be found in successive financial statement and budget reports, which also include short term forecasts for, inter alia, consumers' expenditure, investment and the current account of the balance of payments. Unemployment assumptions based on the convention of a flat path over the medium term have been published in successive public expenditure White Papers.

Small Companies (Business Expansion Scheme)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many small companies in Wales are receiving help through the business expansion scheme;

(2) how many small companies in each region of England are receiving help through the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The table gives estimates of the number of companies raising money through the business expansion scheme. Information on the size of such companies is not available.

[1] Provisional. Final figures are expected to be slightly higher.

Welsh Business Men (Tax Relief)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Welsh business men are eligible to claim tax relief under the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Tax relief is available to any investor making investments in qualifying companies up to a limit of £40,000 per year. I regret that information on the number of people in Wales claiming relief is not available.

European Commission (Cash Position)

Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the European commission's latest cash position and the implications for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: The European Commission estimates that its spending obligations this month will exceed the own resources available in July under the adopted budget for 1988. The Commission has therefore informed us that it expects to have to overdraw its accounts with member states this month in accordance with article 12(2) of Council regulation 2891/77. The outstanding amount of the overdraft for the United Kingdom by the end of July is expected to be around £136 million. As I explained to the House on 19 May, at column 1151, the Government are obliged to meet an article 12(2) request provided that it is genuinely needed to cover a prospective cash deficit and that it would not involve exceeding the own resources known to be available for the year. The Government will therefore meet this request directly from the Consolidated Fund in accordance with section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972. Repayment of any drawing under this facility will be made by deduction from future own resources payments.

The article 12(2) facility does not affect the total amount which the Community is authorised to spend during the year. The Commission's request does not, therefore, involve any net addition to public expenditure.

Incomes

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each of the (a) top 1 per cent., (b) top 5 per cent., (c) bottom 90 per cent., (d) bottom 60 per cent., (e) bottom 50 per cent., (f) bottom 30 per cent. and (g) bottom 25 per cent. of taxpayers the total amount of income before and after tax for 1988-89, giving for the bottom 25 per cent. and bottom 30 per cent. the equivalent figures for 1978-79 and 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 7 June 1988]: Estimates for 1978-79 and provisional estimates for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are given in the table. All estimates are based on information reported to tax offices and collected through the annual surveys of personal incomes. Estimates for 1978-79 exclude employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and some investment income on which tax is deducted at source.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give (i) the total unearned and (ii) the total earned income of (a) the top 1 per cent., (b) the top 5 per cent., (c) the top 20 per cent., (d) the bottom 70 per cent. and (e) the bottom 50 per cent. of taxpayers for 1978-79 and 1988-89, at constant prices;

(2) if he will give the average unearned income of (a) taxpayers and (b) non-taxpayers for 1979 and 1988 at constant prices; and what is the average unearned income for 1988-89 of someone in: the top 1 per cent., (b) the top 5 per cent., (c) the top 20 per cent., (d) the bottom 70 per cent. and (e) the bottom 50 per cent. of taxpayers in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 10 June 1988]: Estimates are given in the tables. Those for 1988-89 are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and are provisional. All estimates are subject to a large degree of uncertainty since some investment income on which tax is deducted at source is not reflected in the survey.

Income Tax and National Insurance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average income tax and national insurance paid per tax unit in (a) 1978-79 and (b) 1988-89 at 1988-89 prices; and what is the average percentage of income paid in (i) income tax and (ii) national insurance in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 14 June 1988]: In each of the years 1978-79 and 1988-89, about 22 million married couples and single people (including over 2 million elderly) are estimated to be liable to pay either income tax or national insurance contributions or both. Their average liability, at 1988-89 prices, increased from £2,340 in 1978-79 (equivalent to 24·1 per cent. of income) to £2,750 in 1988-89 (equivalent to 21·4 per cent. of income). In 1988-89, their average income tax liability is 15·8 per cent. of income and their national insurance contribution is 5·6 per cent. of income. All estimates for 1988-89 are provisional.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give the estimated cost of tax relief on premiums on private medical insurance if the private medical sector were to achieve a turnover of (a) £0·7 billion, (b) £1 billion, (c) £2 billion, (d) £3 billion (e) £4 billion per year;

(2) if he will give the estimated cost of full tax relief on all existing private medical insurance over and above that already granted tax relief;

(3) if he will give a table showing the number of tax units, by marginal rate of tax, at present in receipt of private medical insurance paid for (a) in whole or (b) in part by their employer;

(4) if he will give a table showing the average value of private medical insurance by marginal rate of tax for those in receipt of medical insurance as a fringe benefit and the cost of introducing full tax relief on insurance at each of these marginal rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The table shows the estimated number of directors and higher paid employees (ie those whose earnings plus benefits exceed £8,500 per year) receiving the benefit of employer-paid private medical insurance benefits, the average value of this benefit and the direct revenue cost which would arise if this benefit were exempt from tax.

Net private medical insurance benefits provided by employers—1988-89

	Number (thousands)	Average value of benefit £	Cost of exemption (£ million)
Basic rate taxpayers	530	280	37
Higher rate taxpayers	255	430	43
TOTAL	785	330	80

A reliable breakdown of the number of recipients of this benefit between those for whom the employer pays all of the premiums and those where only part of the premium is paid is not available since information on employer-paid premiums which are reimbursed in whole or in part by the employee is not reported to the Inland Revenue in all cases.

The cost of granting tax relief on private medical insurance premiums paid by individuals, assuming no behavioural changes, is estimated to be about £150 million in a full year at 1988-89 levels. The cost of relief for private medical insurance premiums at the various alternative levels of turnover for the private medical sector suggested by the hon. Gentleman would depend on the distribution of the alternative level of premiums between policies paid by individuals and by employers and also on the marginal tax rate of the individuals and employers.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much public expenditure, expressed in per capita terms, was devoted to Scotland in each of the past 10 years, and what were the comparable per capita figures for (a) England, and (b) Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Major: The following table shows identifiable public expenditure, expressed in per capita terms, for Scotland and England:

£ per head

	Scotland	England
1982-83	1,965·8	1,544·8
1983-84	2,077·9	1,647·9
1984-85	2,200·8	1,758·2
1985-86	2,332·3	1,844·7
1986-87	2,518·5	1,967·7

The term "identifiable expenditure" refers to expenditure that can be identified from official records as having been incurred in a particular country. Total identifiable expenditure accounts for just over 80 per cent. of total public departmental expenditure: it excludes expenditure on defence, overseas aid and other overseas services which are deemed to have been incurred on behalf of the United Kingdom as a whole. It also excludes Government net lending to, and the market and overseas borrowing of, the public corporations (including nationalised industries), due to the difficulty of allocating this finance to expenditure in a particular country.

Figures prior to 1982-83 are not available on a consistent basis because of changes in definition that have taken place between different public expenditure White Papers. Figures for Yorkshire and Humberside are not available.

Mr. Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he expects to alter his Budget strategy and his proposed public expenditure targets for 1988-89 and 1989-90 because of the likely effect of the present drought in the United States of America on British food prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: No.

Tax Reductions

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the percentage and numbers of tax units in each region of Britain that will gain (a) less than £1, (b) £1 to £2, (c) £2 to £3, (d) £3 to £5, (e) £5 to £10 and (f) over £10 per week in 1988-89 in real terms from the measures announced in the Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Estimates of gains from the Budget changes in income tax allowances, rates and thresholds for the United Kingdom are given in the table. I regret that separate estimates for each region are not available. Estimates are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and are provisional.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the likely effect on the level of sales and marketability of non-corporate assets, excluding personal homes, of the increase in capital gains tax proposed in the Finance Bill.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 20 June 1988]: The changes to capital gains tax proposed in the Finance Bill represent a decrease in the CGT rate for basic rate tax payers, and an increase for those who pay tax at the higher rate. In addition, sales of assets are likely to be affected by the reduction in the annual exempt amount, by the rebasing of capital gains to March 1982, by the extension of retirement relief and by the introduction of independent taxation of married couples from April 1990. The net effect of these changes to CGT on sales of assets, other than houses, by the non-corporate sector is estimated to be very small, and negligible in relation to the size of the markets. The marketability of these assets will be unaffected.

Shareholders

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the number of shareholders in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 20 June 1988]: Surveys carried out by NOP on behalf of the Treasury and stock exchange estimate that 9 million adults owned shares in 1988 and 8½ million adults owned shares in 1987. Figures for earlier years are not available on exactly the same basis, but I understand that surveys carried out by Target Group Index, using a wider definition than the NOP survey, estimated ownership of stocks and shares for 1974 onwards as follows:

Year	Million adults
1974	2·2
1975	2·7
1976	2·9
1977	2·7
1978	3·2
1979	3·0
1980	2·9
1981	3·1
1982	2·7
1983	2·5
1984	2·5
1985	4·4
1986	5·3

I have no comparable information for the years before 1974.

TRANSPORT

Drinking and Driving

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the mean blood alcohol concentration of drivers killed in road traffic accidents in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The mean blood alcohol concentration of drivers/riders killed in road traffic accidents in England and Wales in 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, was 49 mg/100 ml.

Over 65 per cent. of the driver-rider fatalities had little or no blood alcohol while 17 per cent. had blood alcohol concentration over 150 mg/100 ml.

The illegal level for drivers is 81 mg/100 ml.

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the mean blood alcohol concentration of pedestrians killed in road traffic accidents in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The mean blood alcohol concentration of pedestrians killed in road traffic accidents in England and Wales in 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, was 62 mg/100 ml.

Over 60 per cent. of the pedestrian fatalities had little or no blood alcohol while 23 per cent. had a blood alcohol concentration over 150 mg/100 ml.

Fishing Vessels (Light Dues)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money was raised from imposing light dues of fishing vessels during the year ended 1 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Payments of light dues in respect of fishing vessels amounted to some £30,000 up to 1 June. Some £1 million of invoices remain outstanding. I understand that Trinity house is now planning to pursue cases in the courts, and I urge fishing vessel owners who are delaying payment to settle their bills and meet what is a statutory obligation on them.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement about proposed direct rail links between the Channel tunnel and the north-west.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have nothing to add to the answers I gave my hon. Friend on 22 February 1988, at column 78, and 2 March 1988, at column 600.

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much British Rail has invested since 1979.

Mr. David Mitchell: The British Railways Board's total investment since 1979 amounts to some £4·2 billion at today's prices; £3·7 billion of that has been invested in the railways.

Departmental Telephone Numbers

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the reasons for the change in his Department's telephone numbers and what steps have been taken to inform hon. Members in advance of the changes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport's telephone system is being modernised as part of the wider scheme to modernise the telephone network linking Government offices in the Whitehall area.

The existing large exchange which serves the Department of Transport and others is being phased out and replaced by a number of modern digital exchanges situated in the buildings they serve.

In some cases it has been necessary to keep both the old and the new exchanges running in parallel and when this has happened a new telephone number has been required for Departments.

The switchboard supervisor at the House was informed of new ministerial office numbers in the first week after the change. Arrangements have also been made to direct incoming telephone calls on old numbers to appropriate new numbers.

I regret that no steps were taken to inform Members individually.

On-train Customs Clearance

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the use of on-train customs clearance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Section 12 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 requires on-train controls on Channel tunnel trains to and from destinations to the north of London, on condition that British Rail provides facilities which are acceptable to the frontier control authorities. For those trains which will terminate at Waterloo, the Government's view is that the most convenient and practicable option will be a quick and effective airport-type control at Waterloo.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has made an assessment of the economic impact of disallowing the use of on-train customs clearance for trains using the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government are in no position to disallow on-train controls for those trains serving destinations to the north of London, provided that the conditions in section 12 of the Channel Tunnel Act are met.

M23-M27 Link

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the motorway link between the M23 and M27 to be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Compton to M27 section of the M3 motorway should be completed in 1991. The timing of the final section between Bar End and Compton will depend on the outcome of the recent public inquiry, on which the inspector's report is awaited.

European Community Transport Ministers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met his counterparts from the other European Economic Community states; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 20 and 21 June at a formal meeting of Transport Ministers. A major measure to liberalise international road haulage from 1993 was agreed. Other matters discussed were: shipping, including cabotage; road haulage drivers' hours; vehicle weights and dimensions; roadworthiness testing; taxation of goods vehicles; access to the occupations of road haulage and passenger transport operators; road haulage tariffs; the granting of aids to transport; rail transport; and inland waterways transport. Outside the Council meeting there was an informal discussion of air traffic control.

M23

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 24 June to the right hon. Member for Worthing, Official Report, column 772, regarding the M23, if he will explain what steps were taken by the police and county council between 11.30 am on 10 June and the road inspection on 11 June to arrange for traffic to be diverted or advised not to leave the M25 for the M23, so that the delay to motorists could be avoided.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have asked for a report. I shall write to my right hon. Friend.

Bus Companies

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many persons are currently employed in each area office in England and Wales to monitor the performance of local bus companies and to follow up any suspected infractions of their licences.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 1 July 1988]: The staff effort (expressed as man-years) involved in each traffic area in 1987-88 in licensing bus operators, including monitoring and checking registered local services, and the traffic examiner support for this, is as follows:

#	Newcastle	Leeds	Manchester	Birmingham	Nottingham	Cambridge	Cardiff	Bristol	Eastbourne	London	Total
Indoor staff	2·4	3·2	4·7	3·3	4·0	1·3	2·4	3·1	3·7	3·4	31·5
Outdoor staff	1·7	9·0	3·0	4·2	1·5	1·4	2·9	1·9	3·2	4·2	33·0
Total	4·1	12·2	7·7	7·5	5·5	2·7	5·3	5·0	6·9	7·6	64·5

There has been no significant overall change in the staffing arrangements since then.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

High Technology (US Control)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what specific steps he has recently taken to limit extraterritorial control over United Kingdom high technology by the United States Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is no extraterritorial control on United Kingdom high technology as such. But when an element of United States origin, either physical or intellectual, is present the United States Government make claims, which we have rejected on many occasions, on the ground that United Kingdom sovereignty is infringed. We have made representations on the extraterritorial aspects of United States export controls on technical data, in connection with the review currently being undertaken by the United States Department of Commerce. We have also reached an understanding with the United States on export controls for supercomputers which respects our position on extraterritoriality.

Latin America

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of total United Kingdom corporate investment in Latin America in (a) 1980 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available; and in which five Latin American countries most investment was held, in each year.

Mr. Alan Clark: The only available information on United Kingdom corporate investment overseas in particular countries relates to foreign direct investment. Figures giving the book value of direct investment overseas are compiled and published trienally in Business Monitor MO4 (Census of Overseas Assets). The latest data, for end-1984, and figures for earlier years are shown in table 2 of that publication. Figures prior to 1984 excluded the direct investment by oil companies. The five Latin American countries in which most United Kingdom foreign direct investment was held at end 1984 were:

Brazil
Mexico
Argentina
Chile
Colombia

South Africa

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his Department's detailed assessment of the likely effect of comprehensive economic sanctions against South Africa in regard to (a) living standards and prospects for living standards of black South Africans and (b) British trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: Assessments indicate that comprehensive economic sanctions against South Africa would be damaging to the interests of all South Africans, irrespective of colour, and to Britain's economy.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the change in the manufacturing trade balance since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Trade in manufactures on a balance of payments basis was in surplus by £2·8 billion in 1979 and in deficit by £6·5 billion in 1987.

Regional Aid

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to introduce new measures to boost industry in Britain's regions.

Mr. Atkins: My Department already offers a range of incentives under its recently launched enterprise initiative designed to encourage business development in all areas of the country. Regional selective assistance is available for investment projects undertaken by firms in assisted areas; regional enterprise grants are available for firms in development areas with fewer than 25 employees to support investment and innovation projects; and in all assisted and urban programme areas DTI will pay two thirds of the cost of consultancy projects designed to improve key management functions.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of cars imported in each of the past three years are capable without adaptation of using unleaded petrol.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is not available.

Savoy Hotel plc

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will appoint inspectors under section 432 of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate whether the affairs of Savoy Hotel plc are being or have been conducted in a manner which is unfairly prejudicial to some part of its members.

Mr. Maude: I know of no reason for doing so.

Business Development Consultancy Service

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the amount of money spent or committed from the business development consultancy service initiative, introduced on 31 March for each standard region in the period 31 March to the most recent date for which information is available.

Mr. Atkins: The business planning and financial and information systems consultancy initiatives were launched on 29 March 1988. So far no consultancies under either initiative have been completed. In the period from 31 March to 17 June 821 cases have been referred to the scheme contractors who are managing the two initiatives. The actual cost to the Department can only be known when the consultancies have been completed but estimates of the commitment for each DTI region* and for Scotland and Wales are as follows:

DTI Region/Country	Commitment (£,000)
North East	145
North West	504
Yorkshire and Humberside	252
West Midlands	192
East Midlands	183
South West	113
South East:
Cambridge	132
London	406
Reading	107
Reigate	151
Scotland	164
Wales	117
Total	2,466

*Data are collected by DTI regions and for Scotland and Wales. DTI regions are similar to standard economic regions except that DTI north-west includes Cumbria and the High Peak district which are in the north and east midlands standard regions respectively and DTI south-east includes the East Anglia standard region.

Export Credits

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the developing countries which are eligible for export credits from the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: On the list of developing countries accepted by the Development Assistance Committee of the OECD, ECGD offers some cover against credit risks in all of the following:

British Steel (Privatisation)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Government expect to publish the articles of association that will apply to British Steel plc after privatisation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A draft of the post-privatisation articles of association has been placed in the Library. It should be noted that the wording may be subject to change; the articles have, for example, yet to be submitted to the stock exchange for approval.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration Appeals System

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the cost to his Department of the immigration appeals system for the last five years.

Mr. Renton: The cost of immigration department staff engaged in preparing and presenting appeals is not separately identifiable. Other associated costs were as follows:

	1983-84 £'000	1984-85 £'000	1985-86 £'000	1986-87 £'000	1987-88 £'000

---

[1] Responsibility for the immigration appellate authority transferred on 1 April 1987 to the Lord Chancellor's Department. The figures shown relates to residual expenditure from 1986-87.

David Gorton

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why David Gorton, W90252-D1-28, is being denied normal rights of a remand prisoner at Strangeways prison, Manchester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Gorton is not being denied his rights as a remand prisoner. However, because he is in the highest security category, category A, he cannot for security reasons be offered the full range of privileges available in Manchester prison.

Burglary and Violent Crime

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of (a) 17 to 20-year-olds, and (b) adults were sentenced to immediate custody for burglary and violence against the person in magistrates' and Crown courts, by police force area in 1986.

Mr. John Patten: Information by police force area about the proportion of offenders aged 17 to 20 and 21 and over sentenced for offences of burglary and violence against the person receiving immediate custody is given in the following table:

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the nationalities and corresponding numbers of all the individuals arrested under the international provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984.

Mr. Hurd: Between 22 March 1984, when the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 came into effect, and 30 June 1988, there were 220 detentions under the Act and the Prevention of Terrorism (Supplemental Temporary Provisions) Order 1984 of people suspected of being concerned in the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of international terrorism. The nationality of those detained is believed to be as shown in the following table.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Greater Manchester on inquiries made by the Manchester regional crime squad into the affairs of Barlow Clowes in early 1987; and if he will ascertain what information was passed on to the Department of Trade and Industry following those inquiries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The nature of inquiries made by the police as a result of information received is an operational matter for the chief officer of the force concerned. I understand that the question of what information may have been passed to the Department of Trade and Industry is among the matters that will be considered in the course of the investigation which my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has invited Sir Godfray Le Quesne, QC, to carry out into his Department's handling of matters relating to the Barlow Clowes group.

Michael Ryan

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from third parties concerning delays in completing investigations into (a) the shootings by the late Michael Ryan and (b) the grant and variations to the firearms certificate of the late Michael Ryan; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no such representations in respect of the investigation.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from Mrs. Vickers of the Police Complaints Authority listing any difficulties and delays, and giving reasons for the delays, she is experiencing in the course of her inquiries into the shootings by the late Michael Ryan and the granting and variations to his firearms certificate;

(2) if he will call for a report from Mrs. Vickers of the Police Complaints Authority as to on what date she commenced investigations into complaints arising out of incidents involving the shooting by the late Michael Ryan, in Hungerford on 19 August 1987; on what date she expects to report on her findings; on what date she commenced investigations into complaints regarding the procedures and the circumstances leading up to the grant and variations to the firearms' certificate of the late Michael Ryan; and on what date she expects to conclude her investigations and issue her report.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. These are matters for the Police Complaints Authority. I understand that the authority continues to be satisfied with the co-operation which it is receiving from the officers of Thames Valley police who are carrying out the investigation under the supervision of the authority.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for an appeal against a refusal to grant a section 5 firearms licence have been received in respect of (a) individuals and (b) dealers in firearms in each of the last three years for which figures are available; for the same years how many (i) individuals and (ii) dealers in firearms have had their licences terminated and of those terminated how many were restored in each case on appeal; and what was the cost to public funds of such appeals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no right of appeal against the refusal of an application for, or revocation of, a section 5 authority, though any representations are carefully considered. Figures for the number of authorities revoked are not available in the form requested and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for section 5 firearms certificates have been received from (a) individuals and (b) dealers in firearms in each of the last three years; and for the same period how many applications have been made for renewal of such a certificate from (i) individuals and (ii) dealers in firearms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not available in the form requested and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Glasgow Passport Office

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to make it easier to contact the Glasgow passport office on the telephone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The number of exchange lines for incoming calls is being increased from six to 12 over the next two months. My reply to the hon. Member's question on 23 June, at column 679, outlined the measures that are being taken to reduce the present delays in handling passport applications which are causing the telephone inquiry system to be overloaded.

Asylum

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the most recent information he has on the numbers of asylum applicants in Western Europe.

Mr. Renton: The latest information is as follows:

Numbers of asylum-seekers in Western European countries from 1984-87 by country of application

	1984	1985	1986	1987	Total 1984-87

Life Sentence Statistics

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of life sentences are mandatory and what proportion are non-mandatory; what is the average length of a mandatory life sentence; what is the average length of a non-mandatory life sentence; and how many people are serving non-mandatory life sentences;

(2) how many people sentenced to non-mandatory life sentences have been in prisons for 10 years but under 12 years, between 12 and 15 years and over 15 years respectively.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 20 June 1988]: Of the 244 offenders given life sentences in 1986, 73 per cent. were convicted of murder, for which life is the mandatory sentence, and 27 per cent. for other offences.

The average time served under sentence in prison department establishments in England and Wales by those released on licence from a life sentence in the three years 1984 to 1986 was about 10⅔ years. The average was fractionally higher for those serving life sentences for offences other than murder, possibly because of the higher risk of reoffending associated with some offences of rape, manslaughter and arson and reflected in the court's original decision to impose a life sentence.

The average figures do not take account of the longest periods being served by some of those given life sentences following the abolition of capital punishment in 1965 who have not yet been released. They also exclude persons who have died in custody or been discharged for other reasons. My right hon. Friend has made it clear that those convicted of the most heinous murders can normally expect to serve at least 20 years in prison and in some cases even longer; and no life sentence prisoner is released, no matter how long he or she has served, unless my right hon. Friend is personally as satisfied as it is reasonably possible to be that there is no risk to the public.

On 31 March 1988, 521 prisoners were serving life sentences for offences other than murder. Information about their time served is given in the following table:

Years spent under sentence[1] for the original life sentence	Number of prisoners[2]
Not released on licence
Under ten	338
Ten and under twelve	63
Twelve up to fifteen	53
Over fifteen	47
Recalled from licence	20

[1] Excluding any time spent on remand in custody or in non-prison department establishments.

[2] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Development Aid

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the proportion of the United Kingdom's gross national product devoted to overseas development (a) in 1960, and (b) for the latest annual period for which figures are available.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the proportion of the United Kingdom's gross product devoted to overseas development (a) in 1960 and (b) for the latest annual period for which figures are available.

Mr. Chris Patten: The proportion of the United Kingdom's gross national product devoted to official development assistance was 0·56 per cent. in 1960 and 0·28 per cent. in 1987.

Africa

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will restore cuts made since 1980 in the real value of United Kingdom aid to the front-line states and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are committed to the maintenance of substantial aid programmes in the region within an overall aid budget that is planned to grow in real terms. Aid expenditure to the member states of SADCC was £106·3 million in 1986 and £129·7 million in 1987.

Rain Forests

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current Government support for programmes designed to protect the rain forests.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are working with others internationally and through our aid programme to promote the sustainable management of this important resource. As I indicated on 9 May, in reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), at column 9, our bilateral forestry projects include schemes in Cameroon, Sierra Leone, Ghana, Brazil and the Ivory Coast.

CORRIGENDA

1. Official Report, 21 June 1988, Written Answers, c. 483:
Under the heading "Civil Defence", delete Mr. Redmond's question and substitute the following:

"To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to publish the report on the evaluation of the civil defence region No. 2 REGEX exercise."

2. Official Report, 23 June 1988, Written Answers, c. 671:
At line 40, before "Opencast Coal Mining" insert the following:

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those declining a YTS place had a benefit reduction on grounds of voluntary unemployment for each month between June 1987 and May 1988; and how many of those leaving YTS early had a benefit reduction on grounds of voluntary unemployment for each month between June 1987 and May 1988.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

The numbers of people who had their supplementary benefit reduced for refusing a youth training scheme place, or for leaving a youth training scheme course early, in each four-week period between 6 May 1987 and 8 April 1988 are as follows:

8 April (see note 3)	—	55

Notes:

1. The figures are provisional and subject to amendment.
2. No figures are available for periods after 8 April 1988.
3. The period to 8 April covers just over four weeks to run to the end of the end of the supplementary benefit scheme.

3. Official Report, 23 June 1988, Written Answers, c. 726:
At end of column, insert the following:

Private Operations

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of the report on certain expenditures by North Staffordshire and Shropshire health authorities on private operations, being prepared for him by his Department's statutory auditor, group 4, Birmingham, when that report is completed; and if he will make a statement.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the date of publication of the audit report of the plan by the West Midlands regional health authority for North Staffordshire and Shropshire district health authorities to purchase private operations; and if he will make it his policy to place a copy of the report in the Library as soon as it is available.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 7 June 1988]: The statutory audits of North Staffordshire and Shropshire district health authorities are due to take place over the next few months. Audits take place annually and are not confined to specific areas of expenditure. Statutory auditors' reports normally consist simply of the formal certification of a health authority's annual accounts. They contain additional comments only when the auditors wish to raise matters which they feel are of particular concern. While the audits have yet to take place, there is no reason to believe that the pilot project to make use of the private sector facilities for treatment for National Health Service patients will be one.

The advice issued to health authorities by the Department is that they should normally take any issues raised formally in such reports in open session. We do not consider it necessary, therefore, to place copies of the reports in the Library of the House.

Nurses

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what plans he has to reduce student nurses' registered service contributions on National Health Service wards;

(2) what plans he has made to deal with the staffing gap that will result from making student nurses supernumerary on National Health Service wards;

(3) what percentage of the time student nurses presently spend working directly on wards in National Health Service hospitals is devoted purely to training as opposed to giving patient care; and how this calculation is made;

(4) by what date state enrolled nurse training will be phased out;

(5) whether all those state enrolled nurses eligible for conversion courses to train for qualifications to become state registered nurses will have those courses made available to them on request;

(6) what is the level of the student nurse bursary being proposed in plans to implement Project 2000;

(7) if he will make a statement as to the proposed role, annual remuneration and training programme to be carried out by nurse helpers, as defined in Project 2000.

Mr. Newton: In accepting the broad thrust of the project 2000 proposals put forward by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, my right hon. Friend indicated that further work needed to be done before final decisions could be reached on some of the proposals. We need to be satisfied that the UKCC's proposals for widening the entry gate to qualified nurse training and the development of proposals for the new support worker grade will successfully make good the gap in the work force resulting from the fall in school leavers, the cessation of enrolled nurse training and the lower rostered contribution of students.

Implementation of Project 2000 will be phased over a number of years, with the new support worker grade being phased in, in parallel with the phasing out of enrolled nurse training. It is likely that the support worker will undertake a variety of roles, but the exact nature of the work and the training required have yet to be determined.

My right hon. Friend made it clear that agreement to the cessation of enrolled nurse training would be dependent on the successful outcome of the further work that I have referred to. Meanwhile, health authorities will be encouraged to expand the already growing number of courses for enrolled nurses to convert to the first (registered nurse) level.

We shall set the size of the proposed student nurse bursary, having regard to the level of support for other students among other factors, when we have received firm proposals from the statutory nursing bodies as to the duration and shape of the new courses.

In work for the UKCC, management consultants Price Waterhouse estimated the current service contribution of student nurses to be 59 per cent. In arriving at this figure, it took account not only of the time spent in clinical placements as part of the establishment, but the relative efficiency of a student compared with a permanent member of the work force. While Project 2000 will not significantly lessen students' clinical experience, placements in the clinical environment will in future be determined by the educational needs of the students. The detail, and therefore the extent of the reduction in the service contribution which can be rostered and relied upon, has yet to be determined.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

India

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis it was decided to substitute local cost grants to India for debt relief to that country; and if he will give figures for the amounts of such grants for each year between 1978 and the latest year for which figures are available, both the calendar and financial years, and both for commitments and disbursements.

Mr. Chris Patten: As provided for under the terms of UNCTAD resolution 165, Her Majesty's Government and the Government of India agreed in January 1979 that local cost grants should be provided for India as an equivalent measure to the retrospective adjustment of the terms of past British aid loans. This has enabled the British aid programme to finance poverty-alleviating projects and to increase the effectiveness of projects involving British exports. Prior to 1979, no such provision for local costs support existed.

The amounts of such local costs grants, since 1979 when they commenced, and commitments and disbursements, by calendar year are as follows:

£ million

Calendar years	Local cost grant agreement	Commitments	Expenditure
1979	51·2	—	—
1980	33·2	9·5	7·9
1981	37·3	85·1	39·3
1982	39·0	110·6	31·7
1983	38·4	16·4	59·4
1984	37·7	100·4	57·9
1985	36·0	—	51·8
1986	34·0	—	28·9
1987	69·6	43·1	14·8

Only disbursement figures are available for financial years, and the amounts were as follows:

£ million

Financial years	Disbursements
1979-80	14·6
1980-81	28·4
1981-82	38·3
1982-83	49·1
1983-84	50·6
1984-85	45·4
1985-86	39·3
1986-87	31·4

Debt Relief

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will define and describe the measures classified as debt relief in British aid statistics, and give amounts of debt relief given under each measure in each of the years between 1978 and the latest year for which figures are available, in both calendar and financial years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The measures classified as debt relief in "British Aid Statistics" are defined and described in paragraphs 21 and 22 (p XII) of the "Introduction to British Aid Statistics 1982-86". Figures for debt relief, as published in "British Aid Statistics" on a calendar year basis, are as follows (financial year figures are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost):

	Debt Cancellation £000	Debt Rescheduling £000	Debt Refinancing £000
1978	2,100	—	5,818
1979	17,928	—	19,194
1980	68,403	—	7,929
1981	30,377	—	10,158
1982	22,444	—	3,327
1983	23,093	1,002	1,634
1984	26,127	14,192	—
1985	26,463	3,493	1,585
1986	26,660	2,527	—
1987	24,406	—	1,512

PRIME MINISTER

United Nations

Q42. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to the United Nations headquarters.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Harrow on the Hill

Q71. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Harrow on the Hill in the county of Middlesex.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Mid-Kent

Q121. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to visit mid-Kent.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 July.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 July.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 July.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 July.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 July.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 July.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 July.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Special Stamps

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Prime Minister if she will discuss the Post Office Plans to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the British invention of photography by William Henry Fox Talbot in 1839, by the issue of a special set of stamps.

The Prime Minister: Special stamp issues are a matter for the Post Office which, I understand, has decided not to include this event in its special stamp programme for 1989.

Pesticides

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the six Departments whose joint approval is required for pesticides, as indicated in the answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 85; and if she will specify the precise responsibility of each Department concerned.

The Prime Minister: The approval of pesticides under part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act is the joint responsibility of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of Health and Social Security, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Employment and the Scottish and Welsh Offices.

No precise responsibilities for individual Departments are laid down in legislation, but Departments consider their normal areas of responsibility in exercising their functions in relation to pesticides.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will name the companies that have now made definite commitments to fund the establishment of city technology colleges; which individual city technology college or colleges they will be funding; and how much they will pay in (a) cash and (b) goods and services towards these colleges.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: It is for the sponsors to decide when to make public their commitment to sponsoring a CTC. Those which have already done so and the CTCs concerned are:

Hanson plc, which has pledged £1 million towards the establishment of Kingshurst CTC. A matching contribution of £1 million is being raised by Lucas Industries, and a significant number of other companies.

Sponsorship of £1 million has been provided by Mr. Harry Djanogly for the Nottingham CTC. Additional sponsorship of £0·4 million has already been raised by other companies.

BAT Industries has provided sponsorship of £1 million for a Teesside CTC. Additional financial support is being given by Cameron Hall Developments, British Steel and the Davy Corporation, taking the private sector commitment to nearly £1·7 million.

In addition, Dixons plc, the Philip and Pauline Harris Trust, the Mercers' Company and Thamesmead Town have each announced plans to provide sponsorship of at least £1 million each towards three more CTCs; and the CTC Trust has announced that Mr. Geoffrey Leigh, chairman of Allied London Properties, has made a personal donation towards the establishment of a CTC in Dartford.

Detailed discussions are taking place with a number of prospective sponsors, who are not yet ready to declare their hand, but who are committed in principle to providing financial support of at least £1 million. Altogether about £20 million has been pledged by the private sector to the CTC programme. In addition, the experience of Kingshurst and Nottingham has shown that local companies will come forward to make offers of goods and services following the initial announcements about individual CTCs.

Advanced Polymers

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds are spent by (a) the Medical Research Council and (b) the National Health Service on the development of advanced polymers and polymeric biomaterials for the close and continued association of such materials with human tissue.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council is not funding any research in this subject. The council is, however, interested in the clinical acceptability and applicability of such materials.

Since 1981 the Science and Engineering Research Council has supported a special programme in medical engineering, costing approximately £900,000 a year. An important component of this programme has been the development and use of polymers, including research on: polymers designed for drug delivery, the haemocompatibility of polymers, to evaluate their potential for use in cardiovascular devices, and the value of using polymeric materials for wound management.

I understand that the DHSS is not aware of any research being funded by the National Health Service in this area.

Foetal Tissue Transplants

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department or the Medical Research Council were in any way involved in the provision of material for use in or financing for recent operations at the Midland Centre for Neurosurgery and Neurology which involved the use of foetal tissue in transplant operations as treatment for Parkinson's disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Neither the Department nor the Medical Research Council was involved in any way with these recent operations at the Midland Centre for Neurosurgery. Both the Department and the MRC are keeping in touch with developments concerning this research.

School Terms and Holidays

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if, on the basis of the information available to him, he will list secondary school term and holiday dates for each member state of the European Community; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to encourage the harmonisation of school terms and holidays between the United Kingdom and other members of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is not available. My right hon. Friend has no plans to encourage harmonisation dates within the European Community. In England and Wales, responsibility for determining these matters rests with local education authorities and governing bodies of schools and the Government have no plans to change these arrangements.

Clinical/Medical Research

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the implications for funding levels of maintaining simultaneously both a system of clinical/medical research separated from teaching activities and, in certain cases, a system of clinical/medical research linked to teaching in hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: No assessment has been made of the costs of establishing and maintaining two separate systems of clinical/medical research: one linked with teaching and one not so linked. Under present arrangements the Medical Research Council—and other sponsors of medical research—consider the appropriate location for particular research projects: in university departments; in units and institutes linked with universities; or elsewhere. Medical researchers from all these locations may have teaching responsibilities.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will detail the number of (a) claimants and (b) dependants claiming each means-tested benefit for which he is responsible.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is responsible for the assisted places scheme, the music and ballet scheme and for mandatory awards. The latest available number of pupils and students claiming these benefits are giving in the following table:

Benefit	Claimants	Year
Music and Ballet	496	1987-88
Assisted Places Scheme	24,696	1987-88
Mandatory Award Holders[1]	403,110	1986-87

[1] Of these about 8,000 claimed additional allowances for dependents.

Local education authorities operate their own schemes of assistance to pupils, for example, school clothing, and are required to offer free school meals to certain pupils. The numbers receiving free school meals in October 1987 were 1,101,132

Details of the take-up of other schemes run by local education authorities are not available.

Research and Development

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the future of the Houghton research centre in the light of the working party report on publicly funded R and D, published on 4 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The council of AFRC has over the past months carefully considered advice from a number of sources on the future development of its institute for animal health. At its meeting on 14 June the council decided to consolidate the institute over a five-year period on to one major site at Compton, with a centre for exotic diseases at Pirbright. This decision, which is subject to the provision of adequate restructuring funds, will involve moving poultry disease research from Houghton to Compton. The council believes that this development is essential to enhance scientific and operational efficiency and secure a strong science base for the benefit of the industry and the nation.

SOCIAL SERVICES

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to step up the campaign to alert the public to the dangers of AIDS and to promote better protective measures; whether he will liaise with the broadcasting authorities to seek to adjust their rules so as to permit the broadcasting of more informative advertisements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Responsibility for carrying forward the mass media AIDS public education campaign rests with the Health Education Authority.

The authority's operational plan for 1988-89 includes provision for further campaigns aimed at the general public and specific groups in society. These will build on progress made so far.

The content of advertising is a matter for the broadcasting authority concerned, and I am not aware that the provision of appropriate information is precluded by the existing guidelines.

Child Abuse

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much is spent by his Department on funding research into child abuse, physical and sexual; how many such projects are funded; and if he will give the figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Newton: The Department expects to spend a total of £157,200 in 1988 on research into child abuse: £90,600 will be spent on two projects concerned only with child sexual abuse, £16,600 on a project concerned with physical abuse and £50,000 on three projects researching both types of abuse. Figures for the last five years are as follows:

1987 £58,200—2 projects—physical and sexual abuse.
1986 £22,700—2 projects—physical abuse.
1985 £14,000—2 projects—physical abuse.
1984 £10,800—1 project—physical abuse.
1983 £3,200—1 project—physical abuse.

Benefits

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for (a) attendance allowance and (b) special hardship allowance are received daily at the Department of Health and Social Security centre at Norcross, Blackpool; what is the average processing time for each benefit; and how many applications for each benefit were waiting to be processed on the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: Special hardship allowance was replaced by reduced earnings allowance in October 1986. Claims are dealt with by local offices. The information requested for attendance allowance is in the table.

Attendance allowance: claims at attendance allowance unit, Norcross, Blackpool

	Claims received per day	Claims awaiting decision (at 26 May 1988)	Average processing time (weeks)
Initial	1,510	[1]64,944	8·1
Renewal	240	10,108	8·0
Total	1,750	[1]75,052

[1] Includes 55,848 claims undergoing preliminary processing at Regional Offices.

Incomes

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the increase in real income between 1981 and 1985 broken down by (a) family type and (b) economic status for tables A1, 2, 3; C1, 2, 3; D1, 2, 3; and F1, 2, 3, from "Households Below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis".

Mr. Scott [holding answer 21 June 1988]: I regret that a substantive reply can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NHS Scientific Staff

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to maintain high quality scientific staff in the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: It is for individual employing authorities in selecting candidates for appointment to ensure that the high quality of their scientific staff is maintained. The management side of the scientific and professional staffs council has agreed to undertake a review of the recruitment and retention of these staff in the light of service needs.

Benefit Appeals

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list in the Official Report for each tribunal area the number of outstanding appeals currently waiting to be heard and the average length of wait for appeals to be heard;

(2) how many people are waiting for their appeal tribunal to be heard; and what is the average length of time before an appeal is heard.

Mr. Portillo: The national administrative statistics for social security appeal tribunals, which are the source for average durations between the lodging of appeals and hearing, are not disaggregated for areas smaller than a social security region. The latest available figures for the quarter ending 30 September 1987 are given in the table.

Social Security Appeal Tribunals—All benefits quarter ending 30 September 1987

	Total number of Appeals held	Average time from lodgement to hearing (weeks)
Great Britain	124,027	23·2
North Eastern Region	23,160	22·8
London North Region	12,508	21·1
London South Region	11,303	23·2
Midlands Region	19,171	25·4
North Western Region	19,516	22·7
Wales and South Western Region	11,572	19·6
Scotland	26,797	26·3

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to amend the mobility allowance regulations to permit payments to children aged between two and five years.

Mr. Scott: We shall bear in mind the representations which my hon. Friend has made for the reduction of the lower age limit for mobility allowance when we examine the performance of existing benefits in the light of the new information coming from the surveys of disability, undertaken for us by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. These surveys have covered both adults and children, whether physically or mentally handicapped, and whether at home or in communal establishments, and a series of reports will be published from next September onwards.

Disabled Persons (Legislation)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when section 7 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 will be implemented.

Mr. Scott: Officials resumed discussions with local authority representatives on section 7 on 4 July. The timetable for implementation will depend on the outcome of these and subsequent discussions and on discussions with health authority representatives.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which parts of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 have been fully implemented; and what assessment he has made of the Act's effectiveness.

Mr. Scott: To date sections 5, 6, 9, 10, 16, 17 and 18 have been fully implemented. As part of its current work programme the social services inspectorate is gathering information about the way in which the Act is being implemented by local authorities.

Brain Injury

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to ensure that training in brain injury rehabilitation and behaviour modification is included in basic nurse training.

Mrs. Currie: The special requirements of nursing in brain injury form one part of basic nurse training. Additional specialist training is available in neurosurgical and neurological nursing. Twelve centres are currently approved to run those post-basic courses, of which seven provide courses for enrolled nurses.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he has received the report by the Medical Disability Society "The Management of Traumatic Brain Injury"; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to ensure the provision of appropriate day care facilities for people recovering from traumatic brain injuries who are living at home;

(3) whether he plans to establish any specialist brain injury rehabilitation units; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We welcome the report by the Medical Disability Society as an important contribution to the continuing debate about services for brain-injured people. We are aware of concern about existing services for people who have suffered traumatic brain injury. Officials are considering the report's recommendations about those services and examining a number of options regarding the best way to take the matter forward.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many full-time specialists, clinical psychologists and nurses are engaged in the rehabilitation of people with traumatic head injuries;

(2) if he will list the special head injury units within the National Health Service;

(3) what information his Department holds on the number of brain injured patients who are routinely cared for in acute surgical wards long after need for surgery has passed.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information his Department holds on the number of mentally ill people who are routinely cared for in acute surgical wards long after their need for surgery has passed.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the trustees of the Independent Living Fund.

Mr. Scott: The trustees are:

Mr. Peter Cadbury
Dame Mary Donaldson
Miss Elizabeth Gallagher
Mrs. Winifred Tumin
Sir Michael Herries
Mr. Joe Hennessey
Mr. Stewart Lyon
Mr. Jack McGregor
Miss Gillian Micklewright
Miss Pauline Thompson

Foetal Tissue

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to ensure that women whose foetuses may be stored in tissue banks following abortions are specifically informed of that fact before the operations is performed.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so, but we will of course consider any recommendations that the committee which has been set up to review the Peel code of practice may make in this respect.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 21 June, Official Report, columns 541-42, on how many occasions between February and December 1987, the medical ethical committee to which he refers met to discuss the further information about the proposals before it to use foetal tissue in transplant operations.

Mr. Newton: I understand the ethical committee did not discuss Professor Hitchcock's research except at the meetings referred to.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any formal vote was taken by the medical ethical committee to which he refers in his reply of 21 June, Official Report, columns 541-42, on the question whether permission should be granted to Professor Hitchcock to allow him to use foetal tissue for transplant purposes.

Mr. Newton: No. I understand that the chairman of the committee took the view that a formal vote was unnecessary because there was a clear consensus in favour of granting approval to Professor Hitchcock.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of the minutes of the proceedings of the medical ethical committee to which he refers in his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, West of 21 June, Official Report, columns 541-42, which gave permission for foetal tissue to be used in transplant operations.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 14 June at columns 179-80.

Medical Ethics Committees

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the last 12-month period for which figures are available, advice or guidance was given by his Department to medical ethical committees about the value or ethical acceptability of proposals put before them.

Mr. Newton: Advice to ethical committees on the ethical acceptability of proposals put before them is a matter for the professions concerned and the appropriate professional bodies. The Department's guidance on the establishment of ethical committees (circular HSC(IS)153, a copy of which is in the Library), endorsed the recommendations on clinical research of the Royal College of Physicians.

Opticians

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if any action will now be taken against those opticians referred to in his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 590, now that it is known that no procedure exists to pass the matter to the ophthalmic service committee of Manchester family practitioner committee.

Mrs. Currie: The ophthalmic service committee of the Manchester family practitioner committee investigated allegations of breaches of the terms of service involving the opticians referred to in my earlier reply. It found that the opticians were not in breach of their terms of service and their decisions were later endorsed by Manchester family practitioner committee.

Royal Ear Hospital

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans exist to close the royal ear hospital at University hospital London; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The hon. Member is probably referring to University College hospital. I understand that Bloomsbury health authority is examining the future of the royal ear hospital. One option being considered is the transfer of its services to the royal national throat, nose and ear hospital and to University College hospital. Any proposals will in due course be the subject of public consultation by the health authority: the hon. Member may wish to write to its chairman for further information.

National Insurance Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail on an annual basis the increase in the real value of national insurance pensions over (a) the period 1974 to 1979 and (b) the period 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

Real-terms Increase in Retirement Pension at Uprating date 1974 to 1988

Uprating	Increase (per cent.)
July 1974	13·7
April 1975	−1·4
November 1975	2·6
November 1976	0·1
November 1977	1·2
November 1978	3·1
November 1979	1·8
November 1980	1·0
November 1981	−2·6
November 1982	4·4
November 1983	−1·1
November 1984	0·2
November 1985	1·4
July 1986	−0·6
April 1987	−2·2
April 1988	0·2

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the value of (a) claimants and (b) dependants claiming each of the means-tested benefits for which he is responsible.

Mr. Portillo: Table G of the "Households Below Average Income" (copies of which are in the Library) shows the percentage contribution of income-related benefits to the incomes of individuals within households below various percentiles of the income-distribution. Details are also shown of the particular contributions of supplementary benefit and housing benefit. Similar figures for family income supplement cannot be provided on a statistically reliable basis.

Departmental Offices

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, when he considers the relocation of offices of his Department out of London, he will consider Wolverhampton as a potential location.

Mr. Moore: We will consider all potential locations which will enable us to improve efficiency.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average housing benefit payment for rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates, and the number of recipients in each case, for the years 1979 to 1987; and what is the current estimate for 1988.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The information requested is in the table. Prior to 1982-83 assistance with housing costs was through the supplementary benefit scheme administered by the Department and the rebate and allowance scheme run by the Department of the Environment. Housing benefit from the Department was introduced for some supplementary benefit claimants in November 1982 with full implementation for all claimants following from April 1983. The data for the years before 1982-83 are based upon the rebate and allowance scheme only. The data for 1982-83 combine information from both the old and new schemes.

Housing Benefit: Recipients and Average Amounts 1979-1988

	Rent rebate		Rent allowance		Rate rebate
	numbers ('000's)	amount (£ annum)	numbers ('000's)	amount (£ annum)	numbers ('000's)	amount (£ annum)
1979-80	1,205	197·51	220	181·82	3,065	65·25
1980-81	1,330	238·35	240	200·00	3,350	79·70
1981-82	1,590	312·58	250	200·00	3,700	101·08
1982-83	3,050	304·59	260	284·62	5,320	126·50
1983-84	3,735	530·12	1,015	528·08	7,020	173·79
1984-85	3,745	572·76	1,080	637·04	7,230	188·11
1985-86	3,710	618·33	1,150	726·09	7,020	215·10
1986-87	3,720	650·81	1,180	802·54	7,050	234·04
1987-88	3,760	681·65	1,250	845·60	7,030	250·36
1988-89	3,430	799·43	1,055	1,070·14	5,845	237·49

Notes

1. The number of recipients is the estimated average number receiving benefit.
2. There is a significant overlap between the three categories tabled as most households receiving help with rent will also be receiving help with rates.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many recipients of housing benefit there were for Great Britain as a whole prior to the April 1988 changes for (a) home owners, (b) council tenants and (c) others and for (i) pensioners (ii) families with children and (iii) others, in respect of rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates; and what is the current estimate for 1988-89.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Numbers of housing benefit recipients by tenure type and household type for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are given in the tables.

Table 1—Tenure type

000s

	1987-88	1988-89
Owner-occupiers (rate rebates)	2,336	1,645
Public sector tenants (rent rebates)	3,761	3,430
Private sector tenants (rent allowance)	1,250	1,055

Table 2—Household type

000s

	Rent rebates		Rent allowances		Rate rebates
	1987-88	1988	1987-88	1988-89	1987-88	1988-89
Pensioners	2,086	1,980	633	530	4,044	3,465
Families with children	1,030	990	214	200	1,703	1,500
Others	645	465	403	320	1,283	875
Total	3,761	3,435	1,250	1,050	7,030	5,840

Notes:

1. Figures rounded to nearest 5,000.
2. Pensioners with children are listed once only, under "Pensioners".
3. Figures for both years are derived from a computer simulation model. Those for 1987-88 are consistent with the 1988 public expenditure White Paper; whilst those for 1988-89 have been remodelled and allow for the effects of the Budget and the capital rule changes announced on 27 April. They do not allow for the extra numbers who will receive a transitional payment.
4. Our estimate for the total number of claimants receiving some form of housing benefit in 1988-89 is 6,150,000.

WALES

Fish Farming

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve the state of fish farming in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Our objective is to assist the development of shellfish cultivation and fish farming on a viable basis, subject to an adequate statutory framework of controls relating to environmental considerations, such as water abstraction and discharge, and to fish disease.

Valleys Programme

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will breakdown, under expenditure sub-heads, the £400 million for housing which he recently announced for the south Wales valleys;

(2) if he will indicate the basis on which his housing renovation grants in the recently announced valleys initiative will be made; and what percentage of these grants will have to be met by those applying for such grants.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In the three years of the programme for the valleys we expect to see some £457 million spent on housing. Broadly we expect this expenditure to be as follows:

	£ million
Private sector renovation	107
Area-based renovation (enveloping and block schemes)	50
New build	300

The funding for private sector renovation will be made available by way of the allocation we make to housing authorities, supported with additional allocations for block schemes and enveloping. Grants made by local authorities to individual home owners are generally made at the rate of 75 per cent. of the cost of eligible works, but can be at 90 per cent. in cases of financial hardship. No contribution is sought from home owners for enveloping schemes.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Image

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has appointed design consultants with a remit to prepare a corporate image promotion campaign for his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: No. The agencies and consultants who have shown an interest in the initiative have until 15 July to respond to the written brief.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds he intends to allocate from his departmental budget in order to conduct an advertising campaign to promote the corporate image of his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: As I have already explained in correspondence with the hon. Gentleman, I cannot at this stage say what the cost of the campaign might be. We shall not be in a position to determine that until we have considered the ideas of the firms which are interested and decided how the best value for money is to be secured.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have taken place between his Department and design or public relations or advertising firms concerning a campaign to promote the corporate image of his Department; and if he will name the firms involved.

Mr. Rifkind: An oral briefing on our written proposals was offered to those firms which responded to a public advertisement of my intentions. Over 40 firms attended, but it would not be proper for their names to be divulged.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why he is planning a public relations campaign advised by Wolff Olins to raise the corporate image of the Scottish Office.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 30 June 1988]: It is appropriate to ensure that the responsibilities of the Scottish Office and its agencies are more widely understood. A brief has been sent to a number of companies and proposals have been invited from them by 15 July. But no decision has yet been taken on an appointment.

Scottish Pride

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had on the future of Scottish Pride; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. My right hon. and learned Friend awaits formal responses from industry bodies to the report on Scottish Pride by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, publication of which he announced on 18 May, at column 471, in response to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro).

Widdicombe Report

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to implement the recommendation of the Widdicombe report with regard to the composition of local authority committees and sub-committees.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have been giving careful consideration to all the recommendations made by the Widdicombe committee and will publish a response soon.

Red Deer (Stalking)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons have been convicted of stalking red deer in Scotland with a full-bore rifle for which they did not have the appropriate authority to possess and use in each of the last two years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reason his Department has decided not to support the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association hitherto; and when such support will be forthcoming.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The application from the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association was one of a number which were rejected for 1988-89 on grounds that the resources available for payment of grants under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 were oversubscribed. If a further application is made for assistance in 1989-90, it will be carefully considered.

Nuvan

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to provide a substantive answer to the question from the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow, to which a holding answer was given on 16 June, relating to the frequency of use of the pesticide Nuvan.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A substantive answer was provided on 4 July.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library copies of the findings of the research studies into the effects of the pesticide Nuvan, mentioned in the answer of 27 June, Official Report, columns 85-86.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Research into the effects of Nuvan by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland marine laboratory in Aberdeen has not yet been completed.

Health Boards

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has revised the financial allocations to health boards for 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have today allocated £83·4 million to health boards to allow them to meet the full cost of the pay awards to doctors, dentists, nurses and other professional staff. This brings to £1,744 million the allocation to health boards to meet their gross recurrent expenditure commitments on hospital and community health services in 1988-89. The £1,744 million figure includes £19·69 million allocated for specific commitments, including national cardiac surgery services, lithotripsy and AIDS.

After expected income is taken into account the net cash limited allocations to individual health boards are as follows:

Health boards—Net recurrent allocation

	£ thousand
Argyll and Clyde	124,286
Ayrshire and Arran	93,048
Borders	26,984
Dumfries and Galloway	44,687
Fife	87,041
Forth Valley	81,512
Grampian	159,966
Greater Glasgow	452,300
Highland	65,440
Lanarkshire	143,256
Lothian	279,788
Orkney	4,904
Shetland	6,015
Tayside	160,792
Western Isles	8,950

The additional allocation for pay awards means that hospital and community health service allocations in Scotland are now more than £1 billion higher than they were in 1979-80.

Universities

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will have discussions with the Scottish universities on the implications for local economies and employment levels of their cash difficulties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 1 July 1988]: Government funding for the universities is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science. I have no plans for such discussions.

The Fraser of Allander Institute has produced a report about the local economic impact of changes in funding by the University Grants Committee at the universities of Aberdeen, Dundee and Stirling. That report records that the total income to these three universities has increased in real terms between 1980-81 and 1986-87.

Crofts (Greylag Geese)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to compensate for the damage to crofts caused by the expanding greylag geese population in the Uists.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 July 1988]: We have received representations on this matter from the Scottish Crofters Union. Scottish Development Department officials will be consulting interested parties and thereafter we shall carefully consider all aspects of the problem, in the light of the views expressed.

Health Care International

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet representatives from Health Care International; and what subjects will be discussed.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 July 1988]: The Secretary of State has presently no plans to do so.

Environment Protection (Departmental Resources)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff in his Department are working on the identification and designation of Ramsar sites and special protection areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 July 1988]: We look to the Nature Conservancy Council to identify and recommend sites for designation. Amongst its other duties the nature conservation branch of the Scottish Development Department, comprising five staff, considers the Nature Conservancy Council recommendations.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to increase the resources allocated to the identification and designation of Ramsar sites and special protection areas by his Department; and whether he intends to take steps to increase the rate of progress of site designation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 July 1988]: The Scottish Development Department considers recommendations from the Nature Conservancy Council on sites to be designated Ramsar sites and special protection areas. Staffing resources allocated to this, as to other tasks of my Department, are kept under regular review. We expect to designate several sites soon. I aim to increase the rate of progress on site designation and my officials have discussed ways of achieving this with Nature Conservancy Council staff.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Government Communications Headquarters

163. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for his policy on trade union membership of the progress of deunionisation at Government communications headquarters.

Mr. Mellor: There are no implications for our policy on trade union membership. The changes in the conditions of services at GCHQ were introduced solely in the interests of national security. They are not anti-union. All GCHQ staff are free to join the GCHQ Staff Federation, which is listed as a trade union under the terms of the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act 1974.

Sharpeville Six

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a direct plea for clemency for the Sharpeville Six.

Mrs. Chalker: Further appeals on behalf of the Sharpeville Six were made by Foreign Ministers of the Twelve on 14 June, by the Security Council on 17 June, by Heads of Government at the Toronto summit on 20 June, and by the European Council on 28 June. We have also raised the issue again direct with the South African Government.

British Phosphate Commissioners

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken to use the residual assets of the British Phosphate Commissioners for the benefit of Commonwealth countries in the south Pacific.

Mr. Eggar: Following the distribution of the residual assets of the former British Phosphate Commissioners in February 1987, £750,000 pa is available for use by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for the benefit of small Commonwealth states.

In the financial year ending March 1988, the FCO was able to:

(a) contribute £150,000 towards the setting up of the joint United Nations office for small Commonwealth states in New York. We expect to continue to contribute to the costs of this collaborative Commonwealth venture, which gives the smaller countries an opportunity to make their voices heard more effectively, without the otherwise prohibitive costs involved in representation at the United Nations;

(b) provide training for police forces in South Pacific island countries;

(c) add £100,000 to the FCO scholarships and awards scheme (FCOSAS), all of this additional money going to small Commonwealth states, half to those in the south Pacific;

(d) contribute £150,000 as extra-budgetary aid to the South Pacific Commission, particularly for use on their inshore fisheries and plant protection (coconut palm) projects which have an application in all the island countries;

(e) contribute a further £150,000 through the ODA to aid programmes for small Commonwealth states;

(f) contribute £50,000 towards the United Kingdom military training assistance scheme. This has enabled us to increase the help offered to small Commonwealth states in sending members of their security forces on training courses in the United Kingdom.

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's scholarship awards scheme in the Commonwealth, and in particular in the south Pacific; and whether any of the residual British Phosphate Commissioners funds are being used for the purpose of this scheme.

Mr. Eggar: £100,000 from the income generated from the British share of the residual assets of the former British Phosphates Commissioners is added annually to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarships and awards scheme in order to increase the number of awards made specifically to overseas students from Commonwealth small states, including those in the south Pacific.

In 1987-88 the FCOSAS provided a total of 290 awards worth £1·8 million to overseas students from all Commonwealth countries. 28 of those awards, worth £141,000, went to students from Commonwealth countries in the south Pacific.

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the residual assets of the British Phosphate Commissioners will be used for the benefit of the Banaban community on Rabi Island, Fiji.

Mr. Eggar: The income generated from the British share of the residual assets of the former British Phosphate Commissioners will continue to be dedicated to assisting the development of small Commonwealth states. These include the island nations of the south Pacific, among them the Banaban community on Rabi Island, Fiji, who have benefited in the past from funds arising from the phosphate mining industry.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any restrictions have been applied to the joining of the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty by states (a) known to have exploded a nuclear device and deployed nuclear weapons prior to 1968, (b) known to have exploded a nuclear device but not deployed nuclear weapons since 1969 and (c) thought by the United Nations to possess nuclear weapon capability since 1969, but not deployed.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Alex Zelichenok

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he had to the raising of the case of refusenik Alex Zelichenok from Leningrad at a meeting with Soviet authorities in Moscow on 23 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Alex Zelichenok was included on a list of human rights cases which was handed to Soviet officials during the bilateral human rights talks on 23 June. There was no immediate Soviet reply on his case, but responses to all our concerns were promised. We are pressing for details on each individual case.

Human Rights

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during recent talks on human rights between officials from Britain and the Soviet Union, the Soviet side raised cases of alleged human rights abuse in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Soviet side raised the case of Paul Hill, who was convicted of murder in the Guildford and Woolwich pub bombings in 1975, and handed over a list of 10 miners who claim to have been blacklisted since the miners' strike. We are looking into all these cases and will provide a full response.

South Africa

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to take steps to prevent British companies paying the salaries of staff called up for military service and for manufacturing weapons in South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Oak Wilt

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the origins of, and prevalence of, oak wilt in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: Ceratocystis fagacearum, the cause of oak wilt, is not present in the United Kingdom.

Green Pound

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what developments he expects in the green pound by the start of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. MacGregor: As the next stage in dismantling MCAs by 1992, the recent Council of Ministers' meeting agreed, as part of the price fixing and following United Kingdom pressure, that the green pound will be devalued on 1 January 1989 so as to reduce United Kingdom MCAs by 3·2 points. It was also agreed that the Commission should now examine the measures to adopt for future stages.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the dangers to the health of livestock from the proposed dumping of United States wastes in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has received representations from Cheshire and Humberside county councils, Warrington borough council, Warrington chamber of commerce and industry, Liverpool port health authority and the Lancashire and Cheshire branches of the National Farmers' Union. I have also received letters from Warrington, South Conservative association and my hon. Friend the Member for Bath (Mr. Patten).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the anticipated revenue from income tax for 1988-89 expressed as a per capita sum for each adult over the age of 18 years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The 1988 Budget forecast of income tax receipts in 1988-89 is £42·1 billion. This represents about £960 per head of the projected mid-1988 adult population aged 18 and over.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the total amount of income tax to be paid by the top 5 per cent. and the bottom 50 per cent. of taxpayers in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 June 1988]: The latest estimates of the total amount of income tax to be paid in a full year by the top 5 per cent. and the bottom 50 per cent. are £12·5 billion and £7·5 billion, respectively, for 1988-89.

The calculations are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

Civil Servants (Religious Affiliations)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action the Board of Inland Revenue and the Board of Customs and Excise have taken to set up monitoring procedures to examine the religious affiliations of civil servants employed by them in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Norman Lamont: During March 1988 all members of staff in Northern Ireland employed by the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise, together with other Departments in Northern Ireland, were issued with questionnaires seeking information from which to determine their religious affiliation. New recruits are being monitored when they take up duty. The replies to the questionnaires are still being collected and recorded and the survey is expected to be completed by late summer.

VAT (New Construction)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if in the light of proposals to introduce value added tax on new construction, he will make it his policy to cancel the stamp duty chargeable on new assets.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. Stamp duty is not charged on the construction of a new building. It is charged on transfers of land and buildings, whether new or used, and regardless of the use to which the property will be put. I have no plans to make stamp duty dependent on whether or not value-added tax is charged.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning tax incentives for children who buy private medical insurance for their parents.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Hammersmith, (Mr. Soley) on 14 June, Official Report, column 147-48, what is (a) his estimate of the regional distribution of mortgage interest relief within the stated income bands, (b) the comparable figures for 1985-86, (c) his estimate of the percentage of tax units within each income band who receive mortgage interest relief, (d) his estimate of the percentage of tax units within each income band who are owner occupiers nor in receipt of mortgage interest relief, (e) his estimate of the median, and (f) the average value of mortgage interest relief in each income band, and in cases (d), (e) and (f) the comparable figures on a regional basis for 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Following the introduction of MIRAS in April 1983, regional information on the cost of mortgage interest relief cannot be extracted from Inland Revenue records. The regional distribution of mortgage interest can be estimated from the family expenditure survey (FES) but, as the sample size for the FES is relatively small it is not possible to provide robust estimates after 1982-83.

The other information for 1987-88 is given in the table. These estimates are based on projections to 1987-88 of information in the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and the 1985 family expenditure survey. The estimates include mortgages formerly under the option mortgage scheme which are now subsumed within MIRAS. All estimates are provisional.

Range of total income	Number of mortgagors thousands	Mortgagors as a percentage of all tax units in each income range per cent.	Owner-occupiers not[1] receiving mortgage interest relief as a percentage of all tax units in each income range per cent.	Average value of[2] relief per mortgagor £
Up to £5,000	720	5	38	370

[1] Assuming that all mortgagors are owner occupiers and receive mortgage interest relief.

[2] Estimates of the median are not available.

Government Posts (Northern Region)

164. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Government posts were located in the northern region of England in each of the years from 1979 to 1987; and what is the current number of posts.

Mr. Brooke: The number of civil servants in the northern region of England were as follows:

	Number
1979	42,300
1980	40,400
1981	40,700
1982	38,900
1983	37,800
1984	35,400
1985	33,400

	Number
1986	33,100
1987	33,600

Servicewide regional statistics for April 1988 are not yet available.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what investigations were carried out by the Inland Revenue into the affairs of Barlow Clowes in early 1987; and what information was passed on to the Department of Trade and Industry following those investigations.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue's obligations of confidentiality prevent the disclosure of any information concerning a particular taxpayer's affairs.

Debt Relief

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria govern the choice of country benefiting from debt relief from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: The United Kingdom in common with other official creditors reschedules countries' debts in the Paris Club if they are following IMF approved adjustment programmes and would otherwise be unable to meet their debts service obligations. Reschedulings over longer periods are allowed to the poorest, most heavily indebted of such countries. The criteria which will govern which countries will benefit under the framework for concessional reschedulings agreed at the Toronto summit will be decided by the Paris Club. The United Kingdom also converts old aid loans into grants following the 1978 UNCTAD resolution 165 for countries which have income per head of less than $425 a year and which are following IMF approved adjustment programmes.

Building Societies

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when regulations will be made to allow building societies to convert to public limited companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The Building Societies Commission made the Building Societies (Transfer of Business) Regulations 1988 on 4 July and they were laid before Parliament today.

The regulations complete the legislative framework under which building societies and their members can consider conversion of the society to a plc. The general provisions of conversion are contained in the 1986 Act; the regulations fill out the details on a number of points.

They provide, firstly, for the continuity of agreements, documents, rights and liabilities from the society to its successor company. This will ensure, for example, that mortgage contracts are unaffected by the conversion

They also deal in some detail with the priority liquidation right of former members of societies which convert. The calculation of this right and the means of securing it are set out in the regulations.

Finally, the regulations set out the information which a society must include in a transfer statement which it is obliged to send to members when they are invited to vote for conversion. This information includes particulars of:

The consequences of the transfer for investing and borrowing members and for employees.

The financial position of the society, including the amount of its reserves.

A forecast of the future financial prospects of the successor company.

The interest of the directors of the society in the transfer and the resulting benefits and any compensation to them and other officers.

Any distribution of funds to be made to members of the society.

Any shares, or rights in relation to shares, to be offered in connection with the transfer.

Any priority share rights to be conferred on members, officers or employees of the society.

The terms on which the investments in the society will be held as deposits in the successor company.

Any difference in the statutory protection scheme that will apply.

The directors and auditors of the successor company.

Whether the Bank of England has indicated that it would be prepared to authorise this successor company under the Banking Act 1987.

In the case of a proposed transfer to an existing company, information has to be given on the activities and structure of the successor company, together with details of any significant shareholders.

The regulations also require that if a written takeover proposal has been made to the society during the previous year, the fact is disclosed to members together with non-confidential details of the proposal.

Privatisation

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list every company privatised since 1979, showing the percentage of the work force in each company which bought shares in the company and the percentage of the work force that retained shares in the company (a) one and (b) three years after privatisation.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The companies privatised by Government share sales since 1979, and the percentage of eligible employees participating in the employee share arrangements, are as set out:

Company and date of sale	Percentage of eligible workforce participating
British Aerospace (February 1981)	74
Cable and Wireless (October 1981)	99
Amersham International (February 1982)	99
National Freight Company (February 1982)	36
Britoil (November 1982)	72
Associated British Ports (February 1983)	90
Enterprise Oil (June 1984)	71
British Telecom (November 1984)	96
British Gas (December 1986)	99
British Airways (February 1987)	90
Rolls-Royce (May 1984)	96
BAA (July 1987)	98

In addition to the foregoing, employees of Royal Ordnance, which was sold to British Aerospace in April 1987, were offered free shares in British Aerospace, funded by the Government.

There have also been a number of sales of subsidiaries by nationalised industries and Government-owned companies. Of these, the sale of Jaguar was accomplished by a public share offering, and 19 per cent. of employees purchased shares. In the sale of British Shipbuilders (Warshipyards), VSEL, which purchased two of the eight yards, made special arrangements for employees, and 82 per cent. of those employees purchased shares. Arrangements for employees to purchase shares were also made in the sales of some Rover Group and National Bus Company subsidiaries.

Information on the number of employee shareholders who retained their shares in the privatised companies one and three years after privatisation is not available.

Share Options

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the three types of employee share and share option schemes now approved by the Revenue under the Taxes Act 1988 and originally introduced under the Finance Acts of 1978, 1980 and 1984, the latest information on (a) the number of approved schemes and (b) the number of people benefiting.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 24 June 1988]: The number of employee share schemes which had received formal approval by the Inland Revenue by 31 May 1988 was as follows:

	Number
Finance Act 1978 profit-sharing schemes	752
Finance Act 1980 SAYE-related share option schemes	728
Finance Act 1984 share option schemes	3,093

The number of approved all-employee schemes (Finance Act 1978 and Finance Act 1980) has increased from less than 30 in 1979 to 1,480 by 31 May 1988. This has resulted in well over 1·5 million employees acquiring shares or options over shares under these schemes.

Approximately 50,000 options were granted in each of the first three years of operation of the Finance Act 1984 discretionary share option schemes.

Incomes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the share of pre and post-tax income going to the top (a) 1 per cent. and (b) 5 per cent. of income recipients from 1970-71 to 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 24 June 1988]: Available information is given in the table. The quantile groups have been determined by reference to the distribution of income before and after tax of those single people and married couples for whom the Inland Revenue has records in each year. The figures are based on the annual surveys of personal incomes. Estimates for 1986-87 and later years are not available on the same basis. However, estimates of the income before and after tax of the top 1 per cent. and top 5 per cent. of income tax payers were given in my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 28 June at column 188.

[1] Counting married couples as one and combining their incomes.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish a table showing the average annual value of mortgage interest tax relief in Great Britain at the latest date available to recipients (a) with incomes below £7,000 a year, (b) with incomes between £7,000 and £10,000 a year, (c) with incomes between £10,000 and £13,000 a year, (d) with incomes between £13,000 and £16,000 a year, (e) with incomes between £16,000 and £19,000 a year, (f) with incomes between £19,000 and £22,000 a year, (g) with incomes between £22,000 and £25,000 a year and (h) with incomes above £25,000 a year, and the number of recipients in each group;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for each income group the estimated number of mortgagors receiving mortgage interest tax relief in 1988-89, the average annual value of the relief and the total cost for each group.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 27 June 1988]: Provisional estimates for the United Kingdom are given in the table. These are based on projections to 1988-89 of information in the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and the 1985 family expenditure survey. The estimates include mortgages formerly under the option mortgage scheme which are now subsumed under MIRAS.

[2] Including about ½ million non-taxpaying tax units

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average annual value of mortgage interest tax relief (a) to first-time buyers and (b) to all recipients (i) in Great Britain and (ii) in each region in each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 June 1988]: Estimates for the years 1979-80 to 1982-83 have been derived from the annual surveys of personal incomes and are given in the table. I regret that the information on first-time buyers is not available.

Following the introduction of MIRAS in April 1983, regional information on the cost of mortgage interest relief cannot be extracted from Inland Revenue records. The regional distribution of mortgage interest can be estimated from the family expenditure survey (FES) but, as the sample size for the FES is relatively small, it is not possible to provide robust estimates of regional trends for the period after 1982-83. Accordingly, the table shows the average value of relief for 1983-84 to 1987-88 for the United Kingdom only.

[2] Provisional.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table of the total cost of mortgage tax relief in Great Britain in each of the years from 1979 to 1987, indicating the amount of spending on mortgage tax relief at each of the higher tax rates of 40 per cent., 50 per cent. and 60 per cent. in each of these years.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 June 1988]: Estimates for the United Kingdom of the total cost of mortgage interest tax relief and the cost of relief at rates in excess of basic rate are given for 1979-80 to 1987-88.

	Cost of mortgage interest relief £ million	Cost of relief at excess over basic rate £ million

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table giving the cost of mortgage tax relief for each year from 1967-68 to 1987-88, shown at 1987 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 June 1988]: The estimated costs of mortgage interest tax relief in the United Kingdom, at 1987-88 prices, are shown in the table. Figures for 1983-84 onwards include the cost of relief given to non-taxpayers.

Tax Units (Statistics)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many tax units facing a marginal tax rate of 40 per cent. have children;

(2) how many tax units have children.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 27 June 1988]: In 1988-89 about 5½ million married couples and single people liable to pay income tax have children. Of these, about 500,000 tax units have a marginal tax rate of 40 per cent. About 1½ million non-taxpayers have children.

The figures are based on projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and the 1986 family expenditure survey and are therefore provisional.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East of 16 June, Official Report, columns 269-70, he will make a statement on the factors governing the decision on the extent to which pensioners' tax allowances are uprated in line with married man's and single person's tax allowances.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 June 1988]: Changes in personal allowances depend on Budget priorities each year. This year all the main personal allowances, including age allowances, were raised by twice the amounts required under statutory indexation.

Sovereign Immunity

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all organisations or states covered by sovereign immunity and the date this was granted.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 June 1988]: The Inland Revenue's obligations of confidentiality prevent the disclosure of any information concerning the tax affairs, or tax status, of any individual, company or other entity.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of tax refunded to states or organisations granted sovereign immunity in each year since 1979; and what proportion of that amount has been paid to the five largest organisations.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 June 1988]: I regret that figures are not readily available for all the years requested. In the year to 31 March 1988, tax of approximately £119 million was refunded to sovereign immune bodies; the five largest recipients accounted for 87 per cent. of the total repayment. In the previous year, the figures were £108 million and 89 per cent. respectively.

Government Audits

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to what proportion of central Government audits is undertaken by National Audit Office staff and what proportion is contracted out to private firms of accountants.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 June 1988]: The Treasury is currently building up a data base on public bodies' audit arrangements. Of the central Government bodies and accounts covered so far about 60 per cent. are audited by National Audit Office staff and about 40 per cent. by private accountants.

VAT

Mr. Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider introducing a lower rate of value added tax on those items which the European court has ruled should carry value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 4 July 1988]: It has been consistent Government policy to keep VAT simple by having a single positive rate of VAT, coupled with zero rates where appropriate. That remains the case.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide details of the estimated value added tax which will be gathered from the insurance industry after the mitigating measures in consequence of the European court's decison on value added tax.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 4 July 1988]: Virtually all the net yield (about £75 million) from the insurance industry would come from value added tax charged on non-domestic construction and rents. Most of the remainder would come from VAT charged on fuel and power.

DEFENCE

MOD Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officers of the Ministry of Defence police have undergone riot training since January 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: In common with other police forces, MDP officers receive basic public order training as an integral part of their initial recruits course. Four hundred and eighteen MDP officers have undergone this training since 1 January 1987. In the same period 901 officers have received refresher training.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of supplying the operations support unit of the Ministry of Defence police with riot equipment; what is the estimated cost of training the members of the operational support unit to use riot equipment; and on how many occasions has such equipment been used by members of the operational support unit.

Mr. Sainsbury: Replacement public order protective clothing comprising helmets, boots, flameproof overalls and gloves costing £10,000 was provided for the OSU in the financial year 1987-88.

Public order training is undertaken by the OSU as part of its routine programme when not deployed operationally. It does not use additional or external resources, and therefore incurs no extra costs.

The OSU has used public order protective clothing and equipment only in June 1985 and June 1988, on both occasions in the Stonehenge area.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances Ministry of Defence police officers are engaged on armed duty on public roads.

Mr. Sainsbury: When operational circumstances require.

Busy Brewer Exercises

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Busy Brewer exercises that have taken place at military bases in the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I understand that exercises in the Busy Brewer series have been taking place only since 1982. Records of these exercises are readily available only from 1984, and these indicate that the following exercises have taken place since then:

Date	Base
1984
25 April to 17 May	RAF Upper Heyford
13 September to 12 October	RAF Fairford
1985
2 May to 20 June	RAF Fairford

Military Installations (Security)

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many private security companies are employed in the protection of Ministry of Defence and military installations; and what the annual value of these contracts has been for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Nine companies have been employed to provide security guarding services and the approximate total value of contracts placed in each year was:

Year	£
1983-84	250,000
1984-85	350,000
1985-86	600,000
1986-87	1,100,000
1987-88	1,350,000

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the practice of employing unarmed civilians, through private security firms to guard military bases within the United Kingdom began; what is the extent of the practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is MOD policy to employ unarmed civilian security guards through private security firms on routine guarding tasks at military establishments to relieve trained service men for other more appropriate duties.

Current records show that the first contract was placed in 1978; such contracts are placed only when appropriate security criteria can be satisfied. At present there are 21 military establishments normally guarded in this way.

Computer Work Stations

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many computer work stations there are in his Department; what is the ratio of work stations to civil servants; and how he expects this to change over the next five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information Technology

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the composition of the senior information technology strategy committees in his Department; and how many times in the past year its meetings have been attended by Ministers.

Mr. Sainsbury: The defence IT management board provides the senior IT strategy committee in the Department. The composition of the board is:

2nd Permanent Under-Secretary of State—Chairman
Deputy Chief of the Defence Staff (Systems)
Chief of Fleet Support
Quartermaster General
Air Member for Supply and Organisation
Chief of Defence Intelligence
Deputy Chief Scientific Adviser
Deputy Under-Secretary of State (Civilian Management)
Deputy Under-Secretary of State (Finance)
Deputy Under-Secretary of State (Defence Procurement)
Deputy Under-Secretary of State (Personnel and Logistics)
Director Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency

The director general IT systems, the assistant chief of defence staff (command, control, communications and information systems) and the director general strategic electronic systems attend meetings of the board as chairmen of the defence IT co-ordinating committee, the defence command, control, communications and information systems board and the procurement executive command, control, communications and information systems board, respectively. These committees report to the defence IT management board.

The board is not attended by Ministers.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the staff in his Department at grades 1, 2 and 3 have attended courses or training on information technology awareness or management in the last 12 months.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the 12 months to 31 March 1988, the latest period for which figures are available, a total of 19 civilian officers in grades 1, 2 and 3 attended courses or training events specifically relating to information technology. In addition, six grade 3 officers attended the top management programme, which normally includes a session on information technology.

Information is not available as to how many other general management or similar courses attended by grade 1-3 officers included information technology among the topics covered.

Trespass

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many people have been taken into custody after trespassing on Ministry of Defence land; and what was the minimum and maximum length of custody during the last five years;

(2) how many challenges to the validity of local byelaws in connection with Ministry of Defence property have been made during the last five years;

(3) how many people have been convicted and how many acquitted for trespassing on Ministry of Defence land during the last five years;

(4) how many people have been escorted from Ministry of Defence land as civil trespassers; and how many have been arrested for wilfully obstructing a police officer under section 51(3) of the Police Act 1964 during the last five years;

(5) how many people have been reported for process for trespassing on Ministry of Defence land; and how many were subsequently summoned during the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only by disproportionate effort.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what date, and in what form, the United States President indicated his willingness to seek the approval of Congress under Cmnd. 9847 (1956) the amendment agreement on the United Kingdom—United States exchange of information on naval nuclear propulsion units to Cmnd. 9560, for Her Majesty's Government to make available technology and design data on nuclear propelled submarines to Canada;

(2) on what date, and in what form, the United States President indicated his willingness to seek the approval of Congress under articles III, IV, VC, VIA and VII of Cmnd. 537 of 3 July 1958 as amended by Cmnd. 859, in 1959; by Cmnd. 4119 in 1969; by Cmnd. 6017 in 1975; Cmnd. 7976 in 1979 and Cmnd. 9336 in 1984 agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Government of the United States of America for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes, for Her Majesty's Government to make available technology and design data on nuclear submarines to Canada;

(3) on what date, and in what form, the United States President indicated his willingness to seek the approval of Congress under articles I(2) and V of Cmnd. 9560 1955 agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Government of the United States of America for co-operation regarding atomic information for mutual defence purposes, 15 June 1955 for Her Majesty's Goverment to make available technology and design data on nuclear propelled submarines to Canada.

Mr. Sainsbury: Under the terms of the United States/United Kingdom "Agreement for Co-operation in the Uses of Atomic Energy for Mutual Defence Purposes of 1958" (Cmnd. 537 (as amended)), United States consent is required for the transfer by the United Kingdom to a third party of information and technology covered by that agreement. The willingness of the United States President to seek Congressional approval of amendments to the United States/Canada "Agreement for Co-operation in the Uses of Atomic Energy for Mutual Defence Purposes" of 1959 to allow the transfer of equipment and materials related to the Trafalgar class nuclear-powered submarine was made public by a statement from the spokesman for the United States Department of State on 27 April.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his counterpart in the United States held any specific consultations with him prior to the Moscow summit to seek permission from Her Majesty's Government that technology developed under licence in the United Kingdom for the strategic defence initiative star wars programme may be offered to the Soviet Union at some future date as stated by President Reagan in Moscow.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. The United States President's offer to share the fruits of SDI research has not been elaborated in the detail suggested in the hon. Member's question. If and when such an issue were to arise, it would be the subject of consultation.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards further off-base dispersal exercises for cruise missile support vehicles in the light of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 3 December 1987, at column 708.

Helicopters

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for the military helicopter ordering programme of the proposed restructuring of Westland through the sale of Fiat's 16·7 per cent. stake to UTC.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not expected that the proposed sale of Fiat's holding in Westland Helicopters to UTC will have any effect on the military helicopter ordering programme.

Steeple Aston (Noise)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the recent noise testing carried out by the Royal Air Force institute of community health at Dr. Ratcliffe's school, Steeple Aston: and if he will publish the results in the Official Report;

(2) if in the light of the results of the recent noise testing carried out at Dr. Ratcliffe's school, Steeple Aston, he will issue instructions to prevent airplanes from Royal Air Force Upper Heyford taking off directly over Steeple Aston.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1988, c. 224]: I have decided that in the light of local concern following the change in fine-weather take-off patterns at RAF Upper Heyford, the full noise survey planned for the autumn should be brought forward to the second half of July. This will enable us to evaluate objectively possible alternative operating patterns aimed at diminishing the disturbance to the local community, while maintaining the safety margins of the flying operations. In advance of this survey I have agreed in principle that, exceptionally, my Department will be prepared to meet the cost of providing sound insulation for the Dr. Ratcliffe school at Steeple Aston.

NORTHERN IRELAND

School Buildings

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the modernisations and extensions which have been carried out in 1986, 1987 and 1988 at controlled secondary schools in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The following modernisations and extensions have been approved to begin construction at controlled secondary schools (including controlled grammar) in the financial years 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89.

ENVIRONMENT

Homeless Persons

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of homeless persons in each year between 1976 and 1987 in each of the constituencies of Hendon, South, Mid-Worcestershire, Lancashire, West, Fylde, Staffordshire, Moorlands and Amber Valley.

Mrs. Roe: Aggregate figures of homeless household accepted under the Housing Acts are reported by each local authority. Therefore, figures are available for Staffordshire, Moorlands, but not for the other five constituencies.

The figures reported for 1981 to 1986 by local authorities appear in a table placed in the Library in May 1987. Corresponding earlier figures are in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics" which are also available in the Library.

Period	Issue Number	Table Number
1976
1st half	42	11
2nd half	43	12
1977
1st half	46	11
2nd half	48	12
1978
1st and 2nd halves	52	12
1979
1st and 2nd halves	54	14
1980
1st half	59	9
2nd half	62	13

Staffordshire Moorlands district council reported 29 acceptances during the first half of 1987, but has not yet provided returns for the second half.

Figures are not strictly comparable over the whole period, because of changes in the reporting system in December 1977 and, in non-metropolitan districts, from the fourth quarter of 1980.

House Building

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new houses were built (a) in the private sector, (b) by housing associations and (c) by local authorities in each year between 1976 and 1987 in each of the constituencies of Hendon, South, Mid-Worcestershire, Lancashire, West, Fylde, Staffordshire, Moorlands and Amber Valley.

Mrs. Roe: The information collected on housebuilding is for the whole of each local authority area. Therefore, figures are available for Staffordshire, Moorlands, but not for the other five constituencies.

The reported figures for local authorities appear in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics" which are available in the Library.

Year	Issue number

Housing Statistics

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department possesses on the differentials in housing costs, private house prices, availability of accommodation for rent and purchase, and demand for accommodation, as between English regions.

Mrs. Roe: Regional analyses are available from regular returns and sample surveys of local authority rents, rents registered for private and housing association accommodation, prices paid for houses and flats purchased with building society loans, prices paid for housing land, and tender costs of local authority housing. Also, average household expenditure on housing is collected in the family expenditure survey: as the sample is relatively small, regional analyses combine two years' data.

Estimates for the numbers of dwellings in owner-occupation and those which are rented are produced, based on the results of the 1981 census and on information about changes since then, particularly new housebuilding and council house sales. Projections of the numbers of households are derived every second year, which are based on official population projections and on past trends in household formation.

Construction Industry

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish his Department's report on cowboys in the construction industry.

Mr. Trippier: The working party's report will be published shortly.

House Conditions

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish his Department's survey of house conditions.

Mr. Waldegrave: The analysis of the 1986 English house condition survey is nearing completion. We shall publish the results just as soon as we can.

Waste Imports

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to whether the proposed imports of American domestic waste will have had a proportion or the majority of the recycleable wastes removed beforehand.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no information on this point.

Waste Disposal (Inspection)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the compliance by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution with the minimum recommended inspection frequencies of waste disposal operations.

Mr. Moynihan: There are no minimum inspection frequencies for waste disposal facilities. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution plans to publish in the autumn guidance on recommended average inspection frequencies by waste disposal authorities. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution does not visit sites on a regular basis. Its remit is to visit selected sites in order to discharge their funcions of advising waste disposal authorities and promoting adequate and consistent standards.

Palace of Westminster (Television Monitors)

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the individual cost by screen area of the television monitors located around the Palace of Westminster for use as annunciators.

Mr. Chope: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. The annunciator systems in both Houses are maintained for the Parliamentary Works Office by Rediffusion Business Electronic Ltd. The annual cost is approximately £250,000.

There are at present some 800 monitors in the House of Commons system.

Sport and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why, pursuant to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 40, relating to the placing of the responses to the paper, "Competition in the Management of Local Authority Sport and Leisure Facilities" in the Library, only 16 of the 352 responses have been released; and whether the objections raised by those 16 are typical of all the responses.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the statement which I made in the House on 1 July at columns 652-64.

VAT

165. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implication for jobs (a) in the construction industry and (b) generally of the recent ruling on value added tax exemptions in the European Court.

Mr. Trippier: I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Sports (Head Injuries)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to reduce the number of head injuries that result from sports-related accidents.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council, whose grant is provided by the Department, advises sports governing bodies on improving safety standards in sports equipment and performance. The governing bodies are responsible for ensuring that their sports are organised to minimise any risk of injuries.

Birtenshaw Farm

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Bolton council has ever applied for (a) the convenant on land at Birtenshaw Farm to be confirmed by Act of Parliament and (b) the land to be designated as green belt.

Mr. Waldegrave: Bolton borough council has never asked for the covenant to be confirmed by Act of Parliament. It supported the inclusion of the land in the green belt proposed by the Greater Manchester council in 1981, but, following a local inquiry, that council omitted it in accordance with the inspector's recommendation.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received Bolton council's view about the validity of the covenant affecting the land at Birtenshaw Farm; and when he expects to make a decision about its discharge.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has not received a considered view of the validity of the covenant from the Bolton borough council. He expects to issue his decision shortly.

National Rivers Authority Advisory Committee

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his answer of 29 July to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, if he will specify the Vote subhead which authorises the expenditure incurred in the use of facilities of his Department by the chairman of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee;

(2) what has been the expenditure incurred to date by the chairman of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee as a result of his use of the secretarial facilities and stationery provided by his Department.

Mr. Moynihan: Estimate provision for the National Rivers Authority advisory committee is contained within Class X, Vote 5 subhead A1 (Department of Environment: administration). Expenditure by the chairman is not separately identified.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision is made within his Department's budget for expenditure incurred by (a) the chairman of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee in using his Department's secretarial facilities and stationery and (b) by the other Members and Peers mentioned in his answer of 29 June to the hon. Member for Caerphilly.

Mr. Moynihan: Such expenditure by Parliamentary Private Secretaries and my noble Friend Lord Hesketh is subsumed within the provision for Private Offices; that by my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Crickhowell within the provision for the National Rivers Authority advisory committee.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received proposals from the London residuary body on the transfer of its remaining housing mortgages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department has today published a consultation paper setting out proposals for the London residuary body (LRB) to divest itself of its remaining housing mortgages. Copies of the paper have been placed in the Library.

The LRB has already disposed of its non-domestic mortgages and housing association mortgages to the boroughs and districts in whose areas they are located. The present proposals deal with the last main group of mortgages held by the LRB. They involve the transfer of the portfolio to the London borough of Richmond, which would administer it on behalf of all London boroughs. For borrowers, the transfer will mean that they make their mortgage repayments to Richmond rather than to the LRB.

The LRB will be writing to all its borrowers shortly to explain the proposals in more detail. I am pleased that the London borough of Richmond is prepared to assume responsibility for administering these mortgages. I am confident that the arrangements which we are proposing safeguard the interests of the borrowers and allow the LRB to discharge its obligations satisfactorily.

CRE (Housing Codes)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has given further consideration to the extent of the proposed power for the Commission for Racial Equality to issue codes on housing.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am advised that problems relating to the rules of relevance are likely to prevent us from introducing in another place an amendment providing in the Housing Bill as comprehensive a power as we would have liked. We expect, however, that we will be able to cover not only rented housing but housing that is leasehold or occupied under licence and agencies such as building societies and estate agents in so far as they deal with these kinds of accommodation. We aim to extend the power to the rest of the housing field when a suitable opportunity arises. It will be for the commission to decide what action to take in the light of this.

Environmental Assessment

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue a circular to local planning authorities setting out the procedures embodied in the regulations which implement the European Community directive on environmental assessment 85/337/EEC.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department and the Welsh Office intend to issue the circular as soon as the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations, which were laid before Parliament in draft on 14 June, have been approved and made.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department will publish the revised version of its booklet entitled, "Environmental Assessment of Major Projects in England and Wales".

Mr. Waldegrave: A draft of this advisory booklet was included with my Department's consultation paper on environmental assessment issued in April 1986. The final version is currently being prepared and will be issued in the next month or two.

Housing (Rural Areas)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make an announcement about housing in rural areas.

Mr. Ridley: The Government are committed to the growth of owner-occupation and to creating the right conditions for private investment in rented housing. Our policies are set out in the White Paper Cm. 214. I have been considering what further steps we can take to improve the supply of housing in rural areas both for sale and to rent at prices within the reach of people on all levels of income. I am issuing today two documents.

The first is an announcement of proposals for increasing the supply of low-cost housing in smaller villages; primarily through expanding the coverage and role of housing associations and the encouragement of private investment. This will involve building on the success of the rural housing association movement that has been established in part through the work of the National Agricultural Centre Rural Trust (NACRT). Its work is already funded by the Rural Development Commission and in the past by the Housing Corporation. I have agreed with the Rural Development Commission a threefold increase in NACRT's funding to enable it to expand its support service to the rural housing association movement and to establish further rural housing associations where they are needed. The Housing Corporation has already announced in its development programme for 1988-89 a revision of the criteria governing the selection of schemes in rural areas, and a doubling of its programme in smaller villages. I have now agreed with the Housing Corporation an extension to its commitment under which it will earmark sufficient funds within its development programme to permit a steady increase in the number of rural schemes approved within the new criteria up to 1990-91. The target figure for that year will be 600 approvals compared with the 185 approvals (on a slightly broader definition) given in 1987-88.

I shall also be looking for more direct private investment to meet the need for lower-cost housing in rural areas. The deregulation of rents combined with the tax benefits and subsidies now available should provide a major stimulus to the private rented sector, and will help landowners to provide housing for their local communities while still making a reasonable return. I hope that developers will pay increasing attention to the needs of village communities by designing developments sympathetically and by building balanced developments that help meet local needs for low-cost housing for rent and sale.

The second paper, on village housing and new villages, is being published as a basis for discussion on housing in rural areas and the land-use planning implications. In the light of comments received, the need for new policy guidance on the subject will be considered. The paper discusses housing in relation to the changing rural economy and considers housing development in villages and small towns and the possibility of new villages in areas well away from the conurbations and well outside the green belts. It emphasises that the Government are fully committed to preserving the green belts, areas of outstanding natural beauty and other statutorily protected areas.

Copies of both papers are available in the Library of the House and in the Vote Office.

Expanded Polystyrene

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many companies are using pentane technology to replace the use of chlorofluorocarbons for the production of expanded polystyrene; and what information he has about the alternative materials available.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Pentane is already used as the blowing agent in the production of bead expanded polystyrene. All United Kingdom manufacturers of extruded expanded polystyrene have indicated that they propose to phase out the use of those clorofluorocarbons (CFCs) which are controlled under the provisions of the Montreal protocol. I am unable to provide a comprehensive answer regarding alternative materials. However, prices of the controlled CFCs are expected to rise as the protocol takes effect and this will encourage the development and adoption of substitutes.

Coast Protection

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has conducted into the impact on the British coast of a rise in the sea level of over $\frac{1}{4}$ metre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 4 July 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

As part of a broader consideration of the impact of possible climate changes by the middle of the next century, the effect of a sea-level rise in excess of 0·2 m is being studied. The recent results were reported to the Toronto conference on "The Changing Atmosphere"; a copy of the United Kingdom report will be placed in the Library of the House.

Drainage bodies will have in mind the possibility of a rise in sea level, amongst other factors, when identifying the need for coast protection and sea defence work. When considering proposals for grant aid for such work, an allowance for a rate of rise of 0·3 m per century has been accepted as reasonable (equivalent to 0·2 m by 2050).

ENERGY

Daya Bay Project

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department or organisations responsible to his Department have received any request since May 1979 to conduct a safety and evacuation analysis for the Daya Bay pressurised water reactor project at Guandong in the Republic of China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Hong Kong Government have retained the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority as consultants to advise on the implications of the Daya Bay pressurised water reactor for the territory.

Hinkley Point

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many civil servants in his Department have been seconded to the secretariat for the Hinkley Point C public inquiry; what is the current contact telephone number for the secretariat in (a) Somerset and (b) his Department; and for how long he estimates the secondments will be necessary.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department currently has four members of staff seconded to the Hinkley Point C inquiry secretariat. In addition another two members will be seconded to the secretariat shortly.

The telephone numbers for the secretariat are as follows:

1. Somerset—0278 652830 and 0278 652832
2. London—01 211 7324 and 01 211 5591

I expect secondments to continue until the inspector reports to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the terms of reference of the public inquiry into the Central Electricity Generating Board's proposal to build a pressurised water reactor nuclear power station at Hinkley Point.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 21 March 1988, at columns 21-2.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will arrange for a copy of the full 1987 International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards implementation report (SCR) to be placed in (a) the Library and (b) his departmental library.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. As I said in my reply to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 14 June 1988, at column 101, the annual safeguards implementation reports of the International Atomic Energy Agency are confidential to board members. A summary will be published in the agency's 1987 annual report, which will be placed in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

13. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the anticipated trends in the numbers of 16 to 19-year-olds entering the employment market in the northern region of England over the next five years.

Mr. Lee: The population of 16 to 19-year-olds in the northern region of England is projected to fall by 41,000 or 22 per cent., between mid-1988 and mid-1993. My Department does not make projections of the numbers in this age group who will enter the employment market in the northern region, but it is clear that these numbers too must be expected to fall substantially as they will do in Great Britain as a whole.

23. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on levels of employment in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Lee: The latest available employment estimates for the county are from the September 1984 census of employment. There were then 462,700 employees in employment in South Yorkshire.

27. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the changes in the numbers of people unemployed since June 1987.

Mr. Lee: In the 11 months between June 1987 and May 1988 seasonally adjusted unemployment excluding school leavers in the United Kingdom fell by 506,700 to 2,415,500, the lowest figure on a consistent basis since September 1981.

39. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will made a statement on the current levels of unemployment in the north-west of England.

Mr. Lee: In May 1988. Seasonally adjusted unemployment, excluding school leavers, in the north-west region was 336,100, compared with 401,000 in May 1987, a fall of 63,900 over the last 12 Months and the lowest since July 1981.

41. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement regarding the trend in unemployment in Gloucester over the past year.

Mr. Lee In May 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the Gloucester travel-to-work-area was 4,276 or 6·2 per cent., of all employees in employment plus the unemployed compared with 5,638 or 8·2 per cent. in May 1987, a fall of 1,362 over the last 12 months.

53. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the reduction in unemployment levels in the United Kingdom since May 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In the three years between May 1985 and May 1988 seasonally adjusted unemployment, excluding school leavers, in the United Kingdom fell by 702,600. Within this period the total has fallen by 794,800 over the 22 months since July 1986, the longest and largest sustained fall since the war.

85. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage rate of unemployment in the United Kingdom; and what information he has about the corresponding figures for France, Italy and West Germany.

Mr. Lee: The information is as follows:

Standardised unemployment rates[1] April 1988, seasonally adjusted

	Per cent.
United Kingdom	8·8
France	10·3
Italy	11·7
West Germany	[2]6·5

[1] OECD standardised rates except Italy for which the latest harmonised rate published by the Statistical Office of the European Community has been given.

[2] March, 1988 figure.

107. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the numbers of people employed in the south-west of England.

Mr. Lee: The civilian employed labour force in the south-west region has increased in each of the last five years. In 1987 there was a net increase of 32,000 to 1,868,000. The civilian employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment and the self-employed.

114. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the levels of unemployment in each of the United Kingdom regions.

Mr. Lee: The table shows for each of the standard regions in the United Kingdom, the seasonally adjusted level of unemployment excluding school leavers in May 1988 together with the percentage unemployment rates and the change over the last 12 months. The largest falls in the unemployment rates have been in the west midlands, north-west, north and Wales.

Region	Number May 1988	Percentage rates May 1988	Change since May 1987
South East	528,500	5·7	−1·8
Greater London	300,900	7·0	−1·6
East Anglia	54,400	5·4	−1·9
South West	142,700	6·9	−1·8
West Midlands	243,200	9·4	−2·4
East Midlands	151,800	7·9	−1·7
Yorkshire and Humberside	237,900	10·1	−1·9
North West	336,100	11·3	−2·2
North	180,400	12·7	−2·2
Wales	132,200	11·2	−2·0
Scotland	291,300	11·9	−1·9
Northern Ireland	116,700	17·1	−1·4

118. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of unemployment.

Mr. Lee: In May 1988 the level of seasonally adjusted adult unemployment in the United Kingdom was 2,415,500, the lowest level on a consistent basis since September 1981. The figure has now fallen for 22 consecutive months, by 794,800 in total since July 1986, the longest and largest sustained fall on record since the war.

137. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of unemployment in Suffolk at the latest estimated date.

Mr. Lee: In May 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the county of Suffolk was 15,010, a fall of 5,867 over the last 12 months.

138. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of young people left school and went directly into work at 16 years without training in 1987.

Mr. Cope: We do not have any direct information on this point. However, a postal survey of young people aged 16 and 17 was conducted in spring 1987 as part of the youth cohort study. Twenty-three per cent. of those who replied said they were in full-time employment, and of those 25 per cent. said they neither received on-the-job training, nor attended courses at college.

141. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in the east midlands.

Mr. Lee: In May 1988, seasonally adjusted unemployment excluding school leavers in the east midlands region was 151,800, compared with 184,600 in May 1987, a fall of 32,800 over the last 12 months.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will detail the annual average for each year since 1979 of (a) the number of unemployed and (b) the number and percentage of this total who have been out of work for more than 12 months.

Mr. Lee: Direct comparisons of unemployment by duration since 1979 are not possible because of changes in the coverage of the count. The following is the available information which is also in the Library. Table (a) shows the average number of unemployed registrants in the United Kingdom and the average number and percentage of these who had been unemployed for 12 months or more for each year from 1979 to 1982. Table (b) shows corresponding figures according to the average number of claimants, from 1983 to 1987.

Table A

Average number of unemployed registrants in the United Kingdom

	Total unemployed	Unemployed over 12 months
		Total	Percentage of unemployed
1979	1,406,873	359,651	25·6
1980	1,738,250	368,651	21·2
1981	2,696,348	595,708	22·1
1982	3,167,161	1,059,665	33·5

Food and Environmental Protection

15. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional Health and Safety Executive inspectors are needed to enforce the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

18. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional inspectors will be needed to fully implement the Food and Environment Protection Act.

28. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional inspectors will be needed to fully implement the Food and Environment Protection Act.

116. Mr. Rooker To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional Health and Safety Executive inspectors are needed to enforce the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: The Food and Environment Protection Act and its related Control of Pesticides Regulations are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive concurrently with other health and safety regulations. The executive plans to increase the number of inspectors in the agricultural and factory inspectorates from the current levels of 150 and 542·5 to 160 and 588 respectively by the end of 1988-89.

126. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many notices have been served under the Food and Environment Protection Act since it came into force.

130. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many notices have been served under the Food and Environment Protection Act since it came into force.

Mr. Nicholls: Between 27 June 1987 and 31 March 1988, a total of 61 enforcement notices were issued by the Health and Safety Executive under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

152. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions have occurred under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 since it came into force.

Mr. Nicholls: Between 27 June 1987 and 31 March 1988 four prosecutions including eight offences were taken by the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Tourism

16. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much the tourism industry earns in terms of overseas earnings; and what equivalent information he has for other major industries.

Mr. Lee: Overseas earnings from tourism were £6·237 billion in 1987, three times as much as earnings from car exports, which were £1,981 million, and nearly 25 per cent. higher than earnings from aerospace exports, which were £4,996 million. Overseas tourism earns half as much as the financial services sector and altogether accounts for over 20 per cent. of the service sector's total earnings. This is equivalent to about 10 per cent. of the value of all manufacturing exports.

98. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the increase in the total number of jobs in the tourism industry in the year to December 1987.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated that the number of employees in employment in tourism-related industries increased by 41,000, or 3 per cent., between December 1986 and December 1987. The self-employed are not included in this estimate.

102. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he is doing in schools to promote awareness of tourism as a career.

Mr. Lee: A number of initiatives are under way, including some 20 projects funded under the technical and vocational education initiative. I also constantly encourage the tourism industry itself to promote the excellent and varied career opportunities that it offers. It is pleasing to see the range of careers material aimed at young people that is now available.

117. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the increase in jobs in the tourism industry in the regions outside London and the south-east between December 1985 and December 1987.

Mr. Lee: Regional information for the tourist industry as a whole is not available for the period specified. However, it is estimated that the number of employees in employment specifically in the hotel and catering industry outside London and the south-east increased by 51,000 or 8 per cent. between December 1985 and December 1987. The self-employed are not included in this estimate.

158. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further plans he has to encourage jobs in tourism in East Anglia; and what assessment he has made of the impact of tourists in the region.

Mr. Lee: My Department will continue to support the work of the English tourist board and the East Anglia tourist board in promoting the expansion of tourism in East Anglia, thereby helping to create more jobs not only in the tourist sector but also in other related industries in the area. In 1987 employment in the hotel and catering sectors in the East Anglia employment region was 34,000, compared with 23,000 in 1977, an increase of 47 per cent. It should be noted, however, that these figures are subject to significant sampling errors. During the same period tourism spend went up from £240 million to £670 million, an increase of 179 per cent.

Health and Safety Executive

17. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of inspectors now available to the Health and Safety Executive.

20. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of inspectors now available to the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: As of 1 June this year, the total number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive was 1,159.

31. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional areas of responsibility have been taken on by the Health and Safety Executive since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 laid upon the Health and Safety Commission and Executive responsibility for virtually all aspects of occupational health and safety, and most aspects of the protection of the public from industrial activity. Within this overall competence HSE has acquired the following specific new responsibilities since 1979:

(i) carriage by road, classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous substances;
(ii) notification of new and existing substances before they are placed on the market;
(iii) action under the European directive on the control of industrial major accident hazards;
(iv) mains gas safety;
(v) asbestos licensing;
(vi) the enforcement of part 3 of the Food and Environment Protection Act and its related Control of Pesticides Regulations.

In addition, the HSE has acquired new or substantially expanded work in connection with the nuclear industry and the control of dangerous substances in harbour areas, radiation and noise and the health and safety implications of the development and use of new technology including programmable electronics and biotechnology. There has also been a significant growth of EC activity and regulations in areas affecting safety and health, and a general growth in public and international interest in relevant environmental and major hazards issues requiring action by the HSE.

32. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the director general of the Health and Safety Executive to discuss funding of the Health and Safety Executive.

97. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the director general of the Health and Safety Executive to discuss funding of the executive.

109. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the director general of the Health and Safety Executive to discuss funding of the executive.

144. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the director general of the Health and Safety Executive to discuss funding of the executive.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I last met the Health and Safety Commission to discuss funding of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive on 8 March 1988. The director general of the HSE attended the meeting.

35. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors were employed by the Health and Safety Executive in (a) 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available.

149. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors were employed by the Health and Safety Executive 1979; and what is the figure at present.

89. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors were employed by the Health and Safety Executive in 1979 and at present.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April 1979, 1,424 inspectors were in post in the HSE. On 1 June 1988 there were 1,159.

40. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total accommodation costs paid to Health and Safety Executive staff following the relocation of the executive to Bootle.

145. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total accommodation costs paid to Health and Safety Executive staff following the relocation of the Health and Safety Executive to Bootle.

Mr. Nicholls: The relocation of the Health and Safety Executive to Bootle was phased between 1982 and 1986 and the search and analysis of individual records to determine for example what was paid to individuals employed on detached duty terms would be disproportionately expensive.

63. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of inspectors now available to the Health and Safety Executive.

95. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of inspectors now available to the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: The total number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive is 1,159 (1 June 1988).

78. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that the research and laboratory services division of the Health and Safety Executive is able to carry out its responsibilities adequately.

Mr. Nicholls: The responsibility for ensuring that the division is able to carry out its responsibilities adequately lies with the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. The division is receiving an appropriate share of the available resources and emphasis is being placed on efficiency improvements within the division to obtain maximum benefit from these resources.

87. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to improve the performance of the technology division of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The performance of the technology division is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive.

108. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that the directorate of information services of the Health and Safety Executive is able to carry out its responsibilities effectively.

Mr. Nicholls: I am satisfied that the Health and Safety Executive's directorate of information and advisory services is able to carry out its responsibilities effectively. The management of the division is a matter for the executive.

120. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that the research and laboratory services division of the Health and Safety Executive is able to carry out its responsibilities adequately.

162. Mr. Foot: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that the research and laboratory services division of the Health and Safety Executive is able to carry out its responsibilities adequately.

Mr. Nicholls: I am satisfied that the Health and Safety Executive's research and laboratories division is able to carry out its responsibilities effectively. The management of the division is a matter for the executive.

121. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the additional funding sought by the Health and Safety Executive for the running of the executive during the year 1988-89.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive did not seek any additional funding at the time of the 1988-89 Supply Estimates.

128. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that the enforcing inspectorates of the Health and Safety Executive receive adequate back-up services from the specialist inspectorates.

148. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that the enforcing inspectorates of the Health and Safety Executive receive adequate back-up services from the specialist inspectorates.

Mr. Nicholls: The allocation of resources in support of the enforcing inspectorate is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive.

132. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the United Kingdom's 1,500 most potentially dangerous workplaces the technology division of the Health and Safety Executive plans to inspect in the next 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls: Of the approximately 1,300 premises which are subject to the Fire Certification (Special Premises) Regulations 1976, HSE inspectors from the technology division expect to visit 215 in 1988-89. Some 600 certificates have already been issued, a further 35 premises have been surveyed and listed major hazard sites are also subject to other visits by HSE inspectors.

150. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that the directorate of information services of the Health and Safety Executive is able to carry out its responsibilities effectively.

Mr. Nicholls: The responsibility for ensuring that the division is able to carry out its responsibilities adequately lies with the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. The division is receiving an appropriate share of the available resources and emphasis is being placed on efficiency improvements within the division to obtain maximum benefit from them.

Construction Industry

19. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prohibition notices have been issued during the Health and Safety Executive's intensive campaign of visits to construction sites in 1988.

Mr. Cope: Between 1 January 1988 and 10 June 1988 632 prohibition notices have been issued by Health and Safety Executive inspectors participating in the series of construction site blitzes.

The present series of construction blitzes is continuing.

66. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the shortage of skilled workers in the construction industry at the present time.

Mr. Nicholls: The growth of the economy has meant increased demand for construction workers, particularly in the south. Employers are best placed to identify and meet their skill needs, and I hope they will participate fully in programmes such as the YTS and employment training.

99. Mr. Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many hours have been spent by inspectors who are usually employed in fields other than construction, in connection with the Health and Safety Executive's blitzes in 1988 on construction sites.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

106. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions have resulted from the Health and Safety Executive's campaign of visits to construction sites in 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

New Training Scheme

21. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations he has had with the Health and Safety Commission concerning the new training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The commission has strongly supported our policy that participants on the new employment training programme should have the same protection as employees for the purposes of health and safety legislation. The commission has recently forwarded, for my approval, draft regulations which would give effect to this policy, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State plans to lay these before Parliament shortly.

Adult Training

24. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet members of the Trades Union Congress Council to discuss the adult training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no present plans to do so.

140. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the progress of the adult training initiative.

Mr. Nicholls: Preparation for the launch of employment training are proceeding very well indeed. There has been a very good response from organisations bidding to deliver training places with over twice as many bids as are needed. The Training Commission will be signing contracts with providers during July and the programme will come into operation as planned on 5 September.

Small Firms

154. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inquiries were received by the small firms service in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

26. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of the small firms service.

Mr. Cope: The achievements of the small firms service in 1987-88 are set out in its annual report, published today. A copy will be sent to all hon. Members.

48. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to meet the president of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce to discuss the creation of small firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I met a delegation from the Association of British Chambers of Commerce on 30 June to discuss a range of issues including those relating to small firms.

133. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the annual report 1987-88 of the small firms service.

Mr. Cope: I have today announced the publication of the 1987-88 annual report of the small firms service. A copy is being sent to all hon. Members.

153. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many guarantees have been given by his Department under the loan guarantee scheme to small firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Since 1981 over 19,600 guaranteed loans to a value of £650 million have been given to small firms under the loan guarantee scheme. Following the introduction in January this year of simplified administrative procedures for loans up to £15,000 the rate of applications has doubled and is now running at over 200 a month. An increase in the guarantee to 85 per cent. for businesses in inner city task force areas was recently announced and I hope that this change will also lead to greater usage of the scheme.

155. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to meet the director general of the Institute of Directors to discuss the development of small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I have no immediate plans to meet the director general of the Institute of Directors, although both I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State have done so on many occasions.

156. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what contribution is being made to the Government's inner city initiative by the small firms service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The small firms service offers a comprehensive national information and counselling service for those running small businesses or wishing to start their own business. This includes over 39,000 counselling sessions in 1987-88 of which more than a quarter were in inner cities. The small firms service also maintains very close links with other organisations offering services to small businesses such as local enterprise agencies.

As part of the action for cities initiative, announced by the Prime Minister on 7 March, the small firms service contribution in inner city areas is being considerably increased with the opening of six new offices in Blackburn, Derby, Leicester, Middlesborough, Sheffield and Wolverhampton; and the appointment of specialist business advisers to work in the local small business community, particularly with ethnic minority businesses.

Young People (Training)

29. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage all employers to train young people who join their firms between the ages of 16 and 19 years.

Mr. Cope: The Government will continue to underline the value, to employers and young people alike, of quality training for young recruits. YTS offers young people a structured programme of quality training and work experience and is the main route into employment for the under 18 age group.

Crown Immunity

30. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last discussed the health and safety implications of Crown immunity with the Health and Safety Commission.

Mr. Nicholls: Since becoming Secretary of State for Employment my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not discussed this subject with the Health and Safety Commission. However, when my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, was Minister for Employment he met the commission on 8 May 1986 to discuss the matter.

Enterprise Agencies

33. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many enterprise agencies are operating in the inner city areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: There are over 90 local enterprise agencies operating in the urban programme authorities in England. My Department, through the local enterprise agency grant scheme, is encouraging the development of a network of viable agencies in England; 54 agencies in the urban programme authority areas were supported in the 1987-88 financial year. In addition, my Department has recently introduced a new local enterprise agency project scheme which is designed to assist projects run by agencies in the urban programme authority areas and to encourage greater private sector support for them.

Crossroads Attendance Schemes (Scotland)

34. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the impact of the rules of the new adult training programme on the Crossroads (Scottish) attendance schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members about the future of the Crossroads attendance schemes. The voluntary sector has an important part to play in employment training and I hope most existing managing agents and sponsors will move forward into the new programme.

Hotel, Catering and Travel Trades

36. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places are provided under the YTS in the hotels, catering and travel trades.

Mr. Cope: At the end of May 1988 there were 11,600 YTS places available on schemes in the hotel and catering industry and just over 2,000 places on schemes managed by the Association of British Travel Agents and a number of individual tour operators.

Heavy Weights (Lifting)

37. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on proposals from the Health and Safety Executive for legislation to control lifting of heavy weights.

Mr. Nicholls: A tripartite working party set up by the Health and Safety Commission to review proposals for regulations and guidance on the manual handling of loads will be presenting its conclusions to the commission this summer.

Industrial Relations

38. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has had any recent discussions with the Confederation of British Industry on the long-term improvement of industrial relations.

Mr. Cope: On the 14 June my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State spoke to the Confederation of British Industry conference about the Employment Act 1988.

Factory Inspectors

42. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the factory inspectorate are trainee inspectors.

92. Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the factory inspectorate are trainee inspectors.

Mr. Nicholls: 11·6 per cent. of the total number of factory inspectors in the inspectorate on 1 June 1988 are trainees.

45. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplaces the factory inspectorate visited during the periods 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987, and 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988.

56. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplaces the factory inspectorate visited during the periods 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987 and 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: Between 1 April 1986 and 31 March 1987, factory inspectors paid 186,155 visits to workplaces for which the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate had enforcement responsibility. Between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1988, 173,033 (provisional) visits were paid.

47. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many sites have been visited by the factory inspectorate at the latest available date using the hazards rating system since its introduction; and how many sites were scheduled to have been visited under this system by the same date.

Mr. Nicholls: This question is incapable of answer. The scheme has been in operation for over 10 years, and there is a substantial turnover of scheduled sites as companies grow or go out of business.

50. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many specialist factory inspectors are currently in place.

74. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many specialist factory inspectors are currently in post.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 June 1988 there were 213 specialist inspectors in post with the Health and Safety Executive.

68. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many specialist inspectors have resigned from the Health and Safety Executive in the past 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls: Between 1 June 1987 and 31 May 1988 a total of 10 specialist inspectors resigned from the Health and Safety Executive.

71. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest number of factory inspectors.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 June 1988 there were 542·5 inspectors in post in the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate.

80. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of reported accidents is investigated by the factory inspectorate.

157. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of reported accidents is investigated by the factory inspectorate.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1987-88 a total of 4·9 per cent. of reportable accidents reported to the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate were investigated.

84. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspector hours were spent enforcing the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations in the last 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls: Enforcement of the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Occurrences Regulations is dealt with during inspections and investigations, and the time spent on drawing the attention of employers to the need to report such incidents is not recorded separately.

93. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on (a) the number of Health and Safety Executive inspectors and (b) accident at work rates.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 June 1988 the total number of HSE inspectors in post was 1,159. The latest accident at work rates are given, for those industries where the HSE is the enforcing authority, in the Health and Safety Commission-Executive annual report 1986-87—a copy of which is in the Library.

105. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many specialist factory inspectors are currently in place.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 June 1988, there were 213 specialist factory inspectors in post with the Health and Safety Executive.

124. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how often sites are reviewed as to whether or not they should be inspected under the factory inspectorate's hazards rating system.

Mr. Nicholls: Each fixed premise registered with the factory inspectorate is allocated an inspection rating and this is reviewed at each visit to the premises. In addition, each inspection rating is reviewed at the start of every inspection year, when a rating is amended upwards to take into account the period since the last preventive inspection.

129. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average frequency of visits made by the factory inspectorate to known workplaces in 1987.

Mr Nicholls: There is no information available on the average frequency of visits made by the factory inspectorate to known workplaces in 1987.

131. Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of additional factory inspectors that would be required to allow the average frequency of preventive inspection of factory sites to be once in every four years.

Mr. Nicholls: The 402,000 premises registered with HSE include many fixed sites other than factories and there is an unknown number of small industrial establishments not registered. Consequently the information is not available in the form in which it is requested.

139. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how often sites are reviewed as to whether they should be inspected under the factory inspectorate's hazards rating system.

Mr Nicholls: Each fixed premise registered with the factory inspectorate is allocated an inspection rating and this is reviewed at each visit to the premises. In addition, each inspection rating is reviewed at the start of every inspection year, when a rating is amended upwards to take into account the period since the last preventive inspection.

146. Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many sites the factory inspectorate has decided not to visit unless requested to do so or unless there is a serious accident.

Mr. Nicholls: None.

Restart Scheme

43. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many restart interviews have been carried out since the introduction of the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Since national implementation of the restart programme on 1 July 1986 until 27 May 1988, almost 4 million restart interviews have taken place.

Great English City Breaks

44. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many bed nights for Great English City Breaks were sold between (a) October 1987 and February 1988 and (b) October 1986 and February 1987.

Mr. Lee: Exact figures for the periods specified are not available, because of the different methods of record-keeping employed by the cities involved in the city breaks promotion. However, ETB estimates are:

October 1987 to February 1988 = 20,000 bed nights sold.
October 1986 to February 1987 = 5,000 bed nights sold.

Gas Regulations

46. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspector hours were spent enforcing the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations during the past 12 months.

159. Mr. Terry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspector hours were spent enforcing the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations during the past 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls: The time spent by factory inspectors on enforcement related action connected with the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1984 is not recorded separately.

Dangerous Workplaces

49. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the United Kingdom's 1,500 most potentially dangerous workplaces the technology division of the Health and Safety Executive has inspected and certified for fire precautions since 1976.

54. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the United Kingdom's 1,500 most potentially dangerous workplaces the technology division of the Health and Safety Executive has inspected and certified for fire precautions since 1976.

Mr. Nicholls: Of the approximately 1,300 premises which are subject to the Fire Certification (Special Premises) Regulations 1976, the HSE has issued approximately 600 fire certificates and surveyed a further 35. This is part of a continuing programme.

Self-employment

51. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the increase in the number of people in self-employment since June 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Between June 1979 and December 1987, the latest date for which estimates are available, there was a net increase of 1,021,000 in the number of self-employed people in Great Britain.

134. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of self-employed people in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: In December 1987, the latest date for which estimates are available, there were 2,923,000 self-employed in the United Kingdom; this represented 12 per cent. of the employed labour force.

London Docklands

52. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends taking to increase training opportunities for unemployed people in the areas bordering the London docklands.

Mr. Nicholls: People in the areas bordering London docklands are served by a network of Training Commission offices delivering its full range of training programmes. In addition, the commission is working closely with the London Docklands development corporation to develop joint training initiatives.

The Training Commission and employment service have also set up the docklands liaison group to help co-ordinate and streamline links with local organisations. The group, in consultation with the London Docklands development corporation, the employment service, local business and other organisations, is seeking better information about new jobs and the skills which unemployed people in and around London docklands will need to help them take advantage of the many new opportunities which the regeneration of the docklands is providing.

Northern Region

55. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed as self-employed in the northern region; and what was the figure in 1983.

Mr. Lee: In December 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were an estimated 110,000 self-employed people in the northern region. In December 1983 the figure was 92,000.

62. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of YTS leavers in the northern region of England became unemployed.

Mr. Cope: The latest available information, from the Training Commission's 100 per cent. follow-up survey of YTS leavers, shows that 31 per cent. of leavers between April 1986 and December 1987 in the northern region were unemployed some three months after leaving their scheme.

69. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been lost in manufacturing in the northern region of England since 1979.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job losses and job gains. Between March 1979 and March 1988 the number of employees in employment in manufacturing in the northern region fell by 147,000.

Dock Labour Scheme

57. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he expects to announce changes in the dock labour scheme before 1 September 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: As I said in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler), on 29 April, at column 298, and on other occasions in the House, the Government have no present plans to change the scheme. I cannot speculate about what view might be taken in future.

Manufacturing Industry

58. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the trend in the numbers employed in the manufacturing industry.

Mr. Lee: Between April 1987 and April 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, there was an average net decrease of 3,000 per month in the number of employees in employment in the manufacturing industries in Great Britain. In the period from April 1986 to April 1987 the average net decrease was 12,000 per month. This is clear evidence that the trend in manufacturing employment has levelled out compared with the previous relatively rapid falls.

Long-term Unemployment

59. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve the work skills of the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Nicholls: The new £1·5 billion adult programme employment training, which starts on 5 September 1988, represents our major investment in improving the work skills of long-term unemployed people.

Employment training will be a high quality training programme relevant to the needs of individuals and the local labour market. Trainees will follow their own individual training plan leading to a record of achievement and wherever possible to recognised vocational qualifications or a credit towards one.

Hazardous Substances

60. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional health and safety inspectors will be needed to enforce the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: No additional Health and Safety Executive inspectors will be needed specifically to enforce the proposed Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations as currently drafted. Enforcement of the regulations will be integrated into normal inspection arrangements.

Construction Industry

61. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps is he taking to train more skilled workers for the construction industry.

Mr. Nicholls: We are spending some £150 million a year on providing nearly 60,000 YTS places for trainees in construction occupations, and the introduction of employment training this autumn will provide new opportunities for the training of the adult unemployed in construction skills. I understand that the Construction Industry Training Board is already discussing with employers the provision of up to 6,000 employment training places a year.

Non-statutory Training Organisations

64. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends taking to increase the effectiveness of non-statutory training organisations.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on Tuesday 29 March, at column 412.

Hazards Rating System (Site Inspections)

65. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how often sites are reviewed as to whether or not they should be inspected under the factory inspectorate's hazards rating system.

Mr. Nicholls: Each fixed premise registered with the factory inspectorate is allocated an inspection rating and this is reviewed at each visit to the premises.

In addition, each inspection rating is reviewed at the start of every inspection year, when a rating is amended upwards to take into account the period since the last preventive inspection.

Investment Statistics

67. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the figure for investment from July 1987 to December 1987 in (a) new hotel extensions or refurbishments, (b) marinas, (c) conference/theatre facilities, (d) mixed developments and (e) self-catering facilities.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board's "Tourism Investment Monitor", which identifies tourism developments valued at over £0·5 million, shows the following levels of investment in projects opened or under construction during the period July 1987 to December 1987:

	£ million
Hotel extension and refurbishments	155·3
Marinas	113·8
Theatres and conference facilities	154·2
Major mixed developments	247·1
Self-catering facilities	43·2

Rural Areas

70. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures are being undertaken by his Department to ensure a reduction of unemployment in rural areas with higher than average levels of unemployment.

Mr. Lee: My Department is playing its part with other interested Departments to foster improvements in the economy of rural areas. In particular, we are providing active encouragement and support to enterprise, through our support for local enterprise agencies, tourism, and small businesses, which we are aiding through our small firms service and a range of marketing improvement services. In addition, the full range of our employment, enterprise and training measures are available to help unemployed people in all rural areas.

There are clear signs that those policies are helping to reduce unemployment in all rural areas. Estimates of unemployment in rural areas produced for the Development Commission for Rural England show that in the year to January 1988 unemployment fell in all the commission's priority rural development areas. Some of the largest falls occurred in rural areas with the highest unemployment rates. The average unemployment rate of all rural development areas was 8·6 per cent. in January 1988, compared with an average for the United Kingdom of 9·8 per cent. at that time.

Information Technology

72. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends to take to tackle skill shortages in information technology.

Mr. Cope: The Government, through the Training Commission, support the learning of information technology (IT) skills with YTS and its adult training programmes including, from September, the £1·5 billion employment training programme. Support is also given to industrial training organisations and other employer groupings to improve the quantity and quality of relevant IT training. In addition, the number of places in higher education IT courses has increased by 50 per cent. since 1979 and is being expanded further.

Single Market

73. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will discuss with his European counterparts the impact of the single European market on working hours and conditions.

Mr. Cope: I have no plans at present to discuss these matters with ministerial colleagues from other member states. Working hours and conditions can most appropriately be discussed between employers and employees in the light of their individual circumstances.

161. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will discuss with his European counterparts the impact of the single European market on health and safety.

Mr. Cope: The Council of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers held on 1 December 1987 discussed the European Commission's plans for a programme of work on health and safety legislation following the adoption of the Single European Act. The Council which met on 9 June agreed a timetable, proposed by the current Presidency and the next two Presidencies, for further work on proposals for health and safety at work.

YTS

75. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on health and safety in relation to YTS.

Mr. Cope: The Training Commission places paramount importance on health and safety in YTS. There is a contractural requirement on managing agents to secure the health, safety and welfare of trainees both in work placements and in off-the-job training. In addition, a positive commitment to health and safety is one of the criteria which have to be met before approved training organisation status is granted. Moreover, in 1987 a total of 211 work placements were closed or not accepted because they did not meet the stringent health and safety requirements of the commission.

Details of how the commission has been implementing its policy can be found in the latest annual report, "Health and Safety on YTS 1 January 1987 to 31 December 1987", which is being placed in the Library.

88. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of young people in YTS schemes also undertake part-time study for further education qualifications at the same time.

Mr. Cope: There is no information available on the amount of part-time study undertaken by YTS trainees apart from that leading to vocational qualifications as part of their YTS training programme.

It is an objective of the two-year YTS that all trainees should have the opportunity to gain a recognised vocational qualification or a credit towards a qualification. All two-year YTS training programmes must provide trainees with a minimum of 20 weeks, and one-year programmes a minimum of 13 weeks off-the-job training.

Evidence from a survey of YTS trainees in their second year in September 1987 showed that 98 per cent. of them had trained for a qualification in their first year on YTS

West Midlands

76. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on current levels of unemployment in the west midlands.

Mr. Lee: In May 1988, seasonally adjusted unemployment excluding school leavers in the west midlands region was 243,200, compared with 305,800 in May 1987—a fall of 62,600 over the last 12 months and the lowest since March 1981.

Employment Medical Advisory Service

77. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many doctors and nurses are currently employed by the employment medical advisory service.

160. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many doctors and nurses are currently employed by the employment medical advisory service.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 June 1988 a total of 51 doctors and 47 nurses were employed in the Health and Safety Executive's employment medical advisory service.

110. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to strengthen the employment medical advisory service.

Mr. Nicholls: Responsibility for the employment medical advisory service lies with the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. A reorganisation of the service's regional structure has started and will bring it into line with the rest of HSE's area organisation. This will result in a more effective use of resources across the country.

Power Presses

79. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what qualifications a competent person must have to inspect safety equipment under the 1965 power press regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: The Power Presses Regulations 1965 do not require any specific qualifications for a competent person and whether a person is competent for the purpose of the regulations is for the court to decide. However, it is generally considered that such a person should have such practical and theoretical knowledge and the actual experience of the type of machinery or plant which he has to examine as will enable him to detect defects or weaknesses which it is the purpose of the examination to discover, and to assess their importance in relation to the strength and functions of the machinery or plant.

Availability for Work Rule (Itinerants)

81. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the availability for work rule for eligibility for unemployment benefit is applied to itinerants.

Mr. Lee: Availability for work is enforced by my Department through the availability questionnaire which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in this House on 14 December 1987, Official Report, columns 337-38. Instructions issued to officials in the south-west require them to apply the full test of availability to any unemployed person claiming benefit.

111. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take action to strengthen the availability for work rule such that itinerant hippies can no longer gain access to unemployment benefits.

Mr. Lee: Being available for work is a fundamental condition for the receipt of unemployment benefits. In the past 18 months my Department has improved its procedures for identifying those who are not genuinely available. Indeed, the revised questionnaire my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in this House on 14 December 1987 Official Report at columns 337-38 is already proving more successful in this area than its predecessors.

Instructions to officials in the south-west require them to apply availability testing fully to each claimant. We keep the availability test under review but we do not plan any changes to affect one group differently from another.

Training Commission

82. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has had on the future of the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Cope: Since the passing of the Employment Act 1988 I have received only one representation, from the Association of Principals of Colleges, about the composition of the additional membership of what has now become the Training Commission.

Young People and Sexual Discrimination

83. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many responses he has received to the consultative document on restrictions on employment of young people and removal of sexual discrimination in legislation; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department has received a total of 83 responses to the consultative document from various organisations and individuals.

Hotel and Catering Industry

86. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has for the increase in the number of self-employed people in the hotel and catering sector in the last four years.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated that between 1983 and 1987 the number of self-employed people in the hotel and catering industry in Great Britain increased by 38,000 or 27 per cent.

Job Vacancies

90. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inquiries were received in 1987 by unemployed people following up advertised job vacancies in jobcentres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Precise information for 1987 is not available. However I would expect the total to be broadly in line with that for 1985-86, the last year in which comprehensive information is available. At that time over 80 per cent. of the total 19 million job vacancy inquiries were made by unemployed people.

100. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current number of job vacancies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: In May 1988 the number of unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres in the United Kingdom, seasonally adjusted and excluding community programme vacancies was 255,500, compared with 230,500 in May 1987—an increase of 11 per cent. over the last 12 months. It is estimated that about one third of vacancies are notified to jobcentres.

Employers (Negligence)

91. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers have been sentenced to imprisonment since 1974, having been found negligent when their employees have been killed at work.

151. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers have been sentenced to imprisonment since 1974, having been found negligent when their employees have been killed at work.

Mr. Nicholls: None in prosecutions brought by the Health and Safety Executive.

Skillcentres

94. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people received training in Manpower Services Commissions skillcentres in the last year.

Mr. Nicholls: In the financial year 1987-88, the numbers of trainees starting courses in skillcentres run by the Skills Training Agency (STA) were as follows:

36,855 on Training Commission sponsored training; 50,000 on employer-sponsored training. In addition, a further 22,143 people were trained on employer's premises by the STA's mobile training service.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

96. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to continue the loan guarantee scheme; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The loan guarantee scheme is currently due to run until 31 March 1989. An evaluation of the scheme has recently been carried out by consultants who are due to report shortly. In addition a telephone survey of current users of the scheme is taking place. A decision on the need for the loan guarantee scheme after 31 March 1989 will be taken in the light of the reports and other factors.

Health and Safety

101. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy towards the balance to be struck by the Health and Safety Commission between hazards to people and costs to industry.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission in its last published plan of work (for 1985-86 and onwards) stated that the protection of those at work and of the public is its indispensable aim, and that this must be achieved at realistic cost to industry, with technical understanding, and by the use of practical common sense.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has endorsed the commission's policy and in considering proposals put to him by the commission for new legislation under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. We use the same criteria.

142. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to seek to increase the penalties available where health and safety law has been contravened.

Mr. Nicholls: It has been suggested that the maximum fines available to magistrates' courts for breaches of health and safety legislation are not high enough. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has sought the views of the Health and Safety Commission and is now considering with colleagues whether there is a case to be made for reviewing these penalties.

Health and Safety

143. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce measures to give workers and their trade union representatives more power to ensure that regulations governing health and safety at work are fully applied.

Mr. Nicholls: No.

Self-catering Accommodation Approval Scheme

103. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications have been made so far to the English tourist board's self-catering accommodation approval scheme.

Mr. Lee: I understand from the English tourist board that between January, when the scheme began, and 24 June this year, 1,900 applications have been received by the ETB, covering 5,600 units of accommodation.

Holiday Accommodation (Special Needs)

104. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he is doing to encourage the improvement of holiday accommodation for those with special needs.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board (ETB) provides financial support for the holiday care service which is a national charity providing information, help and advice on holidays for disabled people and others with special needs. The holiday care service has just set up a working party to recommend on future development of holiday provision for these groups.

Fraud Investigations

112. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which local authorities have refused to provide lists of names and addresses of the holders of taxi licences to his Department's fraud investigators.

Mr. Lee: I am not aware that any local authority has refused to provide lists of the names and addresses of the holders of taxi licences to this Department's fraud investigators.

School Compacts

113. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received about the Government's proposals to develop school compacts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: The Training Commission is expecting a number of applications for development funding from potential compact partners in the urban programme areas. The successful bids will be announced at the end of July. Compacts are agreements under which employers guarantee jobs with training or YTS training followed by a job to school leavers who meet agreed standards of performance.

Agricultural Inspectors

115. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest number of agricultural inspectors.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 June 1988 there were 150 agricultural inspectors in post in the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate.

European Venture Capital Conference (Ministerial Visit)

119. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the visit of the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Cope), to the European venture capital conference.

Mr. Cope: I gave the opening address at the European Venture Capital Association symposium on 26 May. It was encouraging to be able to address a gathering of people from different European countries, all concerned with the supply of venture capital to businesses. The symposium provided evidence that the venture capital industry is thriving in Europe, and particularly in the United Kingdom. A survey undertaken by Peat Marwick McLintock showed that of total funds available for investment in Europe at December 1987, 55 per cent. had been raised in the United Kingdom. This is assisting businesses to create additional wealth and employment.

Occupational Ill-health

122. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new cases of occupational ill-health among active workers he estimates there are each year in Britain.

136. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new cases of occupational ill-health among active workers he estimates there are each year in Britain.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1987, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 4,792 awards of disablement benefit because of new cases of occupational disease under industrial injuries and other compensation schemes. The figure does not include people not claiming or qualifying for benefit, and does not distinguish between active workers and others.

English Tourist Board

123. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to meet the chairman of the English tourist board.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend hopes to meet the chairman of the English tourist board on 11 July at the launch of the ETB's rural tourism strategy.

Skill Levels

125. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve the levels of skill in British industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Government aim to encourage increased and more effective investment in skills training by British employers particularly to meet the challenges of demographic change and technological advance and the sharper competition which will result from the European single market in 1992.

Public expenditure on training has increased from over £450 million in 1979 to a planned £3 billion this year. The Training Commission (formerly the Manpower Services Commission), will have increased employer representation and concentrates exclusively on training. It delivers a wide range of training programmes, to include employment training from September 1988, many of which lead to vocational qualifications.

The Training Commission is also reviewing its range of programmes to encourage employers' investment in training to meet their emerging skill needs.

Gas Act 1986

127. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional inspectors are needed by the Health and Safety Executive adequately to enforce the Gas Act 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive does not consider that additional inspectors are needed specifically for the enforcement of the Gas Act 1986.

Young Persons (Health and Safety)

135. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the relative risk in terms of health and safety at work for younger employees.

Mr. Nicholls: I am aware of the results of research into the relationship between age and accidents at work summarised recently by the Health and Safety Executive in its report "Health and Safety Statistics 1984-85". This report indicates that the work-injury ratio for male employees in the 16-24 years age group is higher than for any other age group. The research suggests that the type of employment and the immaturity and inexperience of young employees play some part in explaining the higher ratio. The research results will be taken into account when deciding what action to take following the recent document on "Restriction on the employment of young people and the removal of sex discrimination in legislation".

Job Clubs

147. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job clubs have now been established; what resources have been allocated to them; and what assessment he has made as to how effective they have been to date in achieving the aims set for them.

Mr. Lee: At the end of May 1988 there were 1,214 job clubs open including 538 run directly by the employment service and 676 run by organisations acting as its agents.

Four hundred and eighty staff units have been allocated to the employment service to run the jobcentre job clubs and to support the agency job clubs. A sum of £22·5 million has been allocated in 1988-89 to cover the costs of the agency job club network, costs incurred by members in travelling to and from job club and marketing costs.

Between April 1987 and March 1988, 105,677 people passed through job clubs. Of these 57,080 (or 54 per cent.) went into jobs and a further 14,571 (or 14 per cent.) took up training, education, a place on the community programme or enterprise allowance schemes. These results represent a considerable achievement in helping long-term unemployed people.

Employment Training

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those organisations who have refused to take part in the employment training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: The Training Commission is currently negotiating contracts with organisations which have applied to take part in employment training, either as training agents or training managers. Contracts should be exchanged during July. It is, therefore, not possible to assess at this stage which organisations will refuse to take part in employment training. However, the response has been very good and in general, organisations are bidding to deliver significantly more plans than are needed to launch the programme successfully on 5 September.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his answer of 23 June, he will outline the circumstances in which the participants on employment training will benefit from a £15 per week disregard for income received above their standard entitlements.

Mr. Lee: If participants in employment training who are in receipt of income support undertake paid work outside the programme, the normal disregards will be applied under DHSS regulations. For most people, this is a £5 weekly disregard, but the earnings of lone parents, people in receipt of a disability premium, couples aged under 60 who have been in receipt of supplementary benefit or income support for two years, and people in certain specialist occupations such as retained fire-fighters all attract a £15 weekly disregard.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether severely disabled people in receipt of severe disablement allowance will be allowed to retain their severe disablement allowance and receive all other payments to which trainees are entitled throughout their stay on the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 30 June 1988]: People who are in receipt of severe disablement allowance will receive a training allowance on entering employment training, which gives a premium of £10 over their benefit level while they train. They will be eligible to receive all other payments to which trainees on the programme are entitled.

Skill Shortages

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report a detailed breakdown of skill shortages on both a regional and a national basis.

Mr. Cope: The detailed information is not available as requested. However similar information on the manufacturing and construction industries is reported in the Training Commission's skills monitoring report for February 1988 which is available in the Library.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department is carrying out any studies into skill shortages found by small businesses in East Anglia concerning (a) recruitment of school leavers, (b) trainee and apprentice pay level, (c) recruitment of skilled labour, and (d) of management training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer Thursday 30 June 1988]: No studies are proceeding in the form suggested.

The Training Commission's computer-assisted local labour market information system is already used to analyse information relevant to local employers' needs for training in East Anglia as elsewhere. Information is collected from a wide range of employers, including small businesses.

Vale of Clwyd Mind Association

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will meet Deeside and Clwyd Vale of Clwyd Mind Association, to discuss its difficulties under the new employment training scheme consequent upon the abandonment of the community programme.

Mr. Nicholls: Local Training Commission officials are best placed to discuss whether Deeside and Vale of Clwyd Mind Association are able to move forward into employment training. Local officials will consider all the available options and I suggest the association gets in touch with the Training Commission area office as soon as possible.

Brain Injuries

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that people recovering from traumatic brain injury make a staged return to work via part-time arrangements and that duties increase gradually until full-time work can be undertaken.

Mr. Nicholls: These matters are best dealt with by individual arrangements between employers and employees to suit particular circumstances without Government involvement.

Disabled Persons

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms in the United Kingdom of 20 or more employees are not employing at least 3 per cent. disabled persons in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The information available relates to people who are registered as disabled under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, or the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act (Northern Ireland) 1945. On 1 June 1987 25,540 employers in the United Kingdom with 20 or more employees were employing less than 3 per cent. registered disabled people.

Benefits

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people during each month from January to May have been (a) refused benefit following an initial claim and (b) withdrawn from benefit following a restart interview for each benefit office in Middlesbrough, Redcar, Eston, Guisborough, Hartlepool, Loftus, Saltburn, Stockton and Billingham, on the grounds that they were not available for employment, giving details of the reasons for these decisions.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the number of initial claims disallowed by an adjudication officer on availability grounds for the months and offices requested.

The information requested in (b) is not available. Any refusal of benefit following a restart interview could only occur as the result of a decision by an independent adjudication officer operating under long-standing legal rules adopted by successive Governments.

These decisions are given by independent adjudicating authorities on the basis of the evidence available in each individual case. It is not possible to state the exact reason under the availability condition as to why benefit entitlement is disallowed, as the Department is only advised of the social security legislation upon which the decision is based.

Numbers of disallowances of benefit on initial claims

	January	February	March	April	May
Middlesbrough 1	1	2	0	0	2
Middlesbrough 2	1	5	2	3	3
Middlesbrough 3	4	6	5	4	1
Redcar	6	12	14	14	11
Eston	4	4	1	3	0
Guisborough	3	3	2	3	0
Hartlepool 1	1	4	1	7	2
Hartlepool 2	4	5	5	7	2
Loftus	0	1	2	3	5
Saltburn	2	4	5	2	1
Stockton 1	5	7	4	6	9
Stockton 2	15	15	3	10	12
Billingham	19	5	2	0	5

Control of Lead at Work Regulations 1980

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will consider extending to men the approved code of practice for the Control of Lead at Work Regulations 1980.

Mr. Nicholls: The approved code of practice for the Control of Lead at Work Regulations 1980 already applies to both men and women.

Equal Pay

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response he has made to the recent Equal Opportunities Commission Report which revealed a large disparity between men and women's pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The hon. Member is presumably referring to information in the 1987 annual report of the Equal Opportunities Commission which was published on 14 June. This report will be discussed on 13 July by my Department's advisory committee on women's employment. Joanna Foster, the chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission, is a member of the Committee and will be attending this meeting.

The Government are fully committed to equal opportunities and equal pay for men and women.

Young Enterprise

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young enterprise area boards have been established to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that there are, at present, 146 young enterprise area boards co-ordinating the activities of some 28,000 young achievers. It is envisaged that, during the 1988-89 academic year, the number of area boards will increase to 155 and will involve around 30,000 young achievers. This Department has worked closely with young enterprise for a number of years and greatly values its efforts, together with the many other industry/education link organisations, towards improving such links.

Disposable Incomes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a table in the Official Report showing the figures for average disposable income in the lowest quintile group of households, by household type, for the years 1975 to 1985, at current prices, as were used to construct chart 6, on page 111 of Economic Trends, July 1987, "The Effects of Taxes and Benefits on Household Income 1985;" and whether he can update the table to show the 1986 figures at current prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 22 June 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

Figures for 1986 are not yet available but figures for earlier years are in the table. These figures are derived from the family expenditure survey. They show household income in the 12 months prior to interview. They are not comparable with the recent DHSS series "Households Below Average Income" which is based on current income and is adjusted for family size and composition.

[1] The advent of housing benefit in 1983 introduced a discontinuity into the series: before then the payments to recipients of supplementary benefit included an unknown amount of assistance with rates. Under the housing benefit scheme this is separately identified, and is excluded from income. The figures for 1983 and earlier years cannot be adjusted onto the same basis as those for 1985 and are higher than they would be on a consistent basis.

Management Extension Programmes

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people participating in management extension programmes organised by the Manpower Services Commission found permanent employment within six months of completing their management extension programme in each year since management extension programmes began.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 29 June 1988]: The number of people known to have found permanent work within six months of completing the management extension programme, in the years for which statistics are available, are:

	Number
1985-86	388
1986-87	513
[1]1987-88	343

[1] Up to September 1987.

The figures have been established by a survey with an approximate 75 per cent. response rate, and the actual figures, therefore, are likely to be higher.

TRANSPORT

Drinking and Driving

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what scientific evaluations have been undertaken within his Department's anti-drink-drive publicity campaign; who has made these; and whether he will publish the findings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Regular evaluations are undertaken before and after major publicity campaigns to look at changes in attitudes to drinking and driving. These consist of "tracking surveys" carried out for the Central Office of Information on our behalf by Research Bureau Limited.

Copies of the report on the 1987-88 campaign are being placed in the Library. It confirms a continuing downward trend in drinking and driving. Last winter in particular there appears to have been a shift to lower levels of consumption on driving occasions.

A summary report showing trends since 1979 is being prepared for publication.

Unmarked Lobster and Crab Pots

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to seek to reduce the number of fouled propellers from unmarked lobster and crab pots.

Mr. David Mitchell: I know that my noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping has already advised my hon. Friend that the best way of making progress on this issue is through better communications locally between fishermen, yachtsmen and others. This remains of prime importance. In view of the clear concern however he will seek means of advising fishermen of the problem and of emphasising the importance of their marking their pots adequately.

North Report (Traffic Law)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received regarding the implementation of the recommendations of the North report on road traffic law.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received a number of representations. We welcome public reaction to the report. We are pressing ahead with our consideration of the recommendations. We will report to the House on our progress before the summer recess.

A1

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated current daily flow on the A1; and what were the comparable figures (a) 10 years ago, and (b) expected when the road was opened.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table sets out estimated daily traffic flows, currently and10 years ago, for those stretches of the A1 for which such information is available. Information on expected flows at the time of opening is not available except at disproportionate cost. The figures are annual average daily traffic flows.

M1

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated current daily traffic flow on the M1; and what were the comparable figures (a) 10 years ago, and (b) expected when the motorway was built.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table sets out estimated daily traffic flows, currently and 10 years ago, for those stretches of the M1 for which such information is available. Merchant Shipping (Operations Book) Regulations 1988

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account was taken of crew fatigue in the drafting of the Merchant Shipping (Operations Book) Regulations 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The draft regulations give only a basic framework for the required book and make no specific reference to fatigue. However, a merchant shipping notice will accompany the regulations and give further guidance on matters relating to the crew's fitness for duty and the avoidance of fatigue.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his criterion for an excessive number of hours worked by a member of a ship's crew with regard to his Department's draft Merchant Shipping (Operations Book) Regulations 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is unlikely that specific criteria will be included in the merchant shipping notice which will accompany the regulations because of variations in operating practices and routines but it will give guidance on matters relating to the crew's fitness for duty and the avoidance of fatigue.

Worker Fatigue

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what evidence is available to his Department on the effects of fatigue on crew members aboard shipping vessels;

(2) if his Department plans to conduct further research into the effect of fatigue on crew members aboard shipping vessels.

Mr. David Mitchell: Aspects of fatigue have been considered in the course of several research projects conducted on behalf of my Department but the results have been inconclusive. The final report of a research project on "The Human Element in Shipping Casualties" was recently received; when it has been analysed I will decide whether further action is necessary.

Vessels (Destinations and Dockings)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requirements are placed by his Department upon shipowners in regard to the recording of all previous destinations and dockings of a ship using British port facilities.

Mr. David Mitchell: This information must be recorded by United Kingdom ships in the official log book, by certain passenger carrying ships in the appropriate returns and by all ships carrying certain liquids in a record book.

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will take steps to ensure that lead-free petrol is available at all motorway service areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall require all new motorway service areas to provide unleaded petrol. Of the 42 existing ones, 24 already provide it. This total is expected to rise to 36 by the end of the year following the approach we made to operators last year. We hope to persuade the operators of the remaining six areas to make unleaded fuel available. There are 9 million cars which already or with simple adjustment can save money by using it.

Driving Hours

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of tachograph checks carried out in each of the last eight years; how many of those checks revealed drivers to have exceeded their legal driving hours maximum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information is only available for the last five years.

Year	Tachograph charts examined by DTp staff	Driver hours infringements
1983-84	681,000	1,800
1984-85	576,000	3,400
1985-86	585,000	2,700
1986-87	848,000	1,700
1987-88	1,078,000	2,200

Weighbridges

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many weighbridges have been operated by his Department in each of the last eight years; how many of those weighbridges have been dysfunctional due to disrepair or other causes; if he will specify any other causes for weighbridge dysfunctionality than mechanical disrepair; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The details are:

Year	Number of weighbridges	Number out of action
1982-83	34	Not known
1983-84	47	Not known
1984-85	50	Not known
1985-86	56	17
1986-87	59	13
1987-88	60	8

The most serious problems have arisen where the concrete slab in which the weighbridge sits has fallen outside the tight level of tolerance required to meet the DTp code of practice for vehicle weighing.

Vehicle Overloading

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many goods vehicle checks have been carried out in each of the last five years where overloading was identified; what was the distribution of overloading between categories of goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of vehicles weighed and found to be overloaded by DTp traffic examiners and local authority trading standards departments for each of the last five years were:

Year	Vehicles weighed	Number overloaded
1983-84	98,100	23,200
1984-85	88,200	21,100
1985-86	98,600	25,400
1986-87	93,700	23,000
1987-88	126,000	28,500

The figures are not broken down between vehicle categories.

Bakerloo Line (Extension)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria his Department will apply to the evaluation of any proposals for the extension of the southern end of the Bakerloo line.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government's approach to the evaluation and financing of public transport projects was set out in their observations on the third report of the Transport Committee (Session 1986-87) on the financing of rail services (HC 420).

Channel Tunnel

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet received proposals from British Rail concerning rail links to the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 4 July 1988]: I expect to receive British Rail's report shortly and hope that it will be published soon thereafter.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with Eurotunnel concerning rail links to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 4 July 1988]: There have been no recent discussions. Doubtless Eurotunnel, like the Government, is looking forward to the publication of British Rail's report, expected shortly.

A27, Worthing

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether consultants he appointed to study the A27 in the Worthing areas have examined the feasibility of the Findon Gap route in the same detail as the route which they have recommended.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 4 July 1988]: Yes. More detailed drawings of their recommended route, as well as of the on-line improvement option at Lancing, were drawn up by the consultants because of the need to assess the effect on homes in the urban area.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report all the organisations which are in receipt of the current European Economic Community quota of multilateral authorisations for heavy goods vehicles in each traffic area, and if he will also list the number of authorisations held by each organisation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The list, by county and number of operators, follows. The Department's policy is not to name individual firms, for reasons of commercial confidentiality. Following the successful Council meeting in Brussels on 20-21 June, hauliers have been invited to apply for the additional 238 permits available.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the effects of proposals to remove certain Civil Service responsibilities from Whitehall Departments, with special reference to the vehicle inspectorate agency.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Establishing the vehicle inspectorate as an executive agency would enhance the responsibility and accountability of local management for its day to day running, and would focus incentives to improve efficiency and services to the public.

The inspectorate would remain part of the Department of Transport and part of the Civil Service.

Highways Work (Tendering)

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated value of work under £25,000 covered by the current regulations on competitive tendering for highways work.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The regulations cover approximately £50 million of work on trunk roads and £300 million of work on local authority roads. Increased competition for this work is expected to secure keener prices and thus save public funds.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of how many additional residential properties his Department would need to acquire in order to build the East London river crossing; and how many of these are currently owned by the London residuary body;

(2) how many residential properties have been acquired by his Department in connection with the proposed East London river crossing;

(3) what discussions his Department has undertaken with the London residuary body about the acquisition of residential properties required for the construction of the East London river crossing.

Mr. Channon: Ninety-five residential properties have been acquired by the Department in connection with the proposed East London river crossing. A further 145 residential properties would be required of which 127 are currently owned by the London residuary body. Discussions about the possible purchase of these properties have taken place with that body, without prejudice to the decisions yet to be taken on the statutory orders for the scheme.

London Underground (Fires)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, whether he will publish a list of all fires reported on the London Underground in each of the last five years showing (a) the date, (b) the line, (c) the duration, and (d) the cost of damage in each.

PRIME MINISTER

Wormhoudt Massacre

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister which Department will be responsible for continuing contact and liaison with the authorities of the Federal Republic of Germany in respect of the Wormhoudt massacre.

The Prime Minister: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, in consultation with the other Government Departments involved, will be the principal channel for communication with the authorities of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 8 March, Official Report, column 110, if he will take steps to keep statistics of domestic violence cases in order to monitor the effectiveness of the Metropolitan police force order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that he is now maintaining a central record of incidents of domestic violence. The latest available figures, which are given in the table, show an increase of 118 per cent. in the number of recorded domestic conflicts—which are defined as assaults involving husbands, wives, relatives and cohabitees—in the whole of the Metropolitan police district over the period January-April 1988, compared with the corresponding period in 1987. The rise is thought to reflect an increase in the level of reporting following the issue of the new force instruction in June 1987.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether he has yet completed his evaluation of the force order relating to domestic violence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the evaluation is not yet complete.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the local referral points for victims of domestic violence within the Metropolitan police district.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. To do so might endanger those who have sought refuge.

Motorways (Speeding)

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought in the last three years for exceeding the mandatory speed limits on the M11 and M25 when there are road works; and how many resulted in convictions.

Mr. John Patten: The information collected centrally on proceedings, finding of guilt and fixed penalty notices for speed limit offences does not include whether there were road works at the scene of the offence. The available information, including that by police force area, is published annually in "Offences Relating To Motor Vehicles England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (tables 5, 16 and 19 of the issue for 1986), copies of which are in the Library. Figures for 1987 will be published later this year.

Magistrates' Clerks

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for retaining clerks in the magistrates' courts of the differences in pay between the Crown Prosecution Service and magistrates' clerks; what action he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 23 June, at column 683.

Vagrants

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation (a) to consolidate the law relating to the punishment of idle and disorderly persons and rogues and vagabonds, as set out principally in the Vagrancy Act 1824, and (b) to repeal that Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have no present plans to do so.

Category C Prisons

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle of 27 June, why 16 category C prisons have a population lower than their certified normal accommodation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prison population may fluctuate for a number of reasons. The population is mobile; prisoners arrive at local prisons, are transferred to training prisons of the appropriate security category, may be transferred later to training prisons of lower security category and are finally released. Consequently, vacancies in some establishments are likely to appear in any count of population against certified normal accommodation, unless the establishments are regularly overcrowded. Additionally, the Government's construction programme is delivering extra accommodation in both existing and new prisons, the occupation of which takes time to build up.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total amount spent per annum for each category C prison in the United Kingdom on foodstuffs; and what proportion of this was purchased from small local retail shops.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1986-87 the total amount spent in each category C prison on foodstuffs purchased to meet the dietary scale was as follows:

Prison	Amount £
Acklington	148,394
Camp Hill	184,910
Channings Wood	152,876

Information on the proportion of these foodstuffs, and of inmate canteen items, purchased from small local retail shops is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Officers (Housing)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to the written answer of 27 June, to the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle, why there was a delay between the acquisition and sale of properties at (i) High Point, (ii) Northeye, and (iii) Erlestoke; what effect the delay had on the fabric of the properties, and what effect this had on the price gained for the properties on resale.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With the exception of six terraced houses at Highpoint, which were in poor condition on acquisition, properties sold at Highpoint, Northeye and Erlestoke had been used as married quarters for prison officers. There was no delay in selling these properties as and when they were declared surplus to requirements. The condition of the six terraced houses had deteriorated and they were sold for an average price of £16,850 each.

Information on what the price would have been had the six houses been in a satisfactory condition is not readily available.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer of 27 June to the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle, what was the approximate distance of those houses sold to private ownership from the prison fence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The approximate distances from the prison fence to the nearest house sold to private ownership at Highpoint, Northeye and Erlestoke, were 60m, 60m and 400m respectively.

Prisoners (Escapes)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will request chief constables to collate information relating to offences committed by escaping prisoners other than the common law offence of escaping.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. It is not always possible for the police to identify separately recorded offences committed by escaped prisoners: collection of information on those which can be identified could involve disproportionate cost.

New Prisons

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals there are to develop prisons on the surplus sites listed by the Secretary of State for Defence in the answer to the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle on 27 June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Of the 34 listed sites in England and Wales, 17 have been considered and rejected as unsuitable for prison purposes, except for Binbrook, and the remainder are under consideration; none of these could, however, meet the need which would be met by Binbrook.

Under-age Drinking

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had recently on under-age drinking in pubs and clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 1 March we have received some 80 letters either calling for tougher action to curb under-age drinking or criticising the provisions of the Licensing Act 1988 which strengthen the law on the sale of alcohol to those under the age of 18.

In our opinion these are crucial provisions which should enable landlords, police and prosecuting authorities to act more effectively to curb a serious mischief. We shall be urging this course in our forthcoming circular to magistrates and the police, which will also encompass other provisions of the licensing laws which we believe could be more robustly used.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received recently from licensed victuallers and others seeking an identity card system for young people.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received recently some representations from licensed victuallers and members of the public in support of local identity card schemes for young people. I am aware of a number of such voluntary schemes for young people around the country which are led and financed by local licensees or licensed victuallers associations with the co-operation of the police. I am pleased to see licensees and the police working together on initiatives of this kind and welcome the introduction of voluntary schemes which take full account of local circumstances.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the length of time (a) taken or (b) expected to be taken for applications to be processed for British citizenship in regard to the deadline of 31 December 1987 for certain Commonwealth citizens; and, of those applications made, how many have yet to be given their initial consideration by his Department.

Mr. Renton: About 134,000 applications which were subject to the 31 December 1987 deadline have been acknowledged and had their passports returned but have not yet been given initial consideration. The majority of these applications will be considered in the Liverpool nationality office, which will open in September. A substantial proportion of these applications will be decided by April 1989 and the remainder during the following year.

Glasgow Passport Office

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether any telephone calls were answered by Glasgow passport office on Wednesday 29 June;

(2) why the telephone exchange at the Glasgow passport office does not have a call-queuing system.

Mr. Renton: Calls to the six exchange lines at present available for incoming inquiries are held on a stacking system and should be dealt with when an inquiry extension is clear. A substantial number of callers were answered on 29 June, although precise figures are not available as the telephone system does not at present log incoming calls. Among other improvements to the telephone system being considered in the light of the planned expansion of the Glasgow passport office is the use of recorded message facilities to filter out calls seeking general information.

Drugs Cases (Metropolitan Police)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the names of the arresting officers and of the other witnesses for the prosecutions brought by the Metropolitan police in the following cases which were dropped at Knightsbridge Crown court in October 1985 and January 1986 (a) for possession of drugs against Mr. Alan Waite, (b) for possession of drugs against Mr. Geoffrey Pope, (c) for possession of drugs against Mr. Marcel Mullins, (d) for obstruction and assault against Mr. Mark Whittaker and (e) for supplying drugs to Ms. Theresa James against Mr. Paul Brown, as to the shift relief at west end central station in which they served at the time, and as to where these officers are currently serving.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 28 June 1988]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that there are outstanding civil proceedings in these cases. It would not therefore be right to provide the information requested.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration Appeals System

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give for the last five years the cost to the Lord Chancellor's Department of the immigration appeals system and judicial reviews arising from that system.

The Attorney-General: Administrative responsibility for the immigration appellate authorities was transferred to the Lord Chancellor's Department from the Home Office only on 1 April 1987. The cost of the immigration appellate authorities to the Lord Chancellor's Department in 1987-88 was £2,411,088. Details of the cost to the Lord Chancellor's Department of judicial review cases arising from the immigration appeals system could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SS Politician

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will allow the release of files by the Public Records Office relating to the sinking of the SS Politician in 1941; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The only record relating to the sinking of the SS Politician that has been identified in the Public Records Office from the information given is the cancellation by the Registry of Shipping and Seamen of the vessel's certificate of registration (BT 110/1270). This document is available for public inspection at the PRO in Kew.

Members (Writs)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General what was the outcome of the application to the High Court last week in relation to the writs recently served on right hon. and hon. Members.

The Attorney-General: An application to the High Court in connection with the proceedings recently issued by Mr. Anthony Hill against right hon. and hon. Members was heard in the Sheffield district registry on 30 June. The application was successful and the proceedings were struck out as against all defendants.

WALES

Valleys Initiative (Schools)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) primary schools, and (b) secondary schools within the area covered by the Valleys initiative were built before 1914; and how many major refurbishments or replacements of these schools will take place within the time scale of the valleys initiative.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information on the age of school buildings is not held by the Department. Local education authorities are responsible for schools in their areas, and will decide what refurbishments or replacements to undertake in the next three years in the light of the resources available and their own priorities for expenditure.

Firegreen Ltd.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement concerning the application of Firegreen Ltd. for investment grant from his Department;

(2) if he has received applications from Firegreen Ltd. for grant aid concerning its plans to create jobs at Hawarden, Clwyd.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Applications for grant-aid have been received from Firegreen Ltd. Details of these applications are confidential.

TRANSPORT

Royal Flights

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last reviewed the purple airspace rules for royal flights.

Mr. Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible, through the national air traffic services, a joint CAA and Ministry of Defence organisation, for all aspects of air traffic control.

The purple airspace rules for royal flights were last reviewed in 1985 and found to be satisfactory by both the Queen's flight and the national air traffic services.

The next review is scheduled for later this year.

Random Breath Testing

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he has made to the recommendation of the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on road safety that further consideration be given to random breath testing.

Mr. Bottomley: None.

Accidents and Casualties

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the number of staff in each of the last five years employed by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory directly involved in researching ways of reducing accidents and casualties;

(2) how many people have been employed in the road safety division of his Department both regionally and nationally, in each of the last five years for purposes directly related to accident prevention;

(3) how many people have been employed by the vehicle standards and engineering division of his Department in each of the last five years in employment directly related to reducing road accidents and casualties;

(4) what is the percentage and number of people employed by the highways division of his Department in each of the last five years whose primary function has been work on ways of reducing accidents and casualties;

(5) how many people have been employed in each of the last five years at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre in employment directly related to road safety matters;

(6) what percentage of people employed for work on the trunk road construction programme are directly involved in ways of reducing accidents and casualties.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Total staffing levels in the appropriate parts of the Department are set out in the following table. The figures reflect the total number of staff involved over the last five years. It is not possible to break down the staff numbers further by function. Other divisions also have work related to road safety.

About half the Department's staff in the regional office are currently engaged on the national road construction and maintenance programme. Enhancement of road safety is one of the programme's prime aims.

Drink-driving

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps his Department is taking to reduce the size of the problem drinking driver population;

(2) what evaluation and research into the high-risk drink-driving offender scheme has been undertaken or is planned by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following a request from the ministerial group on alcohol misuse we are considering how to extend the scope of the high-risk offenders scheme. Under the present scheme, some categories of drink-driving offenders have to satisfy the Secretary of State that they no longer have a drink problem and are otherwise fit to drive before restoration of their driving licence.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of convicted drinking and driving offenders are estimated to be clinically definable as problem drinkers; and what measures are used to determine this.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what specific medical or other criteria are used by the medical advisers to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre to refuse restoration of a driving licence to drink-driving offenders classified as high-risk offenders.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Applicants undergo a structured clinical assessment and examination, including an evaluation of their history of alcohol abuse. In addition, details are obtained about alcohol withdrawal fits in the past two years and attitude to attendance at alcohol treatment units. Their blood alcohol level at the time of the examination is assessed. A blood sample is taken at the examination and used to evaluate the levels of gamma GT, AST, MCV, serum B12 and folate.

These criteria are based on the recommendations of informed medical opinion.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of high-risk offenders were refused restoration of their driving licence by the medical advisers of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre in the most recent three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The only figures available are those from a recent small sample exercise. These suggest that 5 per cent. of those who apply for restoration are refused on medical grounds. A further 10 per cent. are refused because they fail to co-operate with medical inquiries.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of high-risk drink-driving offenders do not request restoration of their licence at the end of their period of driving ban.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is estimated that 35 to 40 per cent. do not apply for the restoration of their licence.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who are the medical examiners employed to administer the high-risk drink-driving offender scheme; and how they are selected.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Specialists in occupational medicine selected by the Department of Transport.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage British Rail to run Channel tunnel trains direct to Britain's major cities; and if he will consider a transport grant for this purpose.

Mr. David Mitchell: Under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 it is the responsibility of the British Railways Board to prepare a plan by the end of 1989 setting out its proposals for international through services serving various parts of the United Kingdom. Section 42 of the 1987 Act specifically rules out grants to British Rail in connection with its Channel tunnel rail services.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from (i) British Rail and (ii) others, regarding the economic effect the use of several rail carriages for customs procedures will have on British Rail's proposals to have Channel tunnel trains running direct to major cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: None. The amount of space needed for on-train controls is still under discussion between British Rail and the authorities concerned.

Sonic Booms

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Airways regarding sonic booms from aircraft over Cornwall.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is in regular touch with British Airways about this. The airline does what it reasonably can to minimise sonic boom disturbance.

Airports Policy

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the policy set out in the 1985 airports policy White Paper (Cmnd. 9542); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The strategy set out in the airports policy White Paper needs to be carried forward in the light of latest expectations about the level of air traffic from 1995 through into the next century. The Civil Aviation Authority already has a duty under section 16(2) of the Civil Aviation Act 1982 to consider and make recommendations to me about airport capacity, and I have today written to the chairman formally asking for advice on the adequacy of airport capacity in the United Kingdom in the period to 2005. I have asked for a report by July next year.

In view of the authority's recent announcement that the central control function will not produce a substantial increase in usable airspace capacity before 1995, I have also asked the chairman to let me have rather earlier a separate report on strategies for making good use of the airspace we shall have available until then.

A copy of my letter has been placed in the Library.

A27

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 771, what assessment he has made of the accuracy of the topographical model showing his Department's consultants' preferred future route for the A27, with particular reference to the height used to depict the South Downs in relation to lateral distance and the effect on this on the perception of the depth of any cuttings or tunnels on the Findon Gap route; what is his assessment of the resultant implications for the ability of those attending the exhibition of the consultants' study to reach an objective conclusion about the merits of the various routes; what representations he has received on this matter; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 4 July 1988]: The topographical model was intended as an aid to supplement the plans at the public exhibition and the information in the consultants' report. It is usual to exaggerate the vertical scale (in this case by five times) so that particular landmarks can be identified.

Over 400 letters have been received since the publication of the consultants' report. Nearly three quarters disagree with all or part of the consultants' findings and recommendations. One petition containing 450 signatures in support of the consultants' route has also been received.

We will take account of all comments received during the consultation period in considering the next steps.

Railway Stations

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list stations (a) closed, (b) opened and (c) reopened in 1978 and each subsequent year to date.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 20 June 1988]: The information is as follows:

Stations closed	Stations opened	Stations re-opened

Note: The list of stations closed differs from the information supplied to the hon. Member in my answer at column 732, on 10 June 1988, in the following respects:

1. The closure of Bury (Bolton Street) station in 1981 was not counted in my previous answer, because of its direct replacement by the new Bury station.
2. The closure of Meadowbank station in 1987 has been included in this list for the sake of completeness. Its opening in 1986 had been under section 56A of the Transport Act 1962, and thus withdrawal of services was not subject to statutory closure procedures.

Lorry Quotas

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report all the organisations which are in receipt of the current European Economic Community quota of multilateral authorisations for heavy goods vehicles in each traffic area, and if he will also list the number of authorisations held by each organisation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 5 July 1988]: The table for Scotland, Northern Ireland, Wales and Gibraltar was omitted:

ENVIRONMENT

County Hall, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what price will be received by the London Residuary Body for County Hall; what is the proposed timetable for the conversion of the site; and which individuals and organisations were involved in the successful bid.

Mr. Chope: Details of the terms of the bid accepted by the LRB for the sale of County Hall are commercially confidential. Conversion of the site and its timing will be dependent on matters that have yet to be determined. The purchasers are the County Hall Development Group, a consortium including New England Properties, London and Metropolitan, Touche Remnant Property Investment and Lazard Brothers.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he was consulted by the London Residuary Body in respect of the bids submitted for the development of County Hall, SE1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The LRB did not formally consult my right hon. Friend as there is no requirement for it to do so, but it did inform him of the sale prior to its announcement on 29 June.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the consistency of the proposed development of the County Hall site with his decisions, as set out in his Department's press release No. 407 of 20 October 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: None. This is in the first instance a matter for the local planning authority, the London borough of Lambeth. Development of the County Hall site will be subject to the granting of planning consents to the extent that any proposed development is not already permitted.

Waste Imports

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with members of Cheshire county council in respect of proposals to import domestic waste from America.

Mr. Ridley: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment and Member for Lewisham East (Mr. Moynihan) met members of Cheshire county council, who were accompanied by my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler).

The council members made clear their concern about the proposal to import domestic waste from USA for disposal in their area. They said that it would have serious consequences for the county's long-term waste disposal plan, would pose problems for the satisfactory supervision and operation of the site and would involve risks for plant and animal health.

The Minister shared the council's concerns, but said that under existing statutory arrangements it was first for the council, as operator of the site in question and as waste disposal authority and planning authority for the area, to decide on the proposal before it. He pointed out that the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food maintains a constant vigilance against the risk of diseases coming into this country in material of animal or plant origin, and any proposals to import such material would have to satisfy him that no risk exists.

Community Projects (Hackney)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he intends to take a decision on approving outstanding partnership grants for community projects for the London borough of Hackney for the current financial year;

(2) if he will explain the delay in approving partnership grants for community projects in the London borough of Hackney for the current financial year.

Mr. Trippier: We received only last week the annual report and final details necessary to allow decisions on Hackney's 1988-89 inner area programme. These decisions will be taken as soon as possible.

Homelessness

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet reached a decision on the allocation of the additional £21 million resources for homelessness which he announced on 17 June.

Mr. Waldegrave: The allocations have been made to this Department's regional offices as follows:

Region	Allocation £ million
Northern	0·8
Yorkshire and Humberside	1·1
North West	2·8
East Midlands	0·8
West Midlands	1·3
Eastern	0·5
London	10·5
South Eastern	2·5
South West	0·5
Merseyside task force	0·3
TOTAL	21·1

These extra resources will enable local authorities to provide additional units of accommodation for homeless people, with the emphasis being given to bringing empty properties back into use and reducing dependence, particularly in London, on bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

That is a far more sensible and cost-effective use of resources than, for example, leasing hotel space, which can, in certain circumstances, attract subsidy under the detailed rules of the Housing Act 1985 system. Because of the present subsidy system, such arrangements can be virtually without cost to local authorities, which could serve to encourage extended use of bed-and-breakfast hotels rather than other better forms of provision. This is wholly unsatisfactory. Where subsidy is available it must be put to better purpose to help the homeless through provision of permanent accommodation.

I intend, therefore, that payments by local authorities on the leases of whole or part of hotels, signed after midnight tonight, will not qualify for subsidy. The existing arrangements for subsidy on the leasing of separate and self-contained premises will not be affected.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many employees within his Department are currently employed in London and the south-east of England; what percentage of these are engaged in work which can only readily be done within this area; and what consideration he has given to the relocation of units within his Department to Manchester and other regional centres.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer Tuesday 5 July]: Some 5,200 of the 6,600 staff in my Department, excluding the Property Services Agency, are employed in London and the south-east. Of the 25,400 staff in the Property Services Agency, 11,800 are employed in London and the south-east. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 31 March, at columns 610-11, that Departments would be reviewing the location of their work. In pursuit of that announcement, I am presently reviewing my Department to determine whether any work might be suitable for relocation from London and the south-east to other areas of the country.

Old Perry Bridge, Birmingham

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date his Department was asked for scheduled monument consent for remedial works to the medieval packhorse bridge known as Old Perry bridge, Aldridge road, Birmingham; what factors are being considered; and when a decision will be announced.

Mr. Moynihan: An application for schedule monument consent was received from Birmingham city council on 10 December 1987 and referred to English Heritage for advice on 23 December. Following a site visit in January, I understand that English Heritage asked for further details of the proposed works and the methods to be employed; it will be in touch with the council shortly to discuss them. As soon as these matters are resolved, my officials will ensure that formal consent is granted as quickly as possible.

ENERGY

Electricity Industry

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a further statement on the future of the electricity industry in Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that my right hon. Friend made to the House on 25 February 1988, at columns 454-56.

EMPLOYMENT

Pentachlorophenol

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what controls there are on the use of pentachlorophenol in the United Kingdom; and what are the circumstances in which its use is permitted.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive recommends that all occupational exposure to pentachlorophenol should be controlled to a recommended limit of 0·5 mg m^{-3} 8-hour time weighted average (8 hour TWA) and 1·5 mg m^{-3} 10-minute TWA. In addition, HSE guidance note EH 40 draws attention to the risk of absorption of pentachlorophenol through the skin.

Pesticides containing pentachlorophenol can only be used following formal ministerial approval based on the advice of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. Conditions of use have to be specified on the label.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the circumstances under which pentachlorophenol (PCP) is permitted to be used in the United States of America.

Mr. Nicholls: I am informed that in the United States of America the American Conference of Government Industrial Hygienists (ACGIH) recommends for occupational exposure to pentachlorophenol a threshold limit value of 0·5 mg m^{-3} 8 hour TWA and draws attention to the risks of skin absorption. The use of pentachlorophenol in products other than wood preservatives is not permitted in the United States of America.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to which European countries ban pentachlorophenol (PCP) and as to the particular circumstances in which other European countries prohibit the use of (PCP).

Mr. Nicholls: I am informed that the Federal Republic of Germany has recently announced a total ban on the use of pentachlorophenol. The Health and Safety Executive is not aware of any other country in Europe which has banned or prohibited the use of pentachlorophenol.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of full-time working men in Cornwall earn less than £100 a week; and what is the figure for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the distribution of earnings from the new earnings survey sample indicates that, in April 1987, some 8 per cent. of full-time male employees in Cornwall on adult rates, whose gross earnings were not affected by absence, earned less than £100 per week. The equivalent figure for the United Kingdom as a whole is just under 5 per cent.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electronics Industry

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to how many foreign companies have set up operations to assemble electronic printers in the United Kingdom in the last five years.

Mr. Butcher: The total number of foreign companies known by the Invest in Britain Bureau to have set up operations to manufacture electronic printers since 1984 is seven. Details prior to 1984 are not recorded.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will report on the Internal Market Council held on 22 June.

Mr. Maude: The Council, at which my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade and I represented the United Kingdom, reached agreement on 15 individual measures which contribute towards completion of the single market. This has brought the total number of single market measures agreed under the German presidency to well over 50, thus maintaining the momentum we started under our presidency 18 months ago.

Important decisions reached by the Council included the adoption of a directive on non-life insurance services; a package of four directives relating to food law (on flavourings, materials and articles intended to come into contact with foodstuffs, food additives and quick-frozen foodstuffs) and the agreement on common positions on directives on the mutual recognition of higher education diplomas; on the pricing of pharmaceutical products; and on construction products under the Commission's "new approach" to technical harmonisation.

Those measures, together with other notable agreements reached over the last month—for example, on the liberalisation of capital movements and international road haulage—are a clear demonstration that barriers to trade in the Community are being cut, to the benefit of both business and the consumer.

Director General of Fair Trading (Report)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to publish the report by the Director General of Fair Trading for the year 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The 14th annual report by the Director General of Fair Trading has been published today. It covers the period 1 January 1987 to 31 December 1987. Copies of the report have been laid before Parliament.

Post Office

Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the profit targets of the Post Office.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The profit target for 1988-89 set following consultation with the Post Office for its postal business, covering the letters, parcels and counters businesses, is 3·25 per cent. return on turnover, before net interest and tax, on the current cost accounting basis. Profit targets for the three businesses in 1988-89 separately calculated on the same basis are 2·8 per cent. for letters, 6·8 per cent. for parcels and 1·2 per cent. for counters. The profit target for Girobank plc in 1988-89 is to make a return, before tax and interest on long-term loans from the Secretary of State, of 20 per cent. of mean net assets on a historic cost accounting basis.

Elstree Film Studios

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will agree to meet a deputation from the work force at Elstree film studios to discuss the implications for employment and redundancies of the sale of the studios by the Cannon Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 5 July 1988]: The Government regret the redundancies announced by Cannon, but note that employees in the post-production department will be offered jobs when that department is relocated. It would not be appropriate for the Government to intervene in a commercial decision taken by the company.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his policy towards the future development of the British film industry in the light of the sale by the Cannon Group of its Elstree studios.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 5 July 1988]: The fortunes of the British film industry have traditionally been cyclical. The Government maintain the view that current economic conditions offer a sound framework for the British film industry to operate successfully on a commercial basis.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Interest Rates

Mr. Doran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has to the additional administrative cost to (a) building societies and (b) the clearing banks of each half per cent. change in interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: No details of the costs are held centrally.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will meet the charity value added tax and tax reform group to discuss the ruling on value added tax by the European Court of Justice as it affects the building programmes of charities, including those for severely disabled people.

Mr. Lawson: Customs and Excise officials have already met the group to discuss the implications of the European Court of Justice ruling for charities, and my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary has also invited them to meet him shortly.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his statement of 21 June, Official Report, column 959, he will give his assessment of the likely effects of the value added tax ruling of the European Court on the cost of the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 28 June 1988]: I cannot comment specifically on individual taxpayers. However, any contract entered into prior to 21 June 1988 will continue to be zero-rated for the life of the contract. In addition, firms registered for VAT will be able to reclaim VAT on construction contracts entered into on or after 21 June 1988, subject to the normal rules for deduction of input tax.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chile

10. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had any recent discussions with the Government of the United States of America regarding the conditions under which the impending plebiscite in Chile will be held.

58. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had any recent discussions with the Government of the United States of America regarding the conditions under which the impending plebiscite in Chile will be held.

87. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had any recent discussions with the Government of the United States regarding the conditions under which the impending plebiscite in Chile will be held.

Mr. Eggar: We consult frequently and at all levels with the United States Administration on a wide range of topics, including Chile.

Disarmament

16. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he has taken following his speech at the United Nations special session on disarmament.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: In my speech at the special session on 7 June I put forward an initiative on chemical weapons. This stressed the need for wider accession to the 1925 Geneva protocol, which bans the use of chemical weapons in war, and proposed specific measures for immediate investigations of CW use and for international action against violators. We are pursuing those proposals vigorously at the United Nations, and bilaterally, as appropriate.

Sharpeville Six

19. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the South African Government about the Sharpeville Six.

22. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken since the failure of the petition for a retrial of the case of the Sharpeville Six; and if he will make a statement.

25. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he proposes to make to the President of the Republic of South Africa seeking the exercise of his prerogative to commute the death sentences on the Sharpeville Six; and if he will make a statement.

34. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further action he is considering in the light of the recent court decision in South Africa in the case of the Sharpeville Six; and if he will make a statement.

36. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to President Botha regarding the position of the Sharpeville Six.

49. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to make representations to the Government of South Africa regarding the case of the Sharpeville Six.

82. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government regarding the Sharpeville Six.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Further appeals on behalf of the Sharpeville Six were made by Foreign Ministers of the Twelve on 14 June, by the Security Council on 17 June, by Heads of Government at the Toronto summit on 20 June, and by the European Council on 28 June. We have also raised the issue again direct with the South African Government.

Mr. Shaher Sa'ed

20. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government about the detention without trial of Mr. Shaher Sa'ed, general secretary of the General Federation of Trade Unionists in the West Bank and Gaza, along with others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have asked the Israeli Government for details of Mr. Sa'ed's detention. If there is no case against him, we hope that he will soon be released to resume his trade union work.

Central America

21. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions took place at the recent Toronto summit on the subject of Central America.

70. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions took place at the recent Toronto summit on the subject of Central America.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: There was no general discussion of Central America at the Toronto summit.

55. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the United States of America regarding the visit of the United Nations Secretary of State, George Shultz, to Central America.

Mr. Eggar: None.

South Africa

23. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the Government's policy on the situation in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We receive representations about policy towards South Africa from many individuals and organisations, representing all shades of opinion.

39. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the implications of the South African Government's decision to establish a council for constitutional reform for the prospects of a just settlement in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We would welcome any move which led to genuine dialogue and to negotiations on early fundamental change.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications he has had with the South African Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We maintain regular contact with the South African authorities on a wide range of issues, both here and via Her Majesty's ambassador.

Mr. Nelson Mandela

24. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has made to the Government of South Africa on the case for the release of Mr. Nelson Mandela on his forthcoming 70th birthday; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: As I told the House on 8 June, we have long called, with the Commonwealth and our European Partners, for the unconditional release of Mr. Mandela. On 28 June the European Council strongly appealed to the South African authorities to free him and all other political prisoners.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will receive a petition from the 25 young people currently marching from Glasgow to London to demand the release of Mr. Nelson Mandela; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have long called for the unconditional release of Mr. Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners. I shall be ready to receive a petition calling for Mr. Mandela's release when the 25 marchers arrive in London.

Congo

26. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans next to visit the Congo.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to visit Congo. I plan to visit Congo on 14-15 July.

United Nations

27. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit the United Nations headquarters.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to visit the United Nations headquarters in New York during the General Assembly in the autumn.

South Georgia (Fishing)

28. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures have been taken to protect fishing round South Georgia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) on 21 June.

38. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to institute a controlled fishery zone around South Georgia.

Mr. Eggar: We have currently no plans to do so.

Israel

29. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about current relations with Israel.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 4 May.

43. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will devise with the United Kingdom's European partners a system of escalating measures against Israel until such time as that country enters into serious negotiations for Palestinian self-determination.

Mr. Mellor: No. We aim to help the parties work towards mutual compromise, not to coerce them into negotiations against their will. Only a negotiated settlement voluntarily entered into can hope to achieve stable peace.

45. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received seeking the application of limited selective economic sanctions against Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Economic sanctions would not help to bring about a solution to the problems of the region.

63. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Israel about the abuse and denial of human rights in the occupied territories; and if he will make a statement.

67. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Israel in the light of the continuing killing and wounding of unarmed Palestinians by Israeli soldiers and settlers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We maintain our pressure on Israel to administer the occupation of the West Bank and Gaza in accordance with international law and human rights standards. The killing and wounding of Palestinians is one of the most serious areas of concern.

76. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received urging Her Majesty's Government to ask the Government of Israel to investigate allegations about the use of high velocity dum-dum bullets as a method of crowd control in the occupied territories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: None.

84. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Israel about the spraying of gas from aircraft into densely populated refugee camps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: None. We cannot confirm reports of such incidents.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Israel about the detention without trial of Palestinians from the occupied territories.

Mr. Mellor: We have made repeated representations to the Israeli Government both on the principle of detention without trial and in individual cases of particular concern.

Nelson Mandela Concert, Wembley

30. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations

he has received from the Government of South Africa following the broadcast by the British Broadcasting Corporation of a popular concert at Wembley on 11 June organised by the anti-apartheid movement.

71. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further exchanges there have been between Her Majesty's Government and the South African Government about the BBC's televising of the Wembley concert for Nelson Mandela; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid) on 28 June.

European Community Foreign Ministers

31. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to meet his colleagues in the European Community; and what subjects will be on the agenda.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to meet his European Community counterparts at the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 25-26 July. Items on the agenda are the renegotiation of the Lomé convention; trade negotiations with Czechoslovakia; the establishing of the court of first instance; and, possibly, issues arising from the Hanover European Council. Ministers will also discuss the appointment of judges to the European Court of Justice.

European Parliament

32. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met members of the European Parliament.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend met Lord Plumb, President of the European Parliament, on 29 June. We both also maintain regular contact with other members of the European Parliament. My right hon. and learned Friend hosted a reception for the joint colloquy between the European Democratic Group and the group of the European People's party on 30 June. I spoke to a session of the joint colloquy on the same day.

57. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the President of the European Parliament; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend met Lord Plumb on 29 June. They discussed the results of the Hanover European Council and current issues involving the Council and the European Parliament.

South Korea

33. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on human rights in South Korea.

Mr. Eggar: We are encouraged by recent progress, including democratically held elections and the release of political prisoners on 30 June. We hope this progress will continue.

Nicaragua

35. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Nicaragua to hold discussions with its Government.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to visit Nicaragua.

India

37. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when last he met the Foreign Minister of India to discuss Anglo-Indian relations.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary met the then Indian Minister of External Affairs during his visit to India in April 1986. He also met Mr. Narasimha Rao twice in the past nine months and looks forward to meeting him again soon in his new capacity following his appointment on 25 June as the Minister of External Affairs.

El Salvador

40. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made regarding the increase of death squad activity in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: In February this year we supported the extension of the mandate of the United Nations special representative on human rights in El Salvador, and in March I took the opportunity presented by the visit of the Salvadorean Foreign Minister Acevedo Peralta to discuss this matter with him.

85. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any request from the Government of El Salvador regarding monitoring of the 1989 presidential election in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: No.

86. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has now received a report from Dr. David Browning on the conduct of the recent congressional elections in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. We hope to be able to present it to the House very soon.

European Community (Foreign Policy)

41. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have disscussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European foreign policies.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend will meet colleagues from the Twelve to discuss political co-operation matters in Athens on 18 July.

Gibraltar

42. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress Gibraltar has made towards the Chief Minister's declared aim of economic self-sufficiency.

Mrs. Chalker: The new Government of Gibraltar are pressing ahead rapidly with their economic development plans. It is too early to judge the results across the board, but it is understood that Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited is already showing a working profit.

Entry Visas (Iranian Citizens)

44. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any proposals to review the arrangements for issuing entry visas to citizens of Iran.

Mr. Eggar: There are no proposals to review the arrangements.

British Visitors Abroad (Conduct)

46. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterparts in other countries with regard to hooliganism by British visitors at football matches and holiday resorts abroad.

Mr. Eggar: None. We are greatly concerned at the damage to the United Kingdom's reputation caused by hooliganism. I discussed a number of possible measures to counter hooliganism with the Spanish authorities in Madrid last month. My hon. Friends the Minister of State, Home Office and the Minister responsible for sport have been having talks with their counterparts in the Council of Europe in Portugal and in the Federal Republic of Germany respectively.

Ministerial Visits

47. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many ministerial visits have been made to sub-Saharan Africa, including Commonwealth countries there, during the last 12 months; and what major subjects were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister visited Kenya and Nigeria in January 1988. My hon. Friend the Minister of State and I have made five visits to sub-Saharan Africa during the last 12 months. Ministers in other Government Departments have also visited the region. A wide range of bilateral, regional and international issues were discussed.

African National Congress

48. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government's relations with the African National Congress have evolved since the Prime Minister's statement at the Vancouver summit of Commonwealth Heads of Government.

Mrs. Chalker: Officials meet ANC representatives from time to time as part of our policy of dialogue with a wide range of opinion within and outside South Africa. We use such meetings to urge the ANC to forswear violence, and shall continue to do so.

Council of Ministers

50. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the main topics for discussion at the next meeting of the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) on 30 June.

54. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implementation by the European Community Council of Foreign Ministers on the future financing package agreed by the European Council in Brussels in February.

56. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implementation by the European Community Council of Foreign Ministers on the future financing package agreed by the European Council in Brussels in February.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 30 June.

Australia

51. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Australia.

Mr. Eggar: At present my right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

Spain

52. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Spain.

Mrs. Chalker: Relations with Spain are friendly and businesslike, as is to be expected between fellow EC partners and NATO allies. Our relations will be given a further boost by the visits to Spain of Her Majesty The Queen and my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in the autumn.

Middle East

53. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the European Community Council of Ministers the case for a European initiative to accelerate the middle east peace process; and if he will make a statement.

81. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the failure so far of the mission of the United States Secretary of State, Mr. Schultz, to produce a settlement, he will give consideration to the launching of a European initiative in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We and our European partners keep under constant review how we can contribute most effectively to advancing the peace process.

66. Sir Dennis Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on progress towards a peace settlement in the middle east.

78. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on progress towards a settlement of the conflict over Palestine.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We shall continue to encourage the parties to the Arab-Israel dispute to respond positively to Mr. Shultz's initiative and to agree arrangements for an international conference.

68. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the Arab League summit in Algiers, he plans to press for a European initiative to accelerate the middle east peace process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We and our European partners keep under constant review how we can contribute most effectively to advancing the peace process.

77. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for the middle east peace process of the Arab League summit in Algiers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We hope that the Arab consensus emerging from the summit can be harnessed to realistic and constructive efforts to resolve the Arab-Israel dispute.

Hong Kong

59. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 8 June.

East-West Relations

60. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of East-West relations.

Mr. Mellor: East-West relations are in better shape than for many years. Fundamental differences between East and West remain, most obviously in the field of human rights and individual liberties, but both sides have shown their interest in ensuring that the relationship is effectively managed, with the aim of creating long-term stability and predictability, thus enhancing security.

Philippines

61. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent meeting in the Philippines.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend visited the Philippines from 27-29 May. He had useful and cordial discussions on a wide range of topics with President Corazon Aquino and members of her Cabinet, including Foreign Secretary Raúl Manglapus. The visit served to improve the already good relations between the United Kingdom and the Philippines, and to promote the interests of British exporters.

Sri Lanka

62. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received concerning human rights in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. We have seen some recent allegations.

Refugees (Hong Kong)

64. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any representations from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, following his statement on refugees and Hong Kong.

65. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any representations from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, following his statement on refugees and Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: We have had a number of contacts with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees over the introduction by the Hong Kong Government of a new policy on Vietnamese boat people. Those contacts continue. We have not received any representations from him on this matter.

Czechoslovakia

69. Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Mellor: Not at present.

Cameroon

72. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Cameroon.

Mrs. Chalker: As I told my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) on 8 June, my right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to visit Cameroon. I plan to visit Cameroon on 12-14 July.

Western European Union

73. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his present policy on the offering of public criticism by Her Majesty's Government of other member states of the Western European Union.

Mr. Mellor: We believe that the Western European Union and its Assembly should be a forum for frank discussion of key European security issues such as burden sharing. We do not consider that close allies should be offended by plain speaking about such issues.

European Council, Hanover

74. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Council meeting at Hanover.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have nothing to add to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 30 June.

Toronto Summit

75. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Toronto summit.

83. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Toronto summit.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 23 June.

Côte d'Ivoire

79. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the purpose of the proposed visit of the right hon. Member for Wallasey, (Mrs. Chalker) the Minister of State, to Côte d'Ivoire.

Mrs. Chalker: The main purpose of my visit is to strengthen our political links with Côte d'Ivoire and to review the long-term prospects for increased co-operation in a wide field, including trade and investment. I shall be accompanied by a group of senior British business men.

Haiti

80. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet the United States Secretary of State to discuss recent developments in Haiti.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to meet the United States Secretary of State to discuss Haiti.

Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania

88. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to whether there have been any recent changes in Soviet policy towards the future status of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In line with glasnost, more of the historical truth about the incorporation of the Baltic states into the Soviet Union and subsequent events is now emerging. The views of the Latvian, Lithuanian and Estonian peoples can also be expressed with increasing freedom. Meanwhile, there are some signs of Soviet readiness to tolerate greater local autonomy, for example, in cultural and economic areas. We welcome these developments as part of the wider process of reform in the Soviet Union.

Egypt (British Assets)

89. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 156, if any response has now been received from the Egyptian Government to Her Majesty's Government's representations seeking the restoration of British assets in full, or alternatively complete compensation following their sequestration by the Egyptian Government in the aftermath of the Suez crisis in 1956; what further action he proposes to take with particular reference to the property of Mr. Douglas Forsyth, a constituent of the hon. Member for Wealden, in the light of the further adjournment of his case in the Egyptian courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No such representations have been made. The 1959 United Kingdom—Egyptian Financial and Property Agreement (Cmnd. 723) provided for the return of all sequestrated British property and for the payment of compensation for damage thereto in full. In our view, both the Egyptian and British Governments have fully discharged their obligations under this agreement.

Representations to expedite the hearing of Mr. Forsyth's appeal before the Egyptian courts were made. The court's determination was announced on 22 June. We have not yet received a reply to our request to the Egyptian Government for any proposals they may have to assist Mr. Forsyth in obtaining vacant possession of his property.

Mr. Brian Butcher

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to investigate the imprisonment in Rome of Mr. Brian Butcher; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We are aware of Mr. Butcher's arrest, and he has been visited by consular officials. The legality of Mr. Butcher's arrest is a matter for the Italian courts to determine. It would be contrary to internationally accepted practice for us to attempt to intervene in this process. We shall continue to monitor developments closely.

Majorca (Arrested Britons)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the circumstances leading to the recent arrest of five Britons in Majorca; what exchanges he is having with the Spanish authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The events leading to the arrest of five Britons in Majorca on 1 July 1988 are a matter for investigation by the Spanish authorities. The five are remanded in custody pending completion of that investigation. They have been visited by a consular officer.

The general question of hooliganism by a small minority of British visitors to Spain is one on which we have regular and frank exchanges with the Spanish authorities and with British travel organisations. I gave details of the most recent of these exchanges in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 22 June 1988.

I recently launched a new initiative in the form of a series of public service messages for television which offer practical advice to British holidaymakers travelling abroad.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, further to his answer of 27 June, he will give a breakdown by county of where the 593 blue marked sheep were remonitored between 28 September 1987 and 1 June 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Between 28 September 1987 and 1 June 1988 blue-marked sheep could be sent for slaughter only if remonitoring had revealed them to present no danger to public health and they had been identified as eligible for slaughter by a distinctive Ministry ear-tag. Of the 593 sheep remonitored in England in this period, 561 were remonitored in Cumbria, where the highest levels of radioactivity would be expected to be found, and 32 in Lancashire.

Domestic Waste

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has given consideration to invoking the provisions of the Plant Health (Great Britain) Order 1987 to avert the impact of American domestic wastes containing plant material.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Plant Health (Great Britain) Order 1987 prohibits the landing in Great Britain of a number of plants and plant pests from the United States, but does not specifically refer to the landing of domestic waste. Nevertheless, I recognise the possibility that domestic waste originating from the United States might contain banned material, with a consequent risk of introducing serious plant diseases into the United Kingdom, and I am naturally concerned that this should not happen.

Pesticides

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the measures he has taken, under powers granted to him under the Food and Environmental Protection Act 1984, to protect members of the public using public footpaths against the harmful effects of pesticides.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Pesticides are strictly controlled under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986, with the effect that no pesticide may be used in the countryside which poses an unacceptable risk in use to operators, members of the public, wildlife or the environment generally. The agricultural inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive is actively enforcing this prohibition, and prosecutions have resulted. However, we believe that safe use of pesticides also requires a high standard of information and training amongst operators. All new-entrant spray operators in the agriculture industry will accordingly have to show a certificate of competence from 1 January 1989, as will contractors' staff; and we are developing a detailed code of practice with the help of both the industry and the independent experts of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. In the most recent draft, which is publicly available, growers are advised that they > "should avoid overspraying public rights of way (including roads, footpaths and bridleways) and consider, after reading pesticide labels, the need for warning notices".

The reference to pesticide labels follows advice given by the ACP that only a small number of pesticides carry any risk to walkers who come into contact with the crop after use. The labels will normally identify such products as "Irritant" and contain advice to exclude people from fields for a period after spraying. Where a right of way exists the grower's obligation to protect human health may, as the draft code indicates, be achieved more effectively by avoiding overspraying of the right of way. The advice given in this edition of the draft code will be the subject of renewed consultation at the end of this growing season.

Aerial application is subject to additional controls, including the legal requirement to confine the application to the land intended to be treated, and to notify occupants of nearby buildings in writing before spraying takes place.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to protect public footpaths from aerial spraying of pesticides.

Mr. Gummer: The aerial application of pesticides has been subject, since 6 October 1986, to the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. This legislation imposes more stringent controls in aerial application than on any other type of pesticide use, and requires the application of pesticides to be confined to the land intended to be treated. In the most recent draft of the code of practice on use, farmers and growers are advised that in order to meet their legal obligations they should avoid overspraying public rights of way.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the employees of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service on the subject of a management buy-out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to sell the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans to sell ADAS.

School Milk (Subsidies)

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the quantities of milk, whole and semi-skim, supplied to each local education authority in Great Britain on which European Community subsidy was claimed, during the 1986-87 school year.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 4 July 1988]: Quantities of school milk on which EC subsidy was claimed by local education authorities and local authorities in Great Britain are recorded by school year, not by financial year. During the 1986-87 school year the quantities were as follows:

Quantities of whole milk and semi-skimmed milk for which subsidy was claimed by local education authorities for the school year 1986-87

Vegetable Gene Bank

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what has been the Government contribution to the running costs of the vegetable gene bank at Wellsbourne, Stratford upon Avon, in each of the years since it was established;

(2) if he intends to make it his policy to meet the future running costs of the vegetable gene bank at Wellsbourne, Stratford upon Avon.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 5 July 1988]: The vegetable gene bank is maintained within the Institute of Horticultural Research of the Agricultural and Food Research Council and as such receives some support from the science Vote of the Department of Education and Science. However, the majority of the running costs have been met by Oxfam and contributions of £30,000 per annum from my Department. Oxfam has recently withdrawn its support, but alternative sources of funding are being sought and my Department has increased its contribution to £60,000 for 1988-89. The research and development programmes of Agricultural Departments are under review.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the contribution to research and development of the vegetable gene bank at Wellsbourne, Stratford upon Avon.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 5 July 1988]: All the work of the Institute of Horticultural Research funded by my Department was considered in the recent review of near market research and development, but no specific assessment of the contribution of the vegetable gene bank has been made by my Department. However, it is clear that the gene bank provides a resource for plant breeders in the United Kingdom and the rest of the world.

Trees (Storm Damage)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any breakdown is yet available of approximate numbers of each tree species lost during the storm of October 1987.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 4 July 1988]: The estimated figures, by major species groups, are as follows:

	Million
Pine	8
Other Conifers	3
Oak	1
Beech	1
Other Broadleaves	2
TOTAL	15

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of housing benefit claimants who have lost as a result of recent changes in housing benefit rules; and what estimate he has of the average level of loss in each of the constituencies of Hendon, South, Mid-Worcestershire, Lancashire, West, Fylde, Staffordshire, Moorlands, and Amber Valley.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 7 June 1988, at column 561, for an answer to the first part of his question. I regret that detailed information about the effects of housing benefit changes in individual constituencies is not available.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement concerning his Department's response to the decision of the Birkenhead SSAT on 10 June concerning housing benefit supplement and transitional protection.

Mr. Portillo: A decision by a social security appeals tribunal represents the first stage in the appeals procedure under the independent adjudication system. I understand that the chief adjudication officer has now received the tribunal's written decision and has applied to the tribunal chairman for leave to appeal to a commissioner.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants on income support will be covered by the housing benefit transitional payments scheme.

Mr. Portillo: Most claimants on income support will not need a housing benefit transitional payment, because they will be entitled to maximum housing benefit from 1 April and help towards their new 20 per cent. rates payment is provided for in income support. Moreover, transitional protection was built into the change from supplementary benefit to income support. There will, however, be a small number of income support recipients in the vulnerable groups who will qualify for a payment under the criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 27 April. These will generally be households affected by the detailed changes in the rules governing the treatment of non-dependant deductions, and service or amenity charges.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the operation of the payment of transitional benefit relating to the loss of housing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: The transitional payments unit in Glasgow has started to receive applications for transitional payments and we expect the unit to become fully operational this month.

Diet Costs

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what calculations his Department has made as to how much needs to be spent on a healthy diet by a pregnant woman.

Mrs. Currie: Such calculations would be misleading. The range of foods available to the British public provides endless possibilities for constructing a healthy diet, many of them quite inexpensive, both for pregnant women and for everybody else.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the notional amount which his Department calculated as being necessary for expenditure on food in order to achieve a healthy diet when family credit rates were decided.

Mr. Portillo: There is no specific element for food in the family credit rates. It is for individuals to decide on the amount and proportion of their income to be allocated to each area of expenditure.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the notional amount which his Department calculated as being necessary for a claimant to spend on food when income support rates were decided.

Mr. Portillo: The income support rates cover the costs of day-to-day living, including food, but do not have amounts allocated to the different elements of these costs. It is for individuals to decide on the amount and proportion of their income to be allocated to each area of expenditure.

Hospital Building Schemes

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in chronological order by start date the hospital schemes costing over £5 million, started since 1979, giving in each case (a) the date of start on site, (b) the actual or intended completion date, (c) the number of beds involved, (d) the number of operating theatres involved, (e) the total cost and (f) the regional and district health authority; and if he will also give the number of such schemes costing over £1 million during the same period.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested on the 83 health building schemes over £5 million which have started construction since 1979 is provided in the table. In addition, 338 schemes each costing between £1 million and £5 million, were started in this period.

Departmental Office (St. Helens)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to ensure that adequate resources have been provided to meet the needs of claimants in St. Helens with regard to the social fund allocation for his Department's office in St. Helens over the next two years.

Mr. Portillo: The national social fund budget for 1988-89 is £203 million. This is broadly comparable to single payment expenditure in 1987-88. A total of £201 million has been allocated to local offices partly on the basis of past single payment expenditure and partly on the basis of caseload. A note explaining the allocation formula is in the Library. There is a central contingency reserve of £2 million to meet unforeseen and unforeseeable demands. Allocations for future years have not yet been decided.

Seasonal Unemployment Payments

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about seasonal unemployment payments from the tourism industry.

Mr. Portillo: A number of representations on unemployment benefits for seasonal workers are made every year. Some of these relate to tourism, but records are not kept of exactly how many.

Benefit Protection

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest assessment of the number of people receiving benefit protection following the social security charges introduced on 11 April.

Mr. Portillo: It is estimated that around 1·4 million income support recipients are in receipt of transitional protection. Further information will not be available until the results of the annual statistical inquiry are published in summer 1989.

Health Authorities (Chairmen)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the names of all the chairs of district and regional health authorities, indicating their occupation and previous experience of service on district, regional health authorities or community health councils.

Mrs. Currie: The names of the chairmen of the regional and district health authorities in England are as follows. We do not systematically update details about occupation, nor do we keep comprehensive information about any previous experience they may have had.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when, pursuant to his reply given to the right hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe) on 4 December 1987, Official Report, column 758, he expects to publish the draft community charge rebate regulations; and when he expects to have models to determine the parameters of any poverty traps which would be created.

Mr. Scott: A substantial part of the first draft of the community charge rebate regulations was sent to local authorities in Scotland on 23 May, and it is expected that the local authority associations will be consulted formally on the complete draft of the regulations in August. A copy will be placed in the Library at that time.

No detailed information about any poverty trap effects that may be caused by the community charge benefit scheme is available at present. We plan to incorporate information about community charge liability and the community charge benefit scheme, so far as practicable, in the modelling relating to the years when the community charge will be in place.

National Health Service Staff (Compensation)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the compensation payments for National Health Service staff in respect of redundancies and early retirements in 1987-88 in the manner used in his answer to the hon. Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) of 31 March, Official Report, column 660.

Mrs. Currie: Final outturn figures for 1987-88 are not yet available. Provisional outturn figures are as follows:

	Number of cases	Compensation cost £	Total cost including superannuation £
Competitive tendering
New cases	832	1,724,000	3,848,000
Continuing cases	3,408	3,642,000	3,991,000
Other cases
New cases	1,545	5,812,000	19,364,000
Continuing cases	9,491	14,939,000	43,700,000

NHS Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what percentage by value and volume of National Health Service (a) catering, (b) cleaning and (c) laundry services have been put out to competitive tender;

(2) what percentage of contracts put out to competitive tender for (a) catering, (b) cleaning and (c) laundry services in the National Health Service have been won by either in-house tenders or outside tenders;

(3) what are the estimated savings, gross and net of redundancy and other costs on tendering for (a) catering, (b) cleaning and (c) laundry services in the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: As at 31 March 1988 it is estimated that virtually all domestic and laundry services, 96 per cent. and 97 per cent. by value respectively, had been put out to tender; and 76 per cent. of catering services. Of contracts awarded for these services, in-house teams won around 80 per cent., 85 per cent. and 97 per cent. respectively. Estimated net annual savings generated by award of all contracts, as reported by regional health authorities, were £79 million, £8·7 million and £18·2 million for domestic, laundry and catering services. No information is available centrally on gross savings.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many contracts put out to outside tender in the National Health Service have subsequently reverted to in-house tender.

Mrs. Currie: Nineteen to 30 March 1988.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total spent by the National Health Service on (a) catering, (b) cleaning and (c) laundry services in the financial years 1983 to 1988.

Mrs. Currie: Figures of total current expenditure on the services requested derived from the annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England together with those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals are shown in the table. Health authorities were required to subject their provision of these services to competitive tendering arrangements following the Department's competitive tendering initiative in 1983.

	Catering £ million	Domestic/ Cleaning £ million	Laundry £ million
1983-84	354	429	66
1984-85	354	418	64
1985-86	355	404	64
[1] 1986-87	361	381	64

[1] Latest year available. (Figures for 1987-88 will be available in the autumn).

Notes:

1. The figures for 1985-86 and 1986-87 do not include comparatively minor expenditure by family practitioner committees following their separation from health authorities on 1 April 1985.

2. The figures for 1983-84 include an element for value added tax charged by private contractors. Since 1 September 1983 health authorities have been able to reclaim this and hence exclude it from their expenditure.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the total National Health Service cost improvement programme is accounted for by savings on catering, cleaning and laundry services in each financial year from 1983-84 to 1987-88.

Mrs. Currie: Savings on catering, cleaning and laundry services in 1985-86 and 1986-87 accounted for 11·8 per cent. and 16·8 per cent. of the total cost improvement programme in those years. Comparable figures are not available for the other years requested.

Widows

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of widowed mothers aged (a) 40 years, (b) 41 years, (c) 42 years, (d) 43 years and (e) 44 years who have lost benefits as a result of the changes implemented as from April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Social Fund

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will give figures of social fund expenditure comparable to those placed in the Library for the last month of May, for those offices that were not included in the figures; and whether he proposes to make any corrections to the original figures.

Mr. Portillo: We are making available monthly data on the operation of the social fund as soon as possible after the month to which they refer. As a result, the figures may be incomplete and provisional. We shall amend the tables as further information is obtained.

Maintenance Proceedings

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes have been made to his policy of giving women freedom to choose whether to take their own maintenance proceedings, without their income support being affected, as outlined in the supplementary benefits handbook para 13.11.

Mr. Portillo: None.

Property Sales

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether it remains his policy that capital realised from the sale of redundant Health Service property within the South East Thames region will be used for the modernisation of existing facilities and for the development of new facilities; if he will withhold his approval for any plans to convert such capital, or capital allocation, into revenue; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Receipts from the sale of redundant Health Service property are retained by health authorities as an addition to their cash limit for capital spending. Health authorities have delegated authority to transfer up to 10 per cent. of their capital allocation to revenue or 1 per cent. of their revenue allocation to capital in any year in order to enable them to make the best overall use of available resources. Departmental approval to such transfers would be required only where a region proposed to exceed the above levels.

Benefit (Disqualification)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, in the last year for which figures are available, how many people have been disqualified from receiving social security benefit because they (a) left their jobs voluntarily or (b) lost their jobs through misconduct; how many of these people appealed against the decision; and how many of the appeals were successful.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

Disqualifictions for unemployment benefit on account of leaving a job voluntarily or being dismissed for misconduct—1987

	Leaving voluntarily	Misconduct
Disqualifications for unemployment benefit	324,253	97,222
Referrals/Appeals for social security appeal tribunals[1]	11,683	4,353
Referrals/Appeals found in claimant's favour	2,051	1,106

[1] Includes 1,571 cases of voluntarily leaving and 929 misconduct cases carried forward from the previous year. At the end of the year 1979 voluntarily leaving and 790 misconduct cases were outstanding.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, in the last 25 years, what changes have been made to the maximum period of time for which claimants can be disqualified from receiving social security benefit because of leaving a job voluntarily or because of dismissal resulting from misconduct; what is the current period; and what would be the consequent loss of benefit suffered by (a) a single person, (b) a married person, (c) a man with wife and two children and (d) a man with wife and four children.

Mr. Portillo: Disqualification for unemployment benefit because of leaving a job voluntarily or because of dismissal resulting from misconduct has been a feature of the unemployment insurance scheme since 1911. Before October 1986 the maximum period of disqualification was six weeks. It was increased to a maximum of 13 weeks with effect from 5 October 1986 and to its present maximum level of 26 weeks with effect from 11 April 1988.

The weekly loss of unemployment benefit to a person disqualified in these circumstances amounts to £32·75 for a single person and to £52·95 for a claimant who is also entitled to receive an increase for an adult dependant. There are no additions for dependent children unless, exceptionally, a claimant is over state pension age.

If a person who is disqualified for unemployment benefit claims income support, that is paid at a reduced rate for the period of disqualification. The reduction amounts normally to 40 per cent. of the claimant's personal rate of benefit, but is modified to 20 per cent. if any member of the family is pregnant or seriously ill and the family has less than £200 capital. No reduction is applied to benefit payable in respect of any dependants.

The weekly rates of deduction applied to the claimant's personal allowance with effect from 11 April 1988 are shown in the table:

Category of claimant	Lower 20 per cent. rate of deduction £	Higher 40 per cent. rate of deduction £
Aged 16 or 17	3·90	7·75
Aged 18-24	5·20	10·40
Aged 25 or over	6·70	13·35
Person in a hostel or board and lodging accommodation	2·05	4·10

Teaching Hospitals

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many teaching hospitals were closed in each of England, Wales and Scotland in each year since 1975; and where they were located.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 30 June 1988]: No main university teaching hospital has closed in England since 1975. Hospitals in Wales and Scotland are the responsibilities of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many teaching hospitals there were in England and Wales for each year since 1980.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 30 June 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Arnold) on 12 April 1988, at columns 98-99. The list of teaching hospitals remains unaltered since 1980. Hospitals in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Rates Arrears

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a local authority may apply part of the rent rebate of an income support claimant to meet arrears of rates.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 21 June 1988]: Rent rebates are awarded to help people on low incomes with their rent and cannot be used to meet arrears of rates.

SCOTLAND

Health Boards (Tenders)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy as to how much information on competitive tendering may be given by health boards to hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is essentially a matter for health boards, which will follow their normal procedures for deciding what information about their letting of tenders can be properly disclosed. Clearly it would be wrong for boards to reveal any matter covered by commercial confidentiality, and there may be other aspects of the evaluation and assessment process which boards consider it inappropriate to disclose.

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to provide accommodation for single homeless men in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government are committed to maintaining an effective legislative framework to help the homeless. Recent initiatives designed to tackle the problem of homelessness include the provision of increased resources for capital investment by local authorities, particularly for special needs groups, and funding of voluntary organisations concerned with homeless people. Steps have also been taken to increase the availability of accommodation for rent through support of the housing association movement. Our proposals to reform the private rented sector will increase landlords' willingness to make property available for rent. We have also given guidance to local authorities on design standards and on priority allocation policies; and we are at present undertaking research into local authorities' practices in dealing with applications from homeless people. In addition, a new clause to be introduced into the Housing (Scotland) Bill will allow local authorities, with the approval of the Secretary of State, to make schemes under which they can offer tenants cash incentives to move out of council housing into the private sector. The accommodation thus vacated will then be available directly or indirectly to provide housing for the homeless.

Fire Risks

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to mount a publicity campaign emphasising the risks of fire in the home, what can be done to stop such risks and what can be done in the event of fire occurring prior to the arrival of rescue services; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I very much regret the recent deaths in house fires near Edinburgh.

As part of its work the Scottish Home and Health Department endeavours to alert the public to the risk of fire in the home, through national radio and television campaigns, news releases and the issue of substantial supplies of leaflets and posters to fire brigades to help them in their local publicity campaigns. I understand that, following the recent tragedies, the Lothian and Borders fire brigade has assigned additional officers to its community education unit and is stepping up its efforts to alert the public to fire risks in the home.

Guidance on fire safety in the home is given in two leaflets, copies of which are being placed in the Library. The main fire risks arise from chip pans which are left unattended, cigarettes and other smoking materials which are not properly extinguished, and faulty electrical installations. The risk of fire can be reduced by providing guards for fires, shutting internal doors at night and unplugging inessential electrical appliances. Smoke detectors can help to provide early warning. Children should not be left alone in the house. If a fire does occur, the first priority is to get out, using any available means of escape, and then to call the fire brigade.

Allergies

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will obtain a copy with a view to evaluating the findings and conclusions of "Food Allergy and Intolerance" by Dr. J. Broskoff and S. J. Challacombe, Daillière Tindall; and if he will issue any advice to health boards with regard to testing for allergies.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. I am aware of the existence of this publication. However, the diagnosis of and treatment for allergies (including testing) is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctors concerned with individual patients. I do not, therefore, consider it appropriate to issue advice to health boards on this matter.

Health Care International

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be informed by Health Care International as to whether it has secured guaranteed financial backing for the proposed hospital at Clydebank.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 July 1988]: Health Care International has already secured financial backing to take the project to its present stage. I understand the company's financial advisers are currently structuring finance for the next stage of the development.

DEFENCE

United States Military Facilities

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to establish a United States wartime contingency hospital at RAF Cosford.

Mr. Freeman: While the feasibility of making a part of RAF Cosford site available for the basing of a United States wartime contingency hospital has been examined, it is too early to say whether this will lead to a formal request for permission to establish such a facility at Cosford or what the final decision on such a request might be.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost to date to Her Majesty's Government, including policing costs, of the deployment of cruise missiles at (a) RAF Greenham Common and (b) RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister set out the total construction costs of the two cruise missiles bases in her reply to the hon. Member on 4 December 1987, at column 725. Of those total costs, £15·9 million at RAF Greenham Common and £21·0 million at RAF Molesworth were met by Her Majesty's Government. The cost of security and supervision borne by the Ministry of Defence at both bases since 1979 is about £20 million. It is estimated that additional policing costs borne by police authorities amounted to approximately £5·8 million.

Eppynt Range Extension

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much land has been purchased by his Department and its agents to extend the Eppynt range in Brecon and Radnor in each of the years 1984 to 1988; and how many complete farms have been purchased in each year.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1984 the Ministry of Defence has purchased two areas of land in Brecon and Radnor to meet Army training requirements at the Sennybridge training area (Eppynt range). Details are as follows:

1984-1987—None
1988 —Whole of Gledrydd farm, Tirabad (208 acres)
Part of Pantycelyn farm (53 acres at Mynachdy Upper Chapel)

These areas will also continue to be used for agriculture.

RAF Greenham Common

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what construction work is currently being undertaken at RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There is no new construction work currently being undertaken at RAF Greenham Common.

Royal Navy (Radar)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what range radar in Royal Navy vessels can distinguish between passenger aircraft and fighter aircraft.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It would not be in the interests of the safety of our naval forces in the Gulf to reveal specific operational capabilities of this nature.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the future of Harland and Wolff.

Mr. Viggers: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) on Thursday 30 June 1988.

Stalker-Sampson Report

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if there has been any developments in the disciplinary proceedings arising out of the Stalker-Sampson investigation.

Mr. Tom King: In my statement of 17 February I informed the House that the Police Authority for Northern Ireland, as the disciplinary authority for chief officer ranks, would be considering what action, if any, was required in respect of individual senior officers in the light of Mr. Sampson's report. The Chief Constable of the RUC had invited Mr. Charles Kelly, the chief constable of Staffordshire, to consider whether disciplinary charges should be brought in the cases of RUC officers of other ranks.

On 29 June the Police Authority, having considered the comments of Mr. Sampson about the role of senior officers in the affair, and having consulted Mr. Sampson, Mr. Kelly and Sir Philip Myers, Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary, announced its decision not to appoint an investigating officer to carry out further inquiries and resolved that no disciplinary proceedings needed to be taken. In making its announcement the Police Authority said that Mr. Sampson had made it clear that the evidence adduced did not reveal conduct amounting to criminal behaviour so far as the chief officers were concerned, and that he had advised it that in his view disciplinary proceedings would not be justified.

The authority acknowledged that there had been criticisms concerning operational and administrative matters, but noted that these aspects had been the subject of a special inspection by Mr. Charles McLachlan, one of Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary, of which I informed the House on 17 February. The Chief Constable has accepted in principle all the recommendations of that report.

As regards officers of other ranks, Mr. Kelly delivered his completed report to the Chief Constable of the RUC on 20 June. On 4 July the Chief Constable announced that he had accepted Mr. Kelly's recommendations and that 20 officers had been notified that they would be the subject of disciplinary proceedings. A chief constable from a mainland force will hear these charges. It is clearly important, in the interests of the public, the RUC and the officers concerned, that these matters are brought to an early conclusion. I have been assured by the Chief Constable that he will do all he can, consistent with the safeguards of the disciplinary procedures, to achieve that end.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Heavy Lorries (Speeding)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many heavy goods vehicle drivers were prosecuted or convicted of exceeding the 60 mph speed limit on motorways in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: The information collected centrally on proceedings and findings of guilt for speeding offences relating to goods vehicles does not include the type of road where the offence occurred or the particular limit which applied to the vehicle concerned. The available information is published annually in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (table 5 of the issue for 1986), copies of which are in the Library. Figures for 1987 will be published later this year.

Young Offenders

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to bring the unified custodial sentence for young offenders proposed in the Criminal Justice Bill into operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Provided the relevant provisions in the Criminal Justice Bill secure parliamentary approval by the summer recess, it is our intention to implement the new sentence from 1 October this year.

Immigration

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the steps being taken to prevent persons entering the United Kingdom illegally via the East Anglian coast.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ipswich (Mr. Irvine) on 23 June at column 1244. In East Anglia, as elsewhere, the local police, immigration service and customs representatives liaise closely to counter illegal entry.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of arrests either inside or outside football arising from all League matches, Football Association challenge cup, Littlewoods cup, Simod cup and Sherpa van trophy for the whole of the 1987-88 football season.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police collect statistics centrally for Football League matches only. The total number of arrests at those matches in the 1987-88 football season was 6,147.

African National Congress

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in view of the support of the African National Congress for recent terrorist attacks in South Africa against non-Government targets, he will make use of his powers under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act to exclude members and officials of the African National Congress from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: The power to make exclusion orders under part II of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 may by virtue of section 3(6) be exercised only in respect of persons concerned in the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of terrorism designed to influence public opinion or Government policy with respect to affairs in Northern Ireland.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the arrangements for prisons to pay local authorities money in lieu of rates; and what will be the arrangements under the community charge.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary of State for the Environment, but I understand that the rating of Government property department in the Treasury pays a contribution in lieu of rates on Crown properties including prisons; and that under the arrangements proposed in the Local Government Finance Bill now before Parliament the Government intend to continue to pay a contribution in lieu of rates on non-domestic Crown buildings.

Police Office, Birmingham (Grant)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is proposed to make a decision upon an application from the West Midlands police authority for a grant towards the cost of converting a former city of Birmingham children's home at Valencia croft, Castle vale, into a police office.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: West Midlands police authority was asked last month for further information about the cost of the proposed building work and the lease of the property. When we receive this, we will consider the application along with others from police authorities, in the light of the available resources.

Police, Fire and Civil Defence (Expenditure)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to take any measures to restrain expenditure in 1989-90 by the six joint police authorities and seven joint fire and civil defence authorities.

Mr. Hurd: A number of initiatives are being taken to improve value for money in the police and fire services. In the particular circumstances of the joint authorities I do not consider it appropriate to designate any of them for precept limitation in 1989-90. I do, however, expect them to continue to exercise restraint in their spending, and to have regard to efficiency, effectiveness and economy in the delivery of satisfactory levels of service.

Crime Statistics

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for each police area, how many crimes of violence against the person were reported, and how many successful detections there were, for the last year for which figures are available; and in each case what was the percentage change since 1978;

(2) for each police area how many cases of burglary there were for the last year for which figures are available; what were the number of cases of successful detections; and what was the percentage change on the figures of burglary and the detections since 1978;

(3) how many cases of theft or handling of stolen goods in each police area there were for the last year for which figures are available; what was the successful detection rate; and what was the percentage change in such crimes and detection since 1978;

(4) how many cases of criminal damage were reported in each police area for the last year for which figures are available; what was the number successfully detected; and what was the percentage change in 1978;

(5) how many cases of fraud or forgery were reported in each police area in the last year for which figures are available; how many cases were detected; and what was the percentage change since 1978 in crimes and successful detection.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 27 June 1988]: The numbers of notifiable offences recorded by the police in 1978 and 1987 are published, by offence group, in respectively table 32 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1978" (Cmnd 7670) and table 7 of Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 6/88. Copies of these publications are available in the Library. The corresponding numbers of offences cleared up in 1978 and 1987 are given in the following two tables; the figures for 1987 will be published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1987" later this year.

Remands

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many petty sessional divisions, 5 per cent. or less of remanded defendants were remanded in custody; in how many petty sessional divisions over 25 per cent. of remanded defendants were remanded in custody; and what was the national average proportion of remanded defendants who were remanded in custody in each of 1986 and 1987.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 30 June 1988]: The latest complete information is for 1985 and was published on 13 April 1987 in Home Office statistical bulletin 7/78 "The Use of Custodial Remand By The Courts", copies of which are in the Library. On average 13 per cent. of defendants remanded for all offences in 1985 were remanded in custody; there were nearly 80 petty sessional divisions in which over 25 per cent. of remanded defendants were recorded as remanded in custody, whereas in over 110 petty sessional divisions only 5 per cent. of remanded defendants were remanded in custody.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Dr. Frank Skuse

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Attorney-General when he next expects to discuss with the Director of Public Prosecutions the progress of the further inquiries by the City of London police into telephone calls made by Dr. Frank Skuse during his appearance as a witness at the Birmingham pub bombing appeal.

The Attorney-General: Tomorrow, Friday 8 July 1988.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Tombs

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General when Mr. and Mrs. Harold W. Tombs, 3 Highfield drive, Sutton Coldfield, West Midlands B73 5HR, who were told by Her Majesty's Land Registry that their application reference WM 411308 would take an average of 39 weeks to complete assuming that no requisitions arose, on 10 August 1987, may now expect their application to be completed.

The Attorney-General: At the request of Mr. and Mrs. Tombs' solicitors the deeds were returned to them on 1 July. The application can be completed as soon as the deeds are re-lodged with the Gloucester district land registry.

Public Expenditure Survey

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide a detailed breakdown for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91, by nature of item and functional area of charge, of the receipts to the Lord Chancellor's Department's programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey.

The Attorney-General: The information is as follows:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

HIV and AIDS (Teaching Pack)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the cost to public funds of scrapping and reprinting the Health Education Authority's teaching pack on HIV and AIDS; for what reasons this was done; if he will ensure that future editions include lists of agencies and helplines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My reply to the hon. Member for Bolton, South-East, (Mr. Young) on 28 June explained why the Government asked for certain changes to be made to the Health Education Authority's pack. I understand that the HEA has yet to establish the costs of making these changes. The retention of existing lists of agencies and helplines in future editions would be a matter for the HEA.

Mentally Handicapped Children

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide information on the numbers of mentally handicapped children leaving ESN(S) schools for each year from 1978-79 to 1986-87; and if he will publish data on the expected numbers leaving in each of the five years from 1987-88.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 12 April at column 13.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his criteria for determining increases in capital expenditure by local education authorities; and how he has applied those criteria in respect of Kent in each of the last four financial years.

Mr. Dunn: In formulating capital allocations for local education authorities, priority is given to committed expenditure, new projects to meet population growth and new projects to remove surplus places in the schools sector and to committed expenditure and equipment purchases in further and higher education. In accordance with these priorities, Kent's total capital allocations for the last four financial years are:

	£000's
1985-86	5,209
1986-87	6,405
1987-88	7,841
1988-89	7,588

Regional Accents and Dialects

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action his Department takes to ensure the preservation of regional accents and dialects; how much he spends on this each year; and how many officials in his Department are employed in this area.

Mrs. Rumbold: The recent report of the Kingman committee proposed that all pupils should acquire a command of standard English alongside intelligible use of regional dialects and accents. My right hon. Friend has asked the English working group to build on relevant Kingman committee recommendations for national curriculum purposes, and he will consider the other recommendations in the light of the public response and the working group's advice. No expenditure is incurred, and no officials are employed, by my Department specifically on the preservation of regional accents and dialects.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to restrain the expenditure of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today laid a report before the House designating the Inner London education authority for precept limitation in the 1989-90 financial year. The principle I have adopted is that ILEA's expenditure in 1988-89 is likely to exceed its grant-related expenditure by at least 12·5 per cent. I judge that this is an appropriate criterion for the ILEA. It is the same principle which the Secretary of State for the Environment has adopted in the case of general purpose authorities previously selected for rate limitation. The ILEA's budgeted spending in 1988-89 is more than 60 per cent. above its grant-related expenditure assessment.

I have determined the expenditure level for the ILEA for 1989-90 at £940 million. This represents a cash standstill on the sum which the precept maximum which I set for 1988-89 was intended to raise, once account has been taken of the net reduction in ILEA's expenditure requirement which I estimate will result from the changes in the organisation and funding of local authority higher education provided for in the Education Reform Bill.

The ILEA has today been notified of its designation for precept limitation and of the expenditure level which I have determined. It is open to the authority to apply for redetermination of the expenditure level.

Capital Allocations (Inner Cities)

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now distribute the additional capital allocations for inner city areas for 1988-89 which he announced on 24 March.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Forty local education authorities have today been informed of their supplementary allocation of prescribed capital expenditure for 1988-89. These authorities have satisfied me that they would be able to make particularly effective use of an additional allocation for inner city projects. The allocations and the projects which they are intended to cover are as follows:

Additional allocations

Education Reform

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is now able to announce the names of those he proposes to appoint as university commissioners once the Education Reform Bill receives Royal Assent.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The appointment of Lord Fraser of Tullybelton as chairman of the university commissioners was announced last week. I am now very pleased to announce the names of the other commissioners:

Lord Butterworth, former Vice Chancellor of the University of Warwick.

Mr. Alan Gregory CBE, formerly Chairman of BP Oil Ltd.

Sir James Munn, Chairman of the Training Commission.

Professor David Williams, President of Wolfson College, Cambridge.

I am grateful to this distinguished group of people for their willingness to accept appointment as commissioners. I am sure that they will command the confidence of the entire British university system. I shall appoint them formally when the Bill receives Royal Assent.

Mr. Sheerman. To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the overall additional estimated costs that will be incurred by local authorities as a result of the implementation of the provisions of the new Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her reply, 24 June 1988, c. 732-33]: I regret that the figure of £270 million referred to in line 5 of column 733 should have read £207 million. The corrected answer is therefore as follows:

The cost of the progressive implementation of the measures in the Education Reform Bill for schools and further education will vary from authority to authority according to developments already under way. Some redirection of recurrent and capital resources will be required. My right hon. Friend has announced proposals for the education support grants programme in 1989-90 which include some £65 million new expenditure related to the Bill's provisions for financial delegation and the national curriculum. A significant part of the programme of in-service training grants, currently supporting expenditure of £207 million, will be directed towards the implementation of the Bill's provisions in 1989-90 and subsequent years. There will also be implications for capital programmes within the Government's plans to enable local education authorities and voluntary bodies to spend more than £750 million on improving school buildings between now and 1990-91. The Government has set aside £65 million over the next three years mainly for the development and administration of assessment procedures, for which local authorities will not be charged fees. The Bill's provisions for the transfer of funding responsibility for polytechnics and colleges to central Government will lead to a reduction in spending and grant for local authorities of some £800 million from 1989-90.

ENERGY

Fossil Fuels

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to ensure that the burning of fossil fuels is undertaken in such a way as to abate carbon dioxide emissions.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am informed that it is generally accepted that the abatement of carbon dioxide gas (CO_2) by post combustion processes is not considered to be economically feasible. CO_2 abatement can be achieved by switching to fuels which contain less carbon, for example, from coal to natural gas, by using non-fossil fuel energy resources, for example, nuclear, hydroelectricity and other renewable energy technologies and by increased energy efficiency. The Government's commitment to continued diversity of fuel supply, including a sizeable non-fossil fuel component, is helping to control United Kingdom CO_2 emissions. My Department is carrying out R and D into renewable energy technologies which should contribute to abatement in the future.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, under his privatisation proposals, electricity generated from municipal and industrial waste will be classified as non-fossil-fuelled generating capacity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Although the details are still under discussion, I propose that when the non-fossil fuel obligation is set, waste should be classified as a non-fossil fuel, in line with other renewable sources and nuclear energy.

Public Expenditure Survey

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide a detailed breakdown for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91, by nature of item and functional area of charge, of the receipts to his programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey.

Mr. Parkinson: The breakdown of receipts classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey in my Department's programmes are shown in the table (by programme as set out in table 6.1 of the public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 288-II). The figures, with the exception of those indicated in note 4 to the table, are consistent with those given in the answer from my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 27 May 1988 at columns 375-76. They relate to receipts in respect of programme expenditure; receipts in respect of running costs expenditure are not included.

2. A breakdown by programme is not available for 1989-90 and 1990-91.
3. No receipts after 1985-86 as a result of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority operating as a trading fund from 1 April 1986.

PRIME MINISTER

Lord's Cricket Ground

Q54. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to a cricket match at Lord's cricket ground.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Agriculture

Q124. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the measures taken since the February meeting of the European Council to implement the proposals for agriculture agreed at that meeting.

The Prime Minister: Regulations have been agreed for the introduction or extension of stabilisers in all the main agricultural commodity regimes and for the introduction of set-aside. The improved budget discipline arrangements agreed by the European Council have also entered into legal force, and have governed the 1988 price-fixing. Regulations have also been agreed providing for the depreciation over five years of existing stocks and the depreciation in the year of entry of new stocks.

Engagements

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I am presiding at a dinner in honour of the recently retired Secretary General of NATO, Lord Carrington.

European Community (Finance)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what was the size of the supplementary finance for the European Economic Community agreed at the recent Council meeting; and if this spending will fall to be included within the new financial limits agreed for European Economic Community spending in 1988.

The Prime Minister: On 24 June, the member states confirmed that intergovernmental agreement to provide supplementary finance of up to 7·1 becu (some £5 billion) to help finance the 1988 Community budget, pending entry into force of the new Council decision on the Community's own resources. The United Kingdom's contribution will be up to some 1·1 becu (around £750 million), though this will be substantially offset by extra receipts and abatement. Payments under the intergovernmental agreement will be non-repayable advances of sums due when the new own resources decision enters into force. Total financing for the 1988 budget will be within the new own resources ceiling of 1·2 per cent. of Community gross national product (an increase of some 25 per cent. on the current ceiling). Indeed, it will be within the annual sub-ceiling for 1988 of 1·15 per cent. of gross national product.

Coal and Steel Imports (Duties)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what were the reasons for Her Majesty's Government agreeing to duties on coal and steel imports being included within own resources at the recent Council meeting; and what is the estimated total of such duties.

The Prime Minister: The exclusion from own resources of duties under the European Coal and Steel Community treaty had been an anomaly, and the Government accepted that it would be sensible to treat them as own resources like all other duties and levies on imports from third countries. This will not add to the total resources available to the Community, the Council having also agreed a comprehensive ceiling covering all own resources. Payments of coal and steel duties are likely to be around 100 mecu in 1988 for the Community as a whole, of which the United Kingdom share is estimated to be around 10 per cent.

European Community (Own Resources)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what were the reasons for Her Majesty's Government's agreement to the adjustment in the Fontainebleau abatements in the new own resources agreement of the Council; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government's aim was to secure an agreement that left us no worse off than we would have been with the continuation of the Fontainebleau abatement system and the present structure of own resources. We were therefore prepared to accept that the amount of our abatement should be adjusted to take account of the effect on the United Kingdom of the changes in the structure of own resources. The overall effect of these changes is that the Fontainebleau system remains intact, as I told the House on 15 February at column 707.

European Community (Agricultural Guidelines)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement outlining the procedures contained in the February European Council agreement to ensure that the proposed agricultural guidelines of expenditure are not breached.

The Prime Minister: There are several regulations now in place to reinforce the guideline. Stabilisers have been introduced for the main commodities. An early warning system has been set up to provide monthly reports on expenditure trends for each commodity with a requirement on the Commission and Council to take appropriate counter measures if an overspend threatens. Depreciation must take place regularly to prevent a build-up of overvalued stocks. Finally the annual price-fixing settlement must respect the guideline.

Central and South America

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the countries she has visited in Central and South America since 1979; and which Ministers have visited Nicaragua since 1979.

The Prime Minister: I visited Mexico in October 1981. My right hon. Friend the Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Ridley), then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, visited Nicaragua in 1980.

Central America

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what contacts have been made between representatives of Her Majesty's Government and representatives of the Contra forces during the past 12 months; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A representative of the Contras called on officials in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office at his request on 29 October 1987. He was informed of our consistent support for a peaceful, negotiated settlement of the problems in Central America.

Iranian Passenger Aircraft (Shooting Down)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what information was available to her before she endorsed the American navy's right to reply during the incident in the Gulf on 3 July in which an Iranian passenger aircraft was shot down.

The Prime Minister: We were in touch with the Americans throughout the day of 3 July. My statement naturally took into account these contacts and the content of statements by President Reagan and the chairman of the American joint chiefs of staff.

Korean Airliner (Shooting Down)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will publish in the Official Report her public comments made when the Russians shot down a Korean airliner.

The Prime Minister: I sent a message of condolence to President Chun on 2 September 1983. The British representative at the UN made a statement in the Security Council on the same day, a copy of which has been deposited in the Library of the House.

There is no comparison between the Soviet shooting down of KAL007 in September 1983 and the tragic loss of the Iranian airliner on 3 July. This latest incident took place in an area of hostilities where military action was actually taking place and the United States Navy warned the aircraft. In the case of KAL007, no hostilities were taking place and there was no clear evidence that the airliner was warned.

SCOTLAND

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a county by county breakdown of where the 3,572 marked sheep were remonitored between 28 September 1987 and 1 June 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Between 28 September 1987 and 1 June 1988 blue-marked sheep could be sent for slaughter only if remonitoring had confirmed that they presented no danger to public health and they had been identified as eligible for slaughter by a distinctive ear-tag.

The areas in which the 3,572 marked sheep were remonitored in Scotland in this period are as follows:

Region	Number of sheep
Borders	154
Central	824
Dumfries and Galloway	1,926
Fife	306
Grampian	32
Lothian	66
Strathclyde	210
Tayside	54
	3,572

Financial and Social Deprivation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider setting up a number of centrally administered pilot projects to provide funds to tackle financial and social deprivation in rural areas of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: No. My right hon. and learned Friend and I are not at present aware of any evidence which would suggest that the needs of rural areas would be better met through centrally administered projects as proposed than through encouraging close co-operation at local level between those public bodies concerned with securing the economic and social development of rural Scotland.

Mackerel

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received regarding access to the west coast mackerel stock.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There have been no recent representations on access to western mackerel, but this is a matter which has been extensively discussed between Ministers and the fishing industry.

School Meals (Annual Census)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the results of the annual census of school meals in Scotland held in January 1988; how these compare with the corresponding 1987 results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Education Authority Schools (including nursery and special schools)

Pupils taking school meals	50·0	50·0	41·8	41·7
Pupils bringing own food	20·6	17·9	5·3	4·1

All authorities provide the fixed traditional two-course meals and cafeteria style meals, with the latter accounting for 37 per cent. of all meals served.

The figures are as follows:

	1988				1987
	Paid	Free	Total	Per cent. of pupils present	Paid	Free	Total	Per cent. of pupils present

Scottish Citylink Coaches Ltd.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what specific measures he is taking to encourage and help management and staff to purchase Scottish Citylink Coaches Ltd. when it is privatised.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 28 June at column 178.

Birds of Prey

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, in respect of each region, the total number of reported deaths of golden eagles, white-tailed eagles and buzzards by unnatural causes in each year since the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 came into force.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of deaths of golden eagles, white-tailed eagles and buzzards from other than natural causes (excluding accidental deaths), as confirmed by the wildlife incident investigation service, in each of the years from 1981 to date in Scotland are given in the table.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what effect he has received advice from the Nature Conservancy Council arising from the recent deaths of birds of prey caused by poisoning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I deplore the disregard for the law shown by individuals who lay poisoned baits as a method of pest control. The line of action pursued by officials is in accordance with the longstanding views of the Nature Conservancy Council on the unlawful killing of birds of prey. Every case is investigated with a view to initiating prosecutions wherever possible, and continuing efforts are made to persuade landowners and occupiers to take steps to ensure that no person in their employ does anything which is illegal under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Nuvan

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research has been conducted into less toxic or non-toxic alternatives to the pesticide Nuvan.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Salmon Growers Association recently commissioned the institute of aquaculture at the University of Stirling to conduct research on alternative treatment methods to control sea lice infestation at salmon farms.

Public Expenditure Survey

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a detailed breakdown for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91, by nature of item and functional area of charge, of the receipts to his programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested is given in the table.

Seton Court, Tranent (Fatal Accident Inquiry)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate will order a fatal accident inquiry into the death of a family of four people in a fire at Seton court, Tranent, on 7 June.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The cause of the deaths is presently being investigated and a report will be submitted in due course by the procurator fiscal for the consideration of Crown counsel. At that time a decision will be reached as to whether or not a fatal accident inquiry will be held.

Housing Association Grant

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the amount of housing association grant given out (a) by district, (b) by regions, (c) for new build and (d) for rehabilitation for the period from 1979 to 1988.

Rating Reform

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures will be established to determine which individuals are severely mentally handicapped, as defined in part II, section 8(9) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates (Scotland) Act; and what procedures will be established to accommodate individuals who wish to appeal against the non-classification of relatives as severely mentally handicapped.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 June 1988]: Amendments have now been made to the Local Government Finance Bill in another place, for both Scotland and England and Wales, extending the definition of those covered by the exemption to include those suffering from an injury to the brain causing severe impairment of intelligence and social functioning which appears to be permanent. To assist in identifying those who will qualify for the exemption, qualifying criteria have been introduced in terms of entitlement to certain social security benefits, and a requirement of a certificate from a registered medical practitioner. My right hon. and learned Friend proposes to issue guidance on the detailed procedures involved as soon as possible after the passage of the Local Government Finance Bill. As with other registration matters, appeals may be made to the registration officer, and against his decision to the sheriff.

Rating Reform (Member's Question)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to reply to the priority written question tabled by the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan for answer on Thursday 23 June, concerning the community charge.

Mr. Lang: I have replied today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Latin America

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many United Kingdom trade missions visited Latin American countries in each of the last five years; what were their destinations; how many were assisted by funds from his Department or the British Overseas Trade Board; and what, in each case, were the principal United Kingdom private sector companies or organisations involved.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department provided financial support for trade missions to Latin America in each of the years 1983 to 1987 as follows:

Year	Number of missions	Markets visited
1983	5	Brazil, Colombia (2) and Venezuela (3).
1984	7	Brazil (2), Chile (3), Colombia (2), Mexico, Paraguay (3), Peru and Venezuela.
1985	5	Chile, Colombia (3), Ecuador, Mexico (2) and Venezuela (2).
1986	12	Belize, Brazil (4), Chile (4), Colombia (3), Ecuador (2), Paraguay, Uruguay and Venezuela (5).
1987	15	Brazil (6), Chile (5), Colombia (3), Costa Rica, Ecuador, Mexico (2), Panama, Paraguay, Uruguay (2) and Venezuela (3).

Some trade missions visited more than one market: the figures in brackets in the final column show the number of times the market was visited in the same year. These missions have attracted participation by many major British companies. No comparable information is available on missions not receiving DTI support.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of total European Community exports to Latin America was represented by exports from the United Kingdom, in 1973, 1978, 1983 and the latest year for which figures are available, counting exports from Spain, Portugal and Greece with the European Community total.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the table.

Proportion of EC(12) Community Exports to Latin America from United Kingdom

	Per cent.
1973	14
1978	14
1983	9
1987	12

Note:

Internal Trade

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent discussions has he had with the European Commission on internal trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Corporate Affairs and I attended the Internal Market Councils on 7 to 22 June at which a range of measures relevant to completion of the single market were agreed.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of British produced cars built in each of the past three years was capable, without adaptation, of using unleaded petrol.

Mr. Atkins: According to industry estimates the figures requested are as follows:

	Per cent.
1985	3·5
1986	5·5
1987	7·0

The percentage of British cars which are capable of using unleaded petrol without adaptation is expected to increase rapidly in 1988.

Inward Investment

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his plans for assistance by Her Majesty's Government to regional organisations established to encourage inward investment.

Mr. Atkins: I have already notified the hon. Member about the proposed funding for 1988-89 for the regional development organisations. The information is available in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) on 11 March 1988 at columns 369-71. For future years, I can give no firm commitment on funding but can assure him that I shall continue to consider sympathetically requests for support for worthwhile inward investment promotion activities. Such funding will continue to depend on continued local support from the region's local authorities and private sector. Moreover, it is my intention that this local support should assume a greater share of the total funding of the regional development organisations so that my Department's share should be only 50 per cent. by and for the financial year 1991-92.

Trade Deficit

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the trade deficit for the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the 12 months ended May, the current account of the balance of payments was in deficit by £7·1 billion.

Manufacturing Trade Balance

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the change in the manufacturing trade balance since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Trade in manufactures on a balance of payments basis was in surplus by £2·8 billion in 1979 and in deficit by £6·5 billion in 1987.

Productivity and Output Costs

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the latest trends in productivity and output costs.

Mr. Atkins: In the three months to April 1988 productivity in manufacturing as measured by output per head, was 5 per cent. higher than a year earlier. In the same period wages and salaries per unit of output were 3 per cent. higher than a year earlier.

Timber

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total value of imports and exports, respectively, of timber in 1987.

Mr. Atkins: United Kingdom imports and exports of timber, defined as standard international trade classification division 24, less sub-group 244·0, in 1987 were £1,197·0 million and £25·6 million respectively.

Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations he has received in respect of the proposals in the Copywright, Designs and Patents Bill [Lords], as they affect the aerospace industry.

Mr. Butcher: We have received around 45 representations from five aerospace companies and the Society of British Aerospace Companies. Around 30 hon. Members have written to us about representations they have received from the same sources. Ministers have also had three meetings with representatives of the aerospace industry.

High-definition Television.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of Britain's competitive position in the development of high-definition television.

Mr. Butcher: United Kingdom broadcasting and industrial interests are playing a significant role in a major Eureka collaborative project to develop a high definition television system compatible with the MAC (multiplexed analogue components) transmission standard for direct broadcasting by satellite. United Kingdom participation in this project will help ensure a competitive British position in the development of this important technology.

Whisky

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the Japanese Government on the taxation of Scotch whisky.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Japanese authorities have now announced their intention to introduce, from April 1989, a single rate of tax for all whiskies, at a level 45 per cent. below that currently applying to Scotch. This news is most welcome. Nevertheless, since some discrimination in the tax rates applying to other competing spirits will remain, the impact of the proposed changes would need to be kept closely under review, and the possibility of further recourse to the general agreement on tariffs and trade left open.

Elstree Studios

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning the effect of the proposed disposal by the Cannon Group of the Elstree studios in respect of the interests of the British film industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Representations have been received from organisations representing film producers and trades unions; from individual film producers; from another place; and, of course, from the hon. Member.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has sought concerning the intentions of the new owners of Elstree studios to maintain film making on the site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The future use of the studio property is a matter for the commercial judgment of the new owners, subject to any consents which may have to be obtained from the planning authorities.

Regional Policy

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Government's regional policy.

Mr. Atkins: Regional industrial policy operates within a general economic framework designed to encourage enterprise and growth in all parts of the country. Particular policy instruments are targeted on the assisted areas where additional measures are needed. The changes in regional industrial policy announced in the DTI White Paper, "DTI—the department for Enterprise", were designed to make that policy more effective in encouraging enterprise in the regions.

Post Office

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the future of Post Office counter services.

Mr. Butcher: The Post Office's proposals for the future of its counters subsidiary will be considered in the context of the revised counters business plan which will be submitted to me later this year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Court of Human Rights

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the judgments made against the United Kingdom in the European Court of Human Rights, giving the date, the relevant articles of the European convention, and a brief description of the subject matter.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

Nicaragua

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the last visit was made by a Government Minister from his Department to Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, visited Nicaragua in May 1980.

Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Governments of Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador concerning their failure to abide by the terms of the Esquipulas II agreement.

Mr. Eggar: We and our European partners have on a number of occasions called on all the signatories of the Esquipulas II peace accord to fulfil their outstanding obligations under the accord without delay.

United Nations (United Kingdom Vote)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide details of the explanation of vote made by Her Majesty's Government's representative at the United Nations on the occasion of United Nations General Assembly resolution 42/231; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The explanation of vote made by the United Kingdom representative on United Nations resolution 42/231 was as follows:

"In welcoming the adoption of this Resolution I should like to make the following points about my Government's position. The British Government has consistently made clear its support for the efforts of the Central American countries to achieve a comprehensive and lasting solution to the region's problems.

We welcomed the Guatemala Agreement, and have likewise welcomed subsequent steps to implement it. We also recognise that efforts towards economic and social development are an important element in the success of the peace process and the achievement of political stability in the region.

My Government fully endorses the statement by the Representative of the Federal Republic of Germany on behalf of the European Community and its member states. We would like to reiterate to the Secretary General and to his personal representative, Senor Ramirez Ocampo, our sincere appreciation for the leadership shown in elaborating the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America. We undertake to use our best efforts to ensure that our assistance to the Central American countries is co-ordinated with other donors, though specific suggestions and proposals contained in the Special Plan will require urgent study by all the competent organisations.

Mr. President, my Government shares the concerns expressed in this debate at the burden of foreign debt which is acting as a brake on the economic recovery of the region. For this reason we have welcomed recent developments in the so-called 'menu-approach', involving as they do market based solutions voluntarily agreed between debtors and commercial bank creditors, such as debt equity conversions and recent debt exchange schemes which reduce the existing stock of debt. My Government is not able to enter into any commitment on the new proposals concerning debt made in the relevant paragraphs and annexes of the Special Plan, but I can assure you that they will be studied carefully.

My Government has always considered that bilateral commercial debt is a matter between debtor governments and the creditor banks. We should therefore like to encourage the Central American governments to discuss the proposals in the plan with the creditor institutions concerned. We believe that such discussions are the best way of finding solutions to the debt problem suited to the individual requirements of debtor governments. It is in this spirit that we have supported the Resolution."

Central American Parliament

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on information available to him on the progress achieved in setting up the Central American Parliament following the San José IV meeting in Hamburg.

Mr. Eggar: We understand that the Central American Parliament treaty has yet to be ratified by the Parliaments of Costa Rica and El Salvador. In consequence, no date has yet been set for elections to the Central American Parliament.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any requests have been received from the United State authorities to co-operate in actions being taken against the Government of Panama; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have not been asked by the United States authorities to co-operate in actions being taken against the Government of Panama.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when discussions last took place between representatives of Her Majesty's Government and those of the United States Government in respect of the situation in Panama; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The situation in Panama has been discussed in the course of our normal contacts with the United States Government. Our interest is to see internal peace and democracy in Panama.

Public Expenditure Survey

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a detailed breakdown for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91, by nature of item and functional area of charge, of the receipts to his programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey.

Mr. Eggar: The breakdown for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is set out in the following table.

The figures given are consistent with those given by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury in his answer on 27 May 1988, at column 375, updated to take account of decisions subsequent to the 1987 public expenditure survey; figures relate to receipts in respect of programme expenditure only; receipts in respect of running costs expenditure are not included.

Mr. Jacques Delors (Speech)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the recent speech made to the European Parliament by the President of the European Commission, Mr. Delors, on the percentage of social, financial and economic decisions which would shortly be decided in such a way as to exclude consideration by national Parliaments; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Copies of the "Debates of the European Parliament" annex to the Official Journal of the European Communities, which includes the texts of speeches, are received in the House and made available to hon. Members.

WALES

Urban Programme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the urban programme allocation to each qualifying district in Wales, in cash and real terms, for each of the last five financial years; and what is the estimate for 1988-89.

Mr. Grist: The information requested in respect of the urban programme allocations to local authorities in Wales is as follows:

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department intends to change any aspects of its policy or guidelines on the integration of mentally handicapped people into the community as a result of the recent statements by the Health Service Commissioner on the need to consult neighbours prior to moving mentally handicapped people from institutional care into homes in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Our policy, as set out in the all-Wales strategy published in March 1983, is based on the principle that people with a mental handicap should have a right to normal patterns of life within the community and that they should not be devalued because of their intellectual impairment. We have no intention of altering that policy. It is for local bodies responsible for individual proposals to decide in each case how to ensure that the best interests of people with mental handicaps are served, in ways consistent with the all-Wales policy.

NHS

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to improve the quality of service to patients in the National Health Service in mid-Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Responsibility for the management of health services delivered to the people of mid-Wales rests with the relevant district health authorities and family practitioner committees in the first instance. Between 1978-79 and 1988-89 recurring revenue resources allocated to Gwynedd and Powys health authorities increased by 43 per cent. and 35 per cent. respectively in real terms. The increase in allocation to East Dyfed from its creation in 1982-83 was 19 per cent. Expenditure on family practitioner services in Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys increased by 40 per cent. in real terms between 1978-79 and 1987-88. The corporate management programme for the Health Service in Wales, published on 22 June, details the work which must be undertaken to enable the NHS throughout Wales to adapt to changing demands, improve productivity and ensure the highest standards of care.

Music Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, in view of Her Majesty's inspectorate report and survey of music in the primary schools in Flint and Colwyn Bay, he will release extra funds to the Clwyd local education authority to facilitate the increased in-service training of teachers of music; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The funding of in-service training for music teachers is entirely within the discretion of local education authorities. The Clwyd authority can draw upon the £1·14 million allocated to it in the current year for its locally determined training priorities. This expenditure attracts a 50 per cent. grant from the Department. The authority is free to spend more than this amount on in-service training for teachers, but expenditure above the £1·14 million would not attract grant.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates he has as to the relative costs per primary pupil in (a) rural and (b) urban schools in each Welsh county; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is not possible to differentiate between costs incurred in urban and rural schools because the relevant information is collected on a countrywide basis only.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide a detailed breakdown for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91 by nature of item and functional area of charge of the receipts to his programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Consistent with the figures published in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" Cm. 288, the information is as follows:

On account of roundings, the individual items may not always sum to the totals shown.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now respond to the report of the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs, "The Government's Public Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" (CM 288): first report Session 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government welcome the first report of the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs on the Government's public expenditure plan 1988-89 to 1990-91 (CM 288). The Committee's recommendations and the Government's responses are as follows:—

Recommendation 1

We therefore recommend that the Welsh Office issue a commentary designed to complement and expand upon the text and figures in Volume II of the Public Expenditure White Paper, similar to the commentaries produced by the Scottish and Northern Ireland Offices.

Response

The Government accepts this recommendation. A first Welsh Office commentary will be published in 1989. By this means additional information will be provided to give a more comprehensive picture of departmental objectives, performance and plans.

Recommendation 2

In its recent report on the White Paper, the Treasury and Civil Service Committee recommended that "individual Departments should publish their own forward-looking annual reports including the kind of financial information at present included in the departmental chapters of Volume II of PEWP, but considerably expanded". The Government agreed to consider the proposal sympathetically. We support this recommendation of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee and consider that a Welsh Office commentary of the type outlined in the previous paragraph could form the basis of a Welsh Office Annual Report, if and when departmental annual reports are introduced.

Response

As the Committee will be aware, the Government has published its proposals for financial reporting to Parliament (CM 375) following the report from the Committee of Public Accounts (Eighth Report of 1986-87—HC 98) and the report from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on the1988 Public Expenditure White Paper (Second Report of 1987-88 —HC 292). The views of the PAC and the TCSC are awaited.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current level of unemployment in (a) the Cynon Valley, (b) Mid Glamorgan and (c) Wales as a whole.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: On 12 May 1988, the numbers of unemployed claimants in the Cynon Valley, Mid Glamorgan and Wales were 4,018, 26,874 and 132,962 respectively.

Student Nurses

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the figure for the number of student nurses in Wales; how that figure is expected to change over the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 6 July 1988]: The number of student nurses in Wales studying for a first level registration as at May 1988 was 2,785.

Figures are not yet available to show how numbers are expected to change over the next five years. Nurse training in Wales is provided in a number of schools managed by individual health authorities, and future intakes are determined by the operational requirements and service proposals of the authorities concerned. The information requested is currently being collated at the all-Wales level through a manpower resource planning exercise involving all health authorities and will be available later in the year.

TRANSPORT

Freight Traffic

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated daily flow of freight traffic between the south-east of England and the north-east; and what was the comparable figure for 10 years ago.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table gives details of the freight flows between the south east and north-east regions of England. Information for road goods traffic is available for the period requested. For rail and coastal shipping the earliest comparable data are given.

[2] Coal makes up over 80 per cent. of the goods carried from the north-east to the south-east by coastal shipping.

British Rail (Funding)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on his policy towards funding of British Rail in the light of the proposals made in the report entitled "Reviving the Railways", published by the Centre for Policy Studies, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering the long-term options for British Rail including privatisation. Publications such as the Centre for Policy Studies report are a useful contribution to the public debate.

Municipal Airports (Privatisation)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress in the privatisation of municipally owned airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All the larger municipal airports are now owned by Companies Act companies. At present, shares in the companies are wholly owned by local authorities. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is keen to see the authorities sell shares or otherwise involve the private sector wherever it makes commercial sense to do so.

Road Signs

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research is being conducted by his Department into improving the visibility of traffic road signs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Research is being undertaken by or on behalf of the Department on the conspicuity of warning signs, the obscuring of traffic signs by large vehicles on heavily trafficked roads and the conspicuity and legibility of variable message signs.

Flags of Convenience

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in negotiations with flag of convenience states to help ensure the availability of flagged-out British-owned ships in the event of crisis or war.

Mr. Channon: On 28 June representatives of Her Majesty's Government and the Commonwealth of the Bahamas signed a memorandum of understanding under which the Government of the Bahamas agreed to allow British-controlled ships to be made readily available to Her Majesty's Government in the event of crisis and war. In doing so, the Bahamas have agreed to waive their sovereign authority over those vessels at such a time.

This is the first such agreement we have reached with an open registry state; We hope, however, that others will follow later this year.

British shipowners who agree to make their vessels available to Her Majesty's Government under this memorandum of understanding will be eligible for war risks insurance under arrangements that have recently been concluded with the British War Risks Associations.

Passenger Transport Authorities

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to take measures to restrain the expenditure of the passenger transport authorities in 1989-90.

Mr. Channon: In the circumstances I do not consider it appropriate to designate the passenger transport authorities for precept limitation in 1989-90. I expect the PTAs, however, to be able to maintain satisfactory public transport support in that year at close to their present levels of expenditure.

Smoke Hoods

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has discussed with the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority the specification for smoke hoods on civil aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for the regulation of air safety. The authority has published a final specification for smoke hoods. I understand that none has yet been shown to meet it and no manufacturer has applied for approval against the specification. The authority has told us that, when a suitable hood does exist, it will review the arguments for and against the provision of smoke hoods and decide if a mandatory requirement would be appropriate.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received seeking the mandatory installation of smoke hoods on passenger aircraft; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received no recent representations seeking the mandatory installation of smoke hoods on passenger aircraft. Any decision to make smoke hoods mandatory is wholly the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority.

Aircraft Accident (Manchester Airport)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has now received the report of the chief inspector of accidents arising from the inquiry by the air accidents investigation branch into the Boeing 737 accident at Manchester airport in August 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The report on the exhaustive investigation into the accident to Boeing 737 G-BGJL which took place at Manchester airport on 22 August 1985 was completed in draft form in April 1988. Following this, persons and organisations whose reputations might be affected had two months to make representations. These are being considered by the inspector who is expected to be able to finalise the report for submission to the Secretary of State for Transport in the autumn. Unless a request for a review board is requested the report will then be published.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority concerning air safety, in the light of the inquiry by the air accidents investigation branch into the Boeing 737 accident at Manchester airport in August 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has not recently discussed the Boeing 737 accident at Manchester airport with the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority. The air accidents investigation branch report on the accident is not yet finalised, though its findings have been made known to the authority informally as they have emerged and the authority has already implemented a number of safety improvements in consequence. It is entirely the authority's responsibility to decide what action to take on changes in air safety regulation recommended by the AAIB.

Driving Instructors (Examination)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the written qualifying examination for the register of approved driving instructors, due to take place in the conference room at the National Sports Centre of Wales, Sophia gardens, Cardiff, on 13 June at 9.30 am, did not proceed; why the candidates were not informed until approximately one hour after the examination should have commenced; and whether the candidates who attended on that day will be reimbursed their out-of-pocket expenses.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A mistake was made. I am sorry. I am writing to my hon. Friend about this unfortunate occurrence.

Barking Bypass

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley), will reply to the letter of mid-June from the hon. Member for Newham, North-East concerning the South Woodford to Barking bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I replied to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East on 6 July.

Charges

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a detailed breakdown for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91, by nature of item and functional area of charge, of the receipts to his programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table shows the information sought.

EMPLOYMENT

Agricultural Inspectors

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest number of agricultural inspectors.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 June 1988 there were 150 agricultural inspectors in post in the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate.

Community Programme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received regarding forthcoming changes to the remuneration of those engaged in community programme projects which promote greater energy efficiency.

Mr. Nicholls: We have received representations from a number of hon. Members about the arrangements for taking forward energy efficiency projects into employment training.

Adult Training

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received on adult training following the publication of the White Paper, "Training for Jobs"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: We have received over 250 representations from hon. Members and others about our important and ambitious training plans set out in the White Paper "Training for Employment". The new programme—employment training—referred to in the White Paper, will come into operation on 5 September and will aim to train some 600,000 people a year.

Hazards (Costs)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy towards the balance to be struck by the Health and Safety Commission between hazards to people and costs to industry.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission in its last published plan of work (for 1985-86 and onwards) stated that the protection of those at work and of the public is its indispensable aim, and that this must be achieved at realistic cost to industry, with technical understanding, and by the use of practical common sense.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has endorsed the Commission's policy, and in considering proposals put to him by the Commission for new legislation under the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 he uses the same criteria.

Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the enterprise allowance scheme

Mr. Cope: The enterprise allowance scheme has been a great success. Since the scheme began in 1982, over 350,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own businesses. These people have created viable small businesses that have secured a future for themselves and in many cases have created jobs for others. Recent surveys show that of those who complete a full year on the scheme, 65 per cent. are still trading three years after start-up. At this point 114 additional jobs have been created for every 100 businesses still trading.

Industrial Investment

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the British Venture Capital Association to discuss industrial investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I met Mr. Lionel Anthony, the then chairman of the British Venture Capital Association, on 18 January. We had a wide-ranging discussion on ways in which venture capital investment in smaller businesses might be further encouraged, particularly in areas outside the south-east.

We met again in May in connection with the European Venture Capital Association conference.

Labour Statistics (Slough)

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were registered as unemployed in the borough of Slough and the Slough travel-to-work area in June; and what were the comparable figures for June 1983.

Mr. Lee: Information for June 1988 is not yet available, The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in Slough local authority district and the Slough travel-to-work area in June 1983 and May 1988. The figures are affected by changes in coverage and seasonal influences.

Number of Unemployed Claimants

Area	June 1983	May 1988	Percent. change
Slough Local Authority District	4,850	2,813	−42
Slough Travel-to-work Area	10,996	6,491	−41

Bristol (Unfilled Vacancies)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much the total of unfilled vacancies in the Bristol travel-to-work area exceeds that of a year ago.

Mr. Lee: On 8 May 1988 there were 3,656 unfilled vacancies, excluding community programme vacancies, at jobcentres covering an area closely corresponding to the Bristol travel-to-work area, 37 less than in May 1987. Vacancies at jobcentres do not represent the total number of vacancies in the economy. Estimates suggest that nationally only about a third of all vacancies are notified to jobcentres, but equivalent local estimates are not available.

Insulation Projects

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss insulation projects co-ordinated by the Commission.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to do so at present.

Holidays

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many holidays were taken in the United Kingdom by residents of Great Britain in 1987.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated that residents of Great Britain took 73 million holidays of one or more nights in Britain in 1987. There is no equivalent estimate available for holidays taken in the United Kingdom.

Yorkshire

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of unemployment in Yorkshire.

Mr. Lee: In May 1988, the number of unemployed claimants in the counties of South Yorkshire, North Yorkshire and West Yorkshire was 197,847, a fall of 38,575 compared with a year ago.

Employment Training Programme

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of expenditure on the employment training programme will be financed from the European social fund.

Mr. Cope: The forecast expenditure for the employment training programme for the period 1 September 1988 to 31 December 1988 will be £425 million.

The European Commission's recent decision has allocated European social fund assistance towards the employment training programme totalling £24,217,418 for this period. This represents 6 per cent. of the forecast.

Textile Industry

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the number of workers employed in the British textile industry, both full-time and part-time, in 1970 and 1988.

Mr. Lee: The following table gives the available information on the textile industry in Great Britain on a consistent basis for June 1971 and June 1987 (the longest period for which comparable estimates are available). March 1988 estimates are also given, but these are not directly comparable with the estimates for June 1971 and June 1987 because of seasonal variation.

[1] The textile industry is defined as Class 43 of the 1980 standard industrial classification.

Public Expenditure Survey

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a detailed breakdown for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91, by nature of item and functional area of charge, of the receipts to his programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey.

Mr. Cope: The figures given, which are consistent with those given in the reply that the hon. Member received from my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 27 May 1988, at columns 375-76, relate to receipts in respect of programme expenditure: receipts in respect of running costs expenditure are not included. The following table for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91 give a breakdown of receipts received by the Department of Employment group.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 670, if he will now supply the same data for each quarter after December 1984 relating to number of persons in employment.

Mr. Lee: There was a printing omission in the reply given on 23 June, at column 670. The full text of the reply, containing information for all the years requested, is as follows:

Notes:

The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, and members of HM forces.

The working population is the sum of the employed labour force and unemployed claimants.

The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations, and the working population estimates also allow for changes in the coverage of the unemployment count as far as is possible.

DEFENCE

British and Soviet Personnel

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to encourage meetings between senior British and Soviet military personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We welcome the prospect of an improvement in East-West relations resulting from a Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan and will take this into account when considering contacts between the British and Soviet armed forces.

Special Constables

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of those persons who, at the coming into force of the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987, were special constables by virtue of appointment under section 3 of the Special Constables Act 1923 on the nomination of the Defence Council remain special constables now that the Ministry of Defence Police Act is in force.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. With the passage of the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987 all members of the force have the full powers and privileges of constables.

Firearms

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance Ministry of Defence police officers are given on the use of firearms.

Mr. Sainsbury: All Ministry of Defence police officers are fully trained both in the use of firearms and in firearms safety, and in their legal responsibilities when authorised to be armed on duty.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned schedule for the removal of cruise missiles from (a) RAF Greenham Common and (b) RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We expect that the missiles based at RAF Molesworth will be withdrawn in the autumn. Some of the missiles based at RAF Greenham Common are likely to be removed about halfway through the three-year elimination period specified under the terms of the INF treaty. The remainder will be withdrawn by the end of this period.

Shell Foundry (Entrance Gates)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made in his efforts to persuade Royal Ordnance plc to return the entrance gates of the Shell foundry at Woolwich Arsenal which were removed in 1967.

Mr. Freeman: Royal Ordnance plc has not so far been persuaded to return the entrance gates. A further approach is being made to the chief executive, and I intend to draw the matter to the attention of English Heritage.

RAF Personnel (Pensions)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the basis on which the pensions of retired Royal Air Force personnel with 22 years service or more are funded, together with any changes which may have been made in the funding of their pensions since 1964.

Mr. Freeman: Pensions paid to RAF personnel, in common with those paid to retired members of the armed forces generally, are met direct from Defence funds voted annually by Parliament. This has always been the case.

Belize

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of flights made by British fighter aircraft based in Belize outside the territorial area of that country in the past 12 months.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In the past 12 months, Harrier aircraft from Belize have been deployed outside that country only to practise arrangements for removing them from the danger area in the event of a hurricane.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contact has been made in the past 12 months between British military personnel in Belize and United States military personnel from southern command in Panama; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Visits were paid to Belize in February this year by Major General Loeffke, commanding general US Army, South; and in June by General Woerner, commander-in-chief, US Southern Command. Both visitors were briefed by British forces Belize as well as making calls elsewhere. These were courtesy visits of a routine nature. Observers from US Southern Command also regularly attend joint exercises between British forces and the Belize defence force.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the different categories of military personnel and equipment currently based in Belize.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The following units are currently based in Belize: an infantry battalion; an armoured reconnaissance troop equipped with Scorpion reconnaissance vehicles; an engineer squadron; a field artillery battery equipped with the 105 mm light gun; an Army Air Corps flight with Gazelle helicopters; RAF Belize equipped with Puma helicopters and Harriers; and half a RAF Regiment squadron with Rapier fire-units.

Public Expenditure Survey

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a detailed breakdown for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91, by nature of item and functional area of charge, of the receipts to his programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The following table shows for the years 1985-86 to 1990-91 a detailed breakdown of the income to the defence programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey. Figures on the same basis for 1982-83 to 1984-85 are not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate effort.

The figures given are consistent with those provided by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury in answer to the hon. Member on 27 May 1988 at columns 375-76.

Petty Officer John Black

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date he asked the Metropolitan police, following a request from the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton, for their agreement that the solicitors for Mr. and Mrs. K. Crane should be allowed to see the police report on the death in Spain of Petty Officer John Black, Royal Navy; what response has been received; and whether he will insist upon an immediate substantive reply from the police.

Mr. Freeman: Ministry of Defence officials wrote to the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on 26 May 1988 seeking his agreement to a limited release of the police report on the death of Petty Officer J. Black to the solicitors for Mr. and Mrs. Crane. A reply was received on 4 July 1988. In it, the police state that, in view of the knowledge of the outcome of the police inquiries already available to Mr. and Mrs. Crane, the Commissioner sees no reason to make an exception to the general rule that police reports following inquiries remain confidential and declines to release the report. The matter is now outside my responsibilities.

Royal Ordnance plc (Agreement)

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 232, he expects to announce his decision regarding the agreement between his Department and British Aerospace for the supply by Royal Ordnance of explosives and propellants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The timing of any announcement will depend upon the result of the discussions referred to in the reply to which my hon. Friend refers and I cannot at present add to the reply I gave then.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what limits are imposed by the West German authorities on the number of low-flying sorties conducted by British military aircraft over the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 May 1988]: Within the seven areas in the Federal Republic of Germany, where low-flying aircraft are permitted to operate down to 250 ft, weekly allocations are notified to British users. Otherwise no specific limits on sortie numbers are imposed.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the Federal Republic of Germany about flying accidents and low-flying by United Kingdom and other NATO airplanes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the West German Government in regard to Royal Air Force low-level flying over the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Freeman [holding answers 26 May 1988 and 7 June 1988]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces have each received representations from their Federal German counterparts recently about different aspects of military low flying. We will continue to do our best to ensure that any disturbance caused by this essential activity in the United Kingdom, the Federal Repulbic of Germany, or elsewhere, is reduced to an absolute minimum.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Maternity Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will state, by regional health authority and area health authority, for the years since 1980, the number of hospital maternity beds available, by year; and what the birth rates were by year in these two respective areas;

(2) why the number of hospital maternity beds available has been falling since 1980; and what has been the trend in the birth rate during the same period;

(3) if he will state, by year and for each regional health authority and district area health authority, since 1980, the number of special care baby unit cots available.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the tables; 1980 birth rates are given by RHA only, since birth rates were not published by DHA in that year.

With women returning home earlier following birth the number of maternity beds required has been reduced. There is now a more efficient use of the available beds. The turnover interval, that is the interval of time the beds are vacant between cases, has fallen from 2·6 days in 1980 to 2·4 in 1986; the average length of stay has fallen from 5·7 days in 1980 to 4·4 in 1986; and in the same period the death rate for babies under one week including stillbirths fell from 13·4 to 9·5; and the death rate for mothers in childbirth fell from 11 per 100,000 births to six.

"Home Life"

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 23 June to the hon. Member for Wakefield, how he proposes to monitor the implementation of his Department's guidelines as set out in the publication entitled "Home Life".

Mrs. Currie: Registration authorities are responsible for determining their policy on standards in residential care homes having regard to official guidance and to the code of practice "Home Life" and for monitoring compliance with that policy. The Department's Social Services Inspectorate has conducted a national survey of the way registration authorities were discharging their functions. We are currently considering the recommendations [illegible] its report "Certain Standards" together with Sir Roy Griffiths' report "Community Care: Agenda for Action" and Lady Wagner's report "Residential Care—A Positive Choice". Copies of all three reports are in the Library.

NHS Review

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations about his review of the National Health Service he has received from trade unions and other bodies representing health service staffs; and what has been the nature of their representations.

Mr. Moore: We have received a number of representations from such bodies, covering a wide range of issues.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his Department's policy regarding community hospitals in rural areas in the light of the report from the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly local medical committee entitled "The Community Hospital Review for the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Health Authority".

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the review of community hospitals, produced by the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority, is to be considered by South Western RHA through its own working party on the role and future use of community hospitals. It would be inappropriate to comment on a locally prepared report before the RHA has been able to examine it in detail.

Hospital and Clinical Waste

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to improve the methods employed to dispose of hospital and clinical waste.

Mrs. Currie: Guidance on good practice for the safe disposal of all waste was issued to the Health Service under Health Notice (82)22. The Department is currently discussing with the Department of the Environment the implementation of new statutory BPM (best practical means) controls on incinerator operation and emission proposed in the consultation paper "Air Pollution Control in Great Britain", published in December 1986. Copies are available in the Library.

Health Market

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which commodities and services his Department has identified as viable for health authorities to buy and sell in a health market.

Mrs. Currie: We are keen to encourage better use of all health care capacity and to build on the growing cost-awareness of Health Service managers. We are considering how this might best be achieved.

Pathology

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the [illegible]t on pathology staffing will be published in full; when the National Health Service Management Board is due to discuss this report; and when he expects to be able to make a statement on the future staffing of National Health Service pathology services.

Mr. Newton: The report has been considered by the NHS Management Board and will be published shortly together with a consultative document.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the total numbers of disallowances of unemployment benefit in 1983 and 1987 made by adjudication officers, broken down by reasons for disallowance, that permit reconciliation with the summaries in the annual analysis of decisions of adjudication officers (a) in Britain, (b) in each standard region and (c) by the smallest areas used for adjudication analysis.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested for Great Britain and each standard region is in the table. The information for the smallest areas used for adjudication analysis could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Children (Illegal Employment)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many convictions were secured in each of the last five years for illegal employment of children.

Mrs. Currie: The available figures are as follows:

Industrial Undertakings

Prosecutions taken by the Health and Safety Executive under section 1 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920 resulting in convictions

	Number
1983	3
1984	6
1985	6
1986 (January—March)	4
1986-87 (April—March)	[1]9

[1] Provisional.

Agriculture

Information is not available in the form requested. Between 1977 and 1986 there were 241 convictions for offences against legislation which prohibits the involvement or employment of children in certain agricultural operations (the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 and regulations under the Act).

Non-Industrial Undertakings

Figures notified to the Home Office for convictions under Sections 18, 19 and 20 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933

	Number
1983	12
1984	9
1985	9
1986	2

Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Information is not available centrally on convictions following proceedings brought by local authorities for breaches of byelaws under the Act.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff are employed by his Department to check for illegal employment practices in relation to children; and how these staff are organised.

Mrs. Currie: Responsibility for the enforcement of legislation prohibiting and regulating the employment of children lies with the Health and Safety Executive and with local authorities.

The Health and Safety Executive has powers under section 1 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920 to take immediate action if a child is found to be working illegally in any industrial undertaking; and through its Agricultural Inspectorate to enforce legislation which prohibits the employment or involvement of children in certain agricultural operations.

The staffing of Her Majesty's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates is a matter for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. There are 542 inspectors in the Factory Inspectorate and 150 in the Agricultural Inspectorate: no inspectors deal exclusively with the illegal employment of children.

The Children and Young Persons Act 1933 prohibits the employment of children aged under 13 and restricts the part-time employment of children between 13 and 16. Local authority byelaws made under the Act place further restrictions on the hours and occupations of schoolchildren's employment. Local authorities have powers which may be exercised through the education welfare service to enforce the byelaws. Some 3,000 education welfare officers are employed nationally. Their terms of employment are for agreement with individual local education authorities.

Grandchildren

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many grandparents are awaiting the court's decision on their application to adopt their grandchildren who have been taken into care;

(2) how many children are in care, whose grandparents had offered to be guardians, and had their offers turned down by the social services.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Leukaemia and Lymphoma

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of recorded and reported leukaemia and lymphoma cases in children under 18 years of age, for each year from 1958 to 1987.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the exact information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The readily available information is shown in the table, which covers the years 1962-84: 1984 is the latest year for which data are available, whilst prior to 1962 no complete national data are available.

AIDS

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what are the individual percentages in the high-risk groups, intravenous drug abusers, promiscuous male homosexuals and haemophiliacs, who have been identified as having antibodies to HIV but who have not developed AIDS or ARC;

(2) to what factors his Department and its medical advisers attribute differences in the percentages of people in the high risk AIDS groups, intravenous drug abusers, promiscuous male homosexuals and haemophiliacs, who are HIV positive and who then fail to become actively ill.

Mr. Newton: Available evidence suggests that the most important factor determining the percentage of HIV positive people who become actively ill is the passage of time. The earlier infections are likely to have been principally among homosexual men, and a higher percentage of infected men in this group have become ill than is the case for haemophiliacs or for intravenous drug abusers.

Research into the possible effect of other factors is in progress, but results are not yet available.

The names of those tested for HIV are not routinely submitted to the surveillance centres. It is not therefore possible to determine, in the data submitted to the national surveillance centres, which people known to be HIV positive developed AIDS.

Family Credit

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many family credit applications were outstanding at 30 June.

Mr. Portillo: A total of 73,383, which included 29,000 claims where initial action had commenced but replies to inquiries were awaited.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time being taken to process and complete family credit assessments (a) nationally and (b) by Department of Health and Social Security region.

Mr. Portillo: The most recent information is derived from a small-scale sample of cases cleared in week commencing 20 June and indicated an average clearance

Single Payments

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payment applications were made to each local office of his Department in Coventry between 1 January and the date when the scheme ended; how much money was paid out between those dates; how many applications are still pending; how much money has been paid since the closing date for receipt of single payment applications, to date; when he expects all outstanding applications to be determined; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has two local offices in Coventry—Coventry, East and West. The latest available information is given in the table. The figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

	Coventry, East	Coventry, West
Number of decisions on single payment claims 13 January 1988 to 8 April 1988	3,605	2,203
Amount paid 13 January 1988 to 8 April 1988	£328,218	£175,915
Claims awaiting action on 30 June 1988	4,440	382
Amount paid 9 April 1988 to 31 May 1988	£121,428	£389,184

Local offices do not count claims received; instead the number of decisions made is recorded. One application may produce a number of different decisions.

Coventry, East anticipates clearing all cases awaiting action within the next four weeks, and Coventry, West by early autumn.

Bioplan Holdings plc and Kingston Hospital

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the joint venture between Bioplan Holdings plc and Kingston hospital.

Mrs. Currie: I understand Kingston and Esher health authority is considering a joint venture with Bioplan Holdings plc. We welcome collaboration between the NHS and the private sector where this is a cost-effective means of providing services. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Kingston and Esher health authority for further information.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Farm Support Policies)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he has made to the representations made to him at the conference organised by the Trade Policy Research Centre and the Centre for International Economics in Canberra, Australia, relating to the alleged loss of 1 million jobs in Britain as a consequence of the EEC farm support policies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I was privileged to address the Trade Policy Research Centre conference on 4 May 1988 which considered a multinational study of the burden to consumers, taxpayers and employment of agricultural protection policies in many different countries. I am placing in the House of Commons Library a copy of my speech to that conference.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the percentage of value added by the farming industry which is accounted for by public money;

(2) what is the percentage of value added by the manufacturing industry which is accounted for by public money;

(3) what is the percentage of value added by the service industry which is accounted for by public money;

(4) what is the percentage of value added by the coal industry which is accounted for by public money.

Mr. John Major: The table shows general Government expenditure in each sector as a percentage of each sector's contribution to gross domestic product. The information is drawn from the United Kingdom national accounts 1987 (CSO) except for the coal industry figures, which are based on Treasury estimates. I regret that more recent compatible data are not yet available. The information is subject to revision.

The figures for agriculture underestimate the true level of support, as they relate solely to expenditure by the Government and by the European Community and do not include costs borne by the consumer of holding CAP support prices above the levels obtainable on world markets. These agricultural estimates, together with those for the coal industry, are further understated because they are calculated using gross domestic product based on United Kingdom supported prices rather than value added at world market prices.

The figure for the c[illegible] industry in 1984 is heavily distorted by the loss in output resulting from the miners' strike.

General Government expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product by industry grouping

	1983	1984	1985	1986
Agriculture, forestry and fishing	46	35	48	41
Mining and mineral resources (excluding fuels), manufacturing and construction	4	3	3	2

Balance of Payments

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give, for each year since 1983, the annual balance of payments figure; and if he will indicate what his estimate is now for the current year.

Mr. Major: I give the historical figures as follows:

	Current account balances £ billion
1983	3·7
1984	2·0
1985	3·3
1986	0·1
1987	−1·6

Source: DTI Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics.

As my right hon. Friend has already said, recent figures suggest that the current account deficit in 1988 will be larger than the £4 billion forecast at the time of the Budget.

Unit Labour Costs

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of increase in unit labour costs.

Mr. Major: The latest figures show that in the fourth quarter of 1987 unit labour costs for the whole economy rose by 3·9 per cent. over the previous year. In the three months ending April 1988, manufacturing unit wage and salary costs rose by 3·2 per cent. over the previous year.

Departmental Budgeting

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations of the multi-department review of budgeting following the then Chief Secretary's announcement of 29 April 1986, Official Report, column 371.

Mr. Major: Departments were asked to draw up action plans for achieving the four principles highlighted by my predecessor and by the Prime Minister in her foreword to the 1986 report. A report has been prepared which shows that, overall, Departments have made good progress in implementing its recommendations. Thirteen Departments have arrangements in place which meet all four of the principles in respect of all or nearly all of their running costs and programme expenditure. Another 16 have satisfactory arrangements for at least two of the four principles. In a number of Departments further work needs to be done, particularly in the field of output and performance measures, as a contribution to the continuing drive to improve financial management. This work will provide an important contribution to the development of policy and resource frameworks for executive agencies under the arrangements announced by the Prime Minister on 18 February 1988 at column 1149.

I am today arranging for copies of the second report on the implementation of the recommendations of the multi-department review of budgeting to be placed in the Library of the House.

EC Budget

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the E[illegible]hequer if he will publish a revised table of the estimated o[illegible]rn of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Economic Community in 1987-88, in the light of the decisions of the February European Council; and if he will identify the changes of policy which relate to the change in this estimate by comparison with the £1,400 million referred to on page 33 of the public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Brooke: The revised table is set out. It shows that the provisional outturn for our net payments to Community institutions in 1987-88 is £1,649 million. The increase compared with the White Paper estimate arose because the White Paper assumed the 1988 budget would be adopted before the end of the 1987-88 financial year, whereas in the event the Community had to operate on provisional twelfths until the budget's adoption on 1 June. This meant higher VAT contributions and a smaller abatement (that is abatement at the rate in the 1987 budget and not at the much higher rate in the 1988 one) during the last quarter of 1987-88.

	million £[1]
Gross payments	4,906
Public sector receipts	−1,958
VAT abatements	−1,137
Net contribution to EC budget	1,811
Contributions to EIB	10
ECSC grants	−58
Payments to EC budget attributed to the aid programme	−114
Net payments to EC institutions	1,649

[1] Provisional outturn.

EC (Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the cash spent by the European Economic Community in 1987; and what was the budget estimate for that year.

Mr. Brooke: Provision for payment appropriations in the 1987 amending and supplementary budget number 1 is 36,168 mecu, about £24,325 million at current rates of exchange. According to the Commission's revenue and expenditure account and balance sheet (Com(88)212) outturn expenditure in 1987 was 35,469 mecu (£23,855 million).

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated expenditure of the European Economic Community in 1988 and 1989, respectively.

Mr. Brooke: Provision for payment appropriations in the preliminary draft supplementary and amending budget number 1 for 1988 is 43,820 mecu, about £29,500 million at current rates of exchange. The provisional figure likely to be included in the 1989 preliminary draft budget is 46,462 mecu (£31,250 million).

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the 25 per cent. increase in European Economic Community resources following the recent decisions of the European Council include the extra resources provided in the interim by the intergovernmental agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Yes. I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to him today.

Public Expenditure (Cash Limits)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table, showing for the years 1975-76 to 1990-91, the proportion of each public expenditure programme which is cash-limited.

Mr. Major [holding answer 27 June 1988]: The proportion of expenditure in each public expenditure programme subject to cash limit control is shown in the table for the years 1982-83 to 1988-89.

The data in this table are consistent with outturns and plans published in the 1988 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288) apart from a number of minor reallocations made subsequent to the publication of Cm. 288. The outturn figures in the table for years prior to 1988-89 have been reclassified where necessary to align with the application of cash limit controls planned for 1988-89, in order to present a comparable sequence of data.

Payments of rate support grant made to local authorities in England, Scotland and Wales are also subject to cash limits although they do not directly score in the planning total.

Due to changes in the application of cash limit control from year to year, it is not practical to present a consistent series going back to 1975-76. Cash limits have not yet been set for years after 1988-89.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Transfers

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are listed by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive as seeking transfer or exchange from their present accommodation in Rathcoole, Carrickfergus and Larne offices of the Housing Executive; and how many transfers requests have been satisfied in each of the last three years at each of the above offices.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chief executive that the information is as follows:

District Area	Tenants[1]	Allocations made from transfer list (including exchanges) 1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Newtownabbey 1 (Rathcoole)	637	218	213	195
Carrickfergus	551	155	192	146
Larne	390	104	105	104

Car Thefts

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cars have been stolen from DOE Northern Ireland car parks in Belfast since 1 January.

Mr. Needham: Sixty-eight cars have been reported stolen from the Department's attended car parks in Belfast since 1 January 1988.

Mr. Roy Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if he will provide control barriers at entrances and exists to those DOE(NI) car parks to prevent unauthorised removal of cars.

Mr. Needham: Department of the Environment charged car parks in Belfast are barrier-operated. Outside Belfast most of the Department's charged car parks are operated by the pay and display system. There are no plans at present to convert these to barrier operation.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the duties of attendants at DOE (NI) car parks with particular reference to monitoring care of vehicles and follow-up action by DOE (NI) in respect of a car theft from any of its car parks.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment does not have responsibility for the safeguarding from theft of vehicles using its car parks. The Department nevertheless expects its attendants and those employed by its agents to notify the police in the event of a theft and to inform the Department of such incidents.

Car Parks

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many car parks DOE (NI) controls within Belfast's city limits; and how many parking places are provided at these car parks.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is responsible for 38 car parks containing a total of 3,770 parking places within Belfast city limits.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will instal telephones in the office at each attended car park to ensure that attendants can quickly obtain assistance when cars are being interfered with.

Mr. Needham: Telephones are installed selectively at car parks where the greatest incidence of thefts of vehicles has occurred. There are no plans to instal telephones at all car parks.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what relative priority is given by his Department to (a) raising additional revenue from car parks and (b) providing safe controlled parking.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment's main priority is to contribute to traffic management through the provision of orderly and controlled car parking facilities rather than raising additional revenue. The Department does not accept responsibility for the problem of parked vehicles.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to protect the interests of those who require all-day parking in Belfast arising from business operations in the city.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment does not accept responsibility for the protection of parked vehicles. The Department nevertheless takes selective measures to safeguard car parks under its control.

Navan Fort

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans currently exist to enhance Navan fort as a tourist attraction.

Mr. Needham: In 1986 various interests including DOE (Northern Ireland) came together to form the Navan fort initiative group, under the chairmanship of the vice-chancellor of Queen's University, to consider the best future for Navan and its area. With help from the International Fund and Northern Ireland Tourist Board the group has commissioned a feasibility study, to be completed shortly. This will consider all aspects—economic, social, tourism, academic, physical, financial—and suggest ways of developing and managing the monument and area.

Betting and Gaming

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the definition of "society" in the Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 includes political parties in this classification.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for determination by the courts on the facts and circumstances of particular cases.

Irish Language

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a list of all Northern Ireland schools and colleges in which the Irish/Gaelic language is taught.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Education does not hold a definitive list of Northern Ireland schools and colleges in which Irish/Gaelic language is taught. Accurate information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Voluntary Maintained Schools (Trustees)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he proposes to take regarding the position of trustees of voluntary maintained schools who under paragraphs 57 to 67 of the White Paper on education will have their school properties confiscated without compensation or consultation, if governors and parents elect to apply for grant maintained status.

Dr. Mawhinney: No decisions will be reached on matters raised in the consultative document on education reform until all representations have been fully considered. The consultative document does, however, indicate that trustee appointees would comprise at least half of the membership of the board of governors of a grant-maintained school and that any legislation would ensure that the religious ethos of a school would not be changed at the time when it became grant-maintained.

Public Expenditure Survey

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a detailed breakdown for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91, by nature of item and functional area of charge, of the receipts to his programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey.

Mr. Stanley: The table shows for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91 the income from charges to the Northern Ireland programme. The figures are consistent with those given in the answer the hon. Member received from my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 27 May 1988, at columns 375-76, and relate to receipts in respect of programme expenditure; receipts in respect of running costs expenditure are not included.

Housing Executive

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answers to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East regarding Housing Executive contracts on 23 March, Official Report, column 169, and 29 April, Official Report, columns 304-6, he will indicate the reasons why the sums due to the contractors for contract A were not paid on a monthly basis as per normal contract conditions and why payment of £72,886 was not paid for 17 months after the end of the contract period; if he will show for that contract how much of the sums due at the end of each month were paid, and how much not paid or as much of such information as is available to him; and if he will show for that contract the contract price, the total sums actually paid to complete the contract, including sums awarded at arbitration, the date of final payment and the date of practical completion.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I have been advised by the chief executive that payments were generally made in accordance with the tems of contract. In most cases payments were made monthly and in all but two cases payments were made within 14 days of amounts due being agreed with the contractor. No sums due were deliberately withheld and no amount of £72,886 was withheld for 17 months after the end of the contract period. Payments were made to the contractor during this period as the final account was progressively agreed. The other details requested are:

1. Contract price: £147,636·96.
2. Total sums paid to complete the contract, including sums awarded at arbitration: £261,359·00.
3. Date of final payment: 30 May 1986.
4. Date of practical completion: 22 January 1982.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answers to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East of 29 April, Official Report, columns 305-6, if he will indicate the costs to the Housing Executive for in-house work and for work carried out externally, in respect of the four arbitrations referred to, and in respect of (a) clerks of works, (b) legal fees, (c) technical costs and (d) staff costs.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the cost of work carried out by in-house staff in respect of the four arbitrations cannot be identified.

The following external costs were incurred:

Contract	(a) £	(b) £	(c) £	(d) £
Legal Fees	6,835·60	4,611·03	3,189·50	5,546·12
Technical Costs	4,856·40	Nil	2,018·49	3,449·93

Michael Tighe

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he intends to take to ensure that the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary makes available immediately to the coroner for Armagh all the evidence necessary for the inquest into the death of Michael Tighe at Ballyneery, County Armagh in 1982.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 4 July 1988]: It is the responsibility of the Chief Constable to provide the necessary evidence to the coroner, and the responsibility of the coroner to satisfy himself as to its sufficiency and availability.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as to the reasons why all the evidence necessary for the inquest into the death of Michael Tighe, killed at Ballyneery in 1982, has not yet been made available to the coroner for Armagh and as to how many requests for this information have been received by the Chief Constable from the coroner and on what dates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 4 July 1988]: The queston of the provision of evidence for inquests is a matter between the coroner and the Chief Constable. I am advised that some material has already been provided and that more will follow as soon as possible.

Housing Order (Code of Guidance)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provisions are being made for a publicly accessible code of guidance in relation to the Housing (NI) Order; and if there will be full consultation with interested agencies before such a code is published.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 6 July 1988]: It is intended that a code of practice and guidance on the operation of the homelessness provisions in the Draft Housing (Northern Ireland) Order should be drawn up by the Housing Executive in conjunction with other statutory bodies and made widely available. Interested agencies will be consulted on the proposed content of the code of practice and guidance and a seminar will be arranged later this year to give interested groups an opportunity to express their views on the operation of the homelessness legislation.

Homelessness

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the number of households which will present themselves as homeless to the Housing Executive in 1989-90 and 1993-94, and of the proportion of such households for whom the Housing Executive will have a statutory obligation to provide accommodation.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 6 July 1988]: The best estimate of the number of households who currently present themselves as homeless is the total number of applicants who qualify for the award of A1 status (ie in emergency need of accommodation) under the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's housing selection scheme. In 1987 this number was 2,200. The number who had temporary accommodation arranged or provided by the area health and social services boards was 587 in 1986 (the latest year for which statistics are available). I have no reason to believe that the number of persons presenting themselves as homeless will, after an initial period following the introduction of the proposed new legislation, increase significantly.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding proposals for a housing (NI) order outlining under what circumstances a single person who as a result of sectarian intimidation has no accommodation in which they can reasonably be expected to reside will be regarded as (a) homeless and (b) in priority need of accommodation.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 6 June 1988]: Housing problems arising from sectarian intimidation are already dealt with satisfactorily by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive under its housing selection scheme, and in the case of owner occupiers under the scheme for the purchase of evacuated dwellings (SPED). These arrangements apply to all householders including single people. Apart from providing a statutory framework for SPED, the Draft Housing (Northern Ireland) Order will not affect these arrangements.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

European Council

17. Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what he expects to be the key agricultural decisions reached during the Greek presidency of the European Council.

Mr. MacGregor: I expect the Greek presidency to be concerned with the continuing implementation of the decisions on agriculture of the European Council in Brussels in February. I understand that it would wish to make progress in a number of specific areas, including direct income aids and Community structural measures.

Whaling

18. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what part the United Kingdom delegation played in the recent discussions at the International Whaling Commission.

Mr. Gummer: The United Kingdom continued to play a leading role within the International Whaling Commission and decisions were taken to strengthen and improve the conservation of the world's whale stocks. In particular, we sponsored a resolution which improves the procedure for the review of scientific research whaling programmes and co-sponsored resolutions recommending Norway and Iceland to reconsider their proposed programme.

25. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what he expects to be the effect of the recent agreement by the International Whaling Commission.

Mr. Gummer: At the recent annual meeting the International Whaling Commission took decisions which will further strengthen the conservation of whale stocks. The three resolutions, sponsored or co-sponsored by the United Kingdom, on whaling for scientific research, together with the rejection of Japan's request to continue her coastal whaling operations in 1988, enforce the Commission's important moratorium decision.

73. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what pressure the United Kingdom delegation was able to bring on the positions of other delegations at the International Whaling Commission, particularly the Japanese, Icelandic and Norwegian delegations.

Mr. Gummer: The United Kingdom delegation to the 40th annual meeting of the International Whaling Commission played a full and leading role on all issues. In particular, we sponsored a successful resolution to improve procedures for the consideration of any mid-year proposals for research whaling programmes, and we co-sponsored resolutions asking Norway and Iceland to reconsider their proposed programmes. The United Kingdom also highlighted the commercial aspects of Japanese coastal whaling and was among the majority rejecting Japan's request for these operations to take 210 minke whales in 1988.

75. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the policy adopted by the Faroese delegation at the International Whaling Commission talks.

Mr. Gummer: At the recent International Whaling Commission (IWC) annual meeting, Denmark, which acts on behalf of the Faroe Islands in the IWC, provided a report, as requested, on measures taken to make the killing methods in the Faroese pilot whale hunts more humane. Denmark then reserved her position on any future discussion of this topic given her view that the IWC does not have any competence in respect of small cetaceans like the pilot whale. The United Kingdom is clear that pilot whales are covered by the convention and we recommend to press for more humane methods of killing to be used in the Faroes.

Meat and Livestock Commission

19. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Meat and Livestock Commission; and what was discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend and I maintain regular contacts with the chairman of the Meat and Livestock Commission to discuss matters of mutual interest.

EEC Surpluses

20. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest figures for storage, by type and value, of EEC surpluses in Coventry, Nuneaton and Warwick warehouses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As at 31 May 1988, stocks and values were as follows:

	Coventry	Nuneaton	Warwick
Cereals

Chernobyl

21. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has to show that the food chain was fully protected in the period immediately after the Chernobyl incident.

Mr. Gummer: Full compendia of the results of the Department's extensive monitoring programme have been published and copies are in the Library of the House. This work has been backed up by dietary surveys and independent whole-body monitoring programmes in various parts of the country. Considered alongside the controls introduced on the movement and slaughter of sheep in certain areas, these fully demonstrate the excellent protection afforded to consumers both at home and abroad in relation to United Kingdom food protection.

45. Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated number of animals still affected by radioactivity in the United Kingdom following the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The restrictions imposed following the Chernobyl accident now apply to some 650,000 sheep in the United Kingdom.

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

22. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress in eliminating monetary compensatory amounts affecting United Kingdom farms.

71. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the negotiations for changes in the value of monetary compensatory amounts.

92. Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps he envisages being taken on the green pound between the present time and 1992.

96. Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent steps he has taken to bring about the full devaluation of the green pound.

Mr. MacGregor: As the next stage in dismantling MCAs by 1992, the recent Council of Ministers meeting agreed, as part of the price fixing and following United Kingdom pressure, that the green pound will be devalued on 1 January 1989 so as to reduce United Kingdom MCAs by 3·2 points. It was also agreed that the Commission should now examine the measures to adopt for future stages.

Countryside Commission

23. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Countryside Commission; and what was discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: My last formal meeting with Sir Derek Barber was on 11 February, but my right hon. Friend and I have many informal contacts with him.

White Fish (Quotas)

24. Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement with regard to the white fish quotas off the west coast for the rest of the current year.

Mr. Gummer: White fish quotas off the west coast will continue to be managed under the existing arrangements and in full consultation with the industry.

Farm Inspectors

26. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farm inspectors were employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in 1987; and what is the figure for the current year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Officers of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service visit farms for a variety of purposes, including the provision of technical advice to farmers at their request as well as for certain statutory purposes. There is no distinct category of ADAS farm inspectors as such.

Cereals

27. Miss Lestor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the expected size of cereal surpluses in (a) the United States of America and (b) the EEC in 1988; and what is the expected effect on the world price of cereals.

Mr. MacGregor: It is too early to make a realistic assessment of the size of United States and EEC cereals harvests and the implications for cereals prices.

72. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the proposals agreed by 11 member states at the recent Council meeting on the 1988-89 price review were designed to curb cereal production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The agreement reached by 11 member states on the 1988-89 price-fixing proposals contains some further steps to restrain cereal production. However, it has to be seen in the light of the European Council agreement in February which provides for cumulative price cuts of up to 12 per cent. over the next four years, as well as an additional 3 per cent. co-responsibility levy. These measures are clearly designed to curb cereals production.

57. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether, in the light of the drought in the United States of America, he will be seeking the lifting by the EEC Commission of the 160 million tonne ceiling placed on cereal producers.

Mr. MacGregor: No. It is too early to make any realistic assessment either of the impact of the current drought in north america or of the likely level of the Community cereals harvest. However, even if reduced cereal supplies in north America lead to increased export opportunities for Community cereals, it remains probable that the supply of cereals in the Community will considerably exceed demand for Community cereals, particularly if intervention stocks are taken into account.

58. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding his proposals for the cereals set-aside scheme.

68. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from environmental bodies to his recent set-aside proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received comments from many quarters and welcome the widespread interest which has been shown in this new scheme.

Horses

28. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what circumstances he treats a horse as an agricultural animal.

Mr. Gummer: A horse is treated as an agricultural animal when it is kept for agricultural work.

Pollution

29. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next hopes to meet representatives of the farming unions to discuss pollution issues; and if he will make a statement.

70. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next plans to meet representatives of the farming unions to discuss pollution issues; and if he will make a statement.

83. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he is having with the National Farmers Union about reducing pollution in fresh water arising from agricultural activities.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Duffy).

74. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about farm pollution incidents in the Yorkshire water authority region in 1987.

Mr. Gummer: The numbers of farm pollution incidents rose by over one third in the Yorkshire water authority region between 1986 and 1987. Although the number of serious cases in the region showed a decline over the same period, there is no room for complacency. Grant aid to help with projects for waste disposal has been increasingly taken up in recent years and this has proved helpful, but the whole industry must take even more seriously the effect of pollution on the environment. The Government will shortly be announcing some new measures which should help reduce the number of pollution incidents.

81. Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about farm pollution incidents in the Severn-Trent water authority region in 1987.

Mr. Gummer: Farm pollution incidents in the Severn Trent water authority region increased by 19 per cent. last year with the number of serious cases up from 92 in 1986 to 130 in 1987. The number of cases brought before the courts also rose from 12 to 54. I fully support the more active policy being followed by the water authority of bringing such offenders to book. The polluting farmer damages his neighbours as well as the watercourse, and undoes all the good which their proper management of farm waste achieves. The Government will shortly be announcing some new measures which should help reduce the number of such incidents.

Less-favoured Areas

30. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present state of farming in the less-favoured areas.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current levels of income within the hill farming sector.

Mr. MacGregor: We shall shortly be embarking on the normal autumn review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands. I expect to make a statement on the outcome of the review later in the year.

64. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to meet representatives of the farming unions to discuss the redesignation of less-favoured areas.

Mr. Gummer: I have no immediate plans to meet representatives of the farming unions to discuss this matter.

Arable Land

31. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the area of arable land (a) inside and (b) outside the less-favoured areas in England and Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. MacGregor: The latest information available is as follows:

	Hectares
Arable land on
Lfa holdings in England and Wales	413,000
Non-lfa holdings in England and Wales	5,168,000

Pig Production

32. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on pig production systems; and if he will make a statement.

36. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on pig production systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government have consulted interested parties on the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report. Replies have already been received from a wide range of organisations and more are expected. No decisions will be taken on the council's recommendations until these comments have been fully considered.

Pigs

33. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the pattern of growth in the national pig herd in recent years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is given in the table.

United Kingdom pig herd (thousand head)[1]

	[2] April	[3] June	[2] August	[3] December
1984	7,546	7,689	7,649	7,793
1985	7,933	7,865	7,958	7,930
1986	8,052	7,937	8,017	7,955
1987	8,300	[4]7,906	7,988	7,915
1988	7,980	—	—	—

[1] The figures in each column denote the total size of the herd for the month in question.

Ancient Monuments

34. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he gives to farmers with ancient monuments on their land who are anxious about trespass and damage.

Mr. Gummer: Officers of my Department's Agricultural Development and Advisory Service give advice, on request, to farmers with ancient monuments on their land, who are anxious about trespass and damage. The content of such advice will depend on the individual characteristics of the site concerned. If my hon. Friend is aware of any particular problem relating to ancient monuments on farm land, I would be very willing to look into it.

Brewers (Tenancies)

35. Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking in relation to representations made to him by the National Association of Licensed Victuallers, in relation to its request asking him to encourage brewers to include an agreed code of practice in future tenancy agreements between brewery companies and their tenants.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) on 14 June 1988 at column 135.

Irradiated Food

37. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 970, if he will make a statement on the progress of his inquiry into irradiated food dumping on Third-world countries.

Mr. Gummer: I understand that the hon. Member is referring to food which could be affected post Chernobyl. I am quite satisfied that all United Kingdom produce remained perfectly safe to eat following the Chernobyl accident, and that this applied just as much to supplies for export as to foodstuffs consumed in this country.

Council for Agriculture Ministers

38. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next hopes to meet his counterparts in the European Community; and what matters he hopes to discuss.

Mr. MacGregor: The next Council of Agriculture Ministers is scheduled to meet in Brussels on 18 and 19 July, to discuss various agricultural issues.

48. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last attended a meeting of the European Council of Agriculture Ministers; and what subjects were discussed.

65. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had about the common agricultural policy with other EC Agriculture Ministers.

89. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning the outcome of the last meeting of the Agriculture Ministers of the European Economic Community.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Members to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on Monday 27 June, at columns 91-92, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 20 June, at columns 425-26.

Retirement Tenancies

39. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on retirement tenancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Agricultural Holdings Act 1984 introduced retirement tenancies on statutory smallholdings. If there was sufficient agreement on proposals for retirement tenancies on other holdings and that they would be likely to have a worthwhile effect in practice, I should certainly be willing to consider them.

Industrial Dredging

40. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what controls are applied to ensure that the nature of the sea-bed and fish breeding grounds are not changed by industrial dredging; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Licences, issued by the Crown Estate Commissioners, to extract material state the precise location within which dredging is permitted, and the maximum quantities which may be extracted. Where necessary, additional controls can be applied, including a maximum depth for dredging, restrictions on the time of year for dredging, and a ban on discharge of fine material if adjacent shellfish deposits or spawning grounds might be blanketed. The controls applied in a particular case will be designed to allow recolonisation of the seabed once extraction has finished and to prevent dredging damaging sensitive fisheries.

Coastal Erosion

41. Mr. Holt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to visit Langbaurgh to discuss coastal erosion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have no plans to visit Langbaurgh to discuss coastal erosion. I understand that the borough council is considering a coast protection scheme for its area; and any proposal it makes to me will be considered as quickly and sympathetically as possible.

Country Landowners Association

42. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Country Landowners Association; and what was discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I last met the president of the Country Landowners Association on 25 April, when we discussed agricultural research and development.

Horse Sales

43. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to introduce the Department's code of practice for horse sales and markets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government's response to the Farm Animal Welfare Council report on the welfare of livestock at markets, announced in October 1987, accepted that legislation should be introduced to cover horse markets and sales. This legislation, which will be introduced as an order made under the Animal Health Act 1981, will provide statutory safeguards. The code of practice referred to by my hon. Friend will provide supplementary guidance. Proposals for the new order and the code of practice will be issued shortly for public consultation.

Agriculture Workers Union

44. Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the agriculture workers union; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I last met representatives of the agricultural and allied workers' national trade group on 18 November 1987, to discuss the poultry industry and associated health and safety matters.

ADAS

46. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has had discussions with the National Farmers' Union about the future of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

Mr. MacGregor: No.

Sheep

47. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what factors he attributes the 30 per cent. increase in sheep numbers since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The health and buoyancy of the sector is in large measure due to the efficiency of our industry, its export record, and the opportunities it has taken under the Community's sheepmeat regime which this Government negotiated prior to its introduction in 1980.

Bovine Somatotropin

49. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has made an assessment of the economic consequences arising from the use of bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Assessments of the possible economic consequences of bovine somatotropin are possible only by making assumptions about the large number of uncertain factors involved. These include the longer term effects, world-wide, on milk yield potential, production costs, the pattern of uptake by producers, agricultural policy, alternative resouce use and consumer reactions. A discussion of some of the factors involved, and their implications, is contained in a paper given by Professor A. Buckwell at the 5th European congress of agricultural economists in September 1987. I am arranging for a copy to be sent to the hon. Member. The particular results outlined in that paper would of course differ if alternative assumptions were deployed.

67. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with animal welfare organisations about the use of bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My officials and I have discussed the licensing procedures under the Medicines Act and the possible welfare implications of using bovine somatotropin with the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and Compassion in World Farming.

Torry Research Station

50. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last visited the Torry research station, Aberdeen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend has not visited Torry research station; I visited the station in 1986 and hope to do so again this year.

Research and Development

51. Mr. Wall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussion he has had with the trade union movement about the future of research and development in agriculture and fisheries.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary has expressed her willingness to meet that part of the trade union movement which represents civil servants employed in research and development and agriculture, fisheries and food, when they wish.

61. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has reached a decision on future funding of basic agricultural and food research and development.

66. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to reach a decision on the future of research and development in agriculture.

82. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the agriculture industry about the future funding of research and development in agriculture.

87. Mr. Doran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for the future funding of research and development in fishing.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No firm decisions have yet been taken following the recent internal review of expenditure by the Agricultural Departments on R and D but I shall inform the House of the outcome as soon as it is available. It remains our policy that the Government should be responsible for funding basic and strategic research as well as work in support of policy and statute, but that applied research likely to be of direct commercial benefit should be funded by industry. Against this background my right hon. Friend the Minister held a number of meetings with representatives of the agriculture, fisheries and food industries earlier in the year and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary has recently begun a further series of meetings with the sectors concerned.

Council of Fisheries Ministers

52. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last attended a meeting of the EEC Council of Fisheries Ministers; and if any agreement was reached concerning multiannual guidance programmes.

Mr. Gummer: No discussions took place on multiannual guidance programmes at the last Fisheries Council meeting on 23-24 June. The programmes were approved by the Standing Committee for Fisheries Structures in December 1987.

55. Mr. Graham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last attended a meeting of the EEC Council of Fisheries Ministers; and if any decisions were taken concerning the pressure-stock licences scheme.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 24 June. The detailed management of national quotas is a matter for each member state, and there was therefore no discussion of the pressure stock licensing scheme at the council.

60. Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning the outcome of the last meeting of the Fisheries Ministers of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 24 June at column 747.

Pesticides

53. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to improve the existing controls on pesticide production and use.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 and their accompanying consents do not seek to impose controls on the production of pesticides, but control their advertisement, sale, supply, storage and use in Great Britain. Detailed controls on use are being introduced progressively. As from 1 January this year, conditions of use attached to individual product approvals were given the force of law. From 1 January next year certain users of specified pesticides will have to hold an appropriate, officially recognised, certificate of competence. I am satisfied that the introduction of these controls is resulting in higher standards of training and more care being taken in the use of pesticides and I have no plans for changing these basic arrangements.

Family Farms

54. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a set of specific measures to asssit upland family farms of less than 50 hectares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: All sizes of family farms in the less favoured areas already benefit from a range of measures, including particularly hill livestock compensatory allowances which are exclusive to the LFAs and which we extended to the upland areas in 1985.

Set-aside Scheme

56. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what he estimates to be the area of land within the less-favoured areas eligible to apply for grants under his recently announced set-aside scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: An area within less favoured areas in the United Kingdom amounting to about 450,000 hectares is eligible for set-aside provided it meets the requirements of the scheme.

80. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about progress on the implementation of the set-aside scheme in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: The necessary statutory instrument has now been laid in draft. The scheme will start to operate as soon as parliamentary approval has been given.

85. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that the set-aside proposals will have no adverse effect on farmers whose principal activity is in the sheep sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: It was precisely with the objective of avoiding adverse effects on sheep producers that I decided against taking up the option of permitting extensive grazing under the set-aside scheme.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on research into the implications for the environment of his recently announced set-aside scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: I attach considerable importance to establishing the impact of the set-aside scheme on the environment. Two scientific research projects are already being undertaken to this end.

Wheat

59. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made as to whether the reduction of 500,000 hectares of wheat production in Europe this season will keep production below the 160 million tonne target.

Mr. MacGregor: The latest forecast of area planted to wheat in the Community this year is 15·61 million hectares, 0·27 million hectares below the 1987 figure. It is too early to make a realistic assessment of the 1988 Community wheat harvest.

Intervention Board

62. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the benefits to agriculture of the current location of the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce at Reading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The possibility of relocating the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce was examined in 1986. The Government concluded that the benefits of relocation would be outweighed by the potential costs and that the Department should remain at Reading.

The location of all Government work is now regularly considered in the context of the public expenditure survey.

Wool Marketing Board

63. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Wool Marketing Board; and what was discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I last met the chairman of the Wool Marketing Board on 1 February 1988 to review the prospects for the 1988 clip year and the level of the wool guarantee.

Women's Farmers Union

69. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Women's Farmers Union; and what was discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friends the Members for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) and for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) on 9 June 1988 at column 678.

Price Fixing

76. Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest position regarding the price fixing.

Mr. MacGregor: Since I replied to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry on 27 June, the Greeks have withdrawn their agreement to the price-fixing package. This was on the grounds that it was of vital national interest to them to reduce their negative MCAs from the present very high level, and that they had misunderstood what was proposed in the package for the green drachma. It has not so far been possible to resolve this problem.

Sea Fish Industry Authority

77. Mr. McFall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with the fishing industry concerning the Sea Fish Industry Authority levy.

Mr. Gummer: The Sea Fish Industry Authority proposes to increase its levy with effect from 1 April 1989. It is currently discussing its idea with the sea fish industry before making a firm proposal in the autumn. I shall be informed of the industry's views once a formal proposal is made.

Potato Marketing Board

78. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Potato Marketing Board: and what was discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 9 June, at column 667.

Intervention Stocks

79. Mr Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of storage of all intervention stocks in the United Kingdom in each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The annual cost of storage (excluding finance charges) of intervention stocks in the United Kingdom since 1983 has been as follows:

Year	£ million
1983	48·2
1984	46·4
1985	106·1
1986	141·0
1987	105·6

Diversification

84. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps to ensure that as the need of farmers to diversify grows the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service will advise farmers on how to present plans to the local authority free of charge.

Mr. Gummer: General advice on diversification is provided free of charge by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service. Although detailed advice on individual enterprises is chargeable, grants of 25 per cent. are available under the farm diversification grant scheme towards the cost of professional services, including chargeable ADAS advice, which has been incurred in securing necessary planning consent.

Environmental Protection

86. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the recently published European Commission report on safeguarding the environment under modern farming practices.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 4 July 1988.

Sheepmeat

88. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the review of the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have received representations from a wide range of interests on the various aspects of the Commission's proposals for reform of the sheepmeat regime.

Export Refunds

90. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that companies in the food and drink industry are receiving prompt payment for export refunds from the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce; and what arrangements he is making for payment on account until the payment difficulties are resolved.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Installation of the Intervention Board's new computerised export refund claims system has been subject to extended delivery delays and technical problems. These have significantly lengthened the payment times for export refunds so far this year. To overcome them, the board has progressively brought additional commodity sectors on to the system, transferred the system to a more powerful computer, strengthened its project management, and improved the speed and volume of processing and payment by hiring extra administrative staff and technical assistance. By these means the board plans to return to more normal payment times by the autumn. The board has also been examining payment on account arrangements, but these also present administrative and financial difficulties.

Research Stations

91. Mr. Darling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many persons are currently employed at his Department's research stations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: About 2,150.

National Farmers Union

93. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what matters were discussed.

94. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what was discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I last met the president of the National Farmers Union on 27 June when we discussed a wide variety of issues.

Milk Marketing Board

95. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when next he is due to meet the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the dairy sector.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have regular contacts with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss various issues affecting the dairy industry.

Algae

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the outcome of the scientific symposium convened by the Federal Republic of Germany to consider the growth of algae in the North sea and Baltic sea on 23 and 24 June.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

The international symposium held at Bonn on 23 and 24 June and organised by the Federal Republic of Germany considered a wide range of scientific papers relating to the recent growth of algal bloom off the Scandinavian coasts. It also considered the large number of seal deaths recently experienced in the Kattegat and Wadden sea. An official of my Department attended as an observer.

With regard to blooms, it was observed that while these are a regular and natural phenomenon in Scandinavian and other coastal waters, including those of the United Kingdom, the species involved in this case, Chrysochromulina, had not previously formed blooms. The area covered by bloom was also exceptional. The evidence available showed that nutrient levels in the bloom waters were low so that no direct link with nutrients can be made although there has been a long-term build-up of nutrient levels in these waters. The general view of the symposium was that physical and climatic conditions were more important influences.

With regard to seal deaths, the most favoured explanation for the deaths, since 12 April, of 1,300 animals out of a population of 16,000, was that of a viral infection. It was acknowledged that pollution was not a cause and there was no evidence to support a link with the algal bloom.

At the end of the symposium the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany drew up a number of recommendations, related to subjects discussed at the symposium such as nutrients, agricultural practices and research in the marine environment.

Public Expenditure Survey

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a detailed breakdown for the years 1982-83 to 1990-91, by nature of item and functional area of charge, of the receipts to his programme classified as charges for the purposes of the public expenditure survey.

Mr. MacGregor: The following figures, which are consistent with those given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 27 May 1988, at columns 375-76, relate to receipts in respect of programme expenditure for which the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has responsibility in the public expenditure survey. Receipts in respect of running costs expenditure are not included.

Public Expenditure: Charges 1982-83 to 1990-91

	1982-83 outturn	1983-84 outturn	1984-85 outturn	1985-86 outturn	1986-87 outturn	1987-88 estimated outturn	1988-89 plans	1989-90 plans	1990-91 plans

Note: Figures for the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce and the Foresty Commission are de minimus.

Home Grown Cereals Authority

Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Home Grown Cereals Authority; and what was discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I am in regular contact with various members of the Home Grown Cereals Authority. I will be meeting the chairman again next week when I address the Home Grown Cereals Authority harvest luncheon.

Food (Research and Development)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the food industry about the future funding of research and development in food.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend the Minister met representatives of the food industry to discuss future funding of the R and D on food on 24 and 25 February and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary is shortly to hold further discussions with the food sector.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Forestry Commission; and what was discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I last met the chairman of the Forestry Commission on Wednesday 22 June, when we discussed a wide range of forestry matters.

EC Budget

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the provision in the European Economic Community budget for the depreciation of intervention stocks is included within the agricultural guideline agreed by the Council in February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The cost of depreciation of newly formed stocks is included within the guideline. The cost of depreciating older stocks (including butter under the special disposal scheme) is to be covered outside the guideline in the period 1988-92 by a provision of a 1·2 billion ecu in 1988 and 1·4 billion ecu annually thereafter (1988 prices).

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the percentage increase in agricultural spending in the draft European Community budget for 1989 compared with 1988, disregarding the spending in 1988 which related to overspending in 1987; and what are the main reasons for the increase.

Mr. MacGregor: The annual EC budgets for agricultural market support no longer cover a calendar year following decisions of the Council in 1987 and 1988 to delay the timing of payments to member states. The 1988 budget covers agricultural spending in the 11½ months from November 1987, the provision for which is 29·8 billion ecu (£20 billion). This is equivalent to about 31 billion ecu over a full 12-month period. The preliminary draft budget for 1989 provides 30·7 billion ecu (£20·6 billion) for agricultural spending in the 12 months from mid-October 1988.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement setting out the manner in which savings are being made in the 1989 draft budget by using less skimmed milk powder in animal feed; and whether this change will create other expenditure or consequences.

Mr. MacGregor: At the beginning of June the EC Commission, with United Kingdom support, cut the rate of subsidy for the use of skimmed milk powder in animal feed to a level some 7 per cent. below that assumed in the Commission's 1989 preliminary draft budget, and lowered the required minimum amount of powder which must be included in subsidised feed. The Commission estimates that these reductions in subsidy and uptake, together with adjustments to other skimmed milk subsidies, should result in a saving of 285 million by comparison with the preliminary draft budget. No additional EC expenditure is anticipated in other areas as a result of these changes.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement setting out the manner in which £16 million is to be saved by the Commission in cutting sales to developing countries.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission intends to propose to the Council a new provision for granting credit to developing countries to facilitate the export of agricultural produce. It had intended to set aside 100 million ecu (£67 million) for this in 1989 but has now reduced this by 24 mecu (£16 million) in order to respect the guideline.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement explaining the overspending in the agricultural budget in 1987, in the light of the assurances given in the 1984 own resources decision.

Mr. MacGregor: The 1984 agreement on budget discipline obliged the Council to keep expenditure on agricultural market support within the financial guideline. This was only achieved in 1987 by deferring repayment to member states for expenditure incurred in November and December. As a consequence much stricter rules on budget discipline were agreed by the European Council in February 1988.

Agricultural Guidelines

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement setting out the procedures which require to be followed to adjust agricultural guidelines to take account of changes in the dollar/European currency unit exchange rate; whether such adjustments are subject to Council agreement; and what has been the impact of recent changes in this exchange rate.

Mr. MacGregor: The guideline is not adjusted to take account of currency fluctuations. A monetary reserve of 1 billion ecu (£670 million) is now included in the annual EC budget. If the ecu/dollar exchange rate is significantly different from that assumed in drawing up the budget the Council and European Parliament shall decide on transfers to or from the monetary reserve depending on whether the dollar has risen or fallen. The first 400 mecu of additional savings or expenditure are deducted before calculating the amount to be transferred. The Commission's report on the effect of ecu/dollar fluctuations in 1988 is not due until October but it seems unlikely that there will be a need for transfers into or out of the reserve this year.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is taking any action to prevent butchers selling for human consumption uncooked brains from cattle infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 21 June 1988, c. 515]: Sir Richard Southwood's working party has made an interim report to Ministers recommending that as a precautionary measure the carcases of cattle affected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy should be destroyed. The Government have accepted this recommendation. Pending the final conclusion of the working party, arrangements will be made for compulsory slaughter and destruction of carcases. Compensation will be payable at 50 per cent. of market value subject to a ceiling.

Sir Richard Southwood has also made recommendations about research and development. In particular, he has proposed that activity in this area should be co-ordinated by an expert working group. The Government are urgently considering how best to implement this recommendation.

The detailed implementation of both these elements, including the scope for an industry financial contribution, will be discussed with the farming industry as a matter of urgency.

Land Drainage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to revise the conservation guidelines for drainage authorities to assist water authorities and other bodies in implementing the Land Drainage Improvement Works (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988.

Mr. Gummer: We propose to issue guidance on drainage authorities' responsibilities under these regulations which may be inserted in the revised conservation guidelines.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that, following the privatisation of the water authorities, privatised water companies will be permitted to contract with local authorities in signing agreements for the carrying out of any works required by the water companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Although local authorities do not have general powers to carry out contract work for private companies, my right hon. Friend's proposals for privatisation of the water industry envisage that local authorities will be enabled to continue to act as sewerage agents of the privatised undertakers. Existing arrangements between water authorities and local authorities will continue in force unless and until notice to withdraw from the arrangement is given by either party.

County Hall, Westminster

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to call in the development proposal to turn County hall into a luxury hotel if it is approved; if he will arrange for an exhibition in the House of Commons of the successful proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no application for such a development and therefore no decision for my right hon. Friend to take.

Elstree Studios

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to call in any proposals for redevelopment of the Elstree studios unless film-making capability is maintained and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have no knowledge of any planning applications for the redevelopment of Elstree studios. The Secretary of State will consider any proposals which do come before him in accordance with his normal practice.

New Towns

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what undertakings were given to the Association of District Councils on the opportunities to be offered to its members of managing new town rented property; and what information he has on the extent to which these have been fulfilled by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation;

(2) what guidance he gives on the selection of housing associations to manage new town rented property;

(3) to whom he sent copies of letters relating to decisions on the transfer of management of rented property belonging to Warrington and Runcorn development corporation;

(4) what guidance was given to new towns on the role of local authorities in managing rented property transferred from new town ownership.

Mrs. Roe: No undertakings have been given by my Department to the Association of District Councils on the possibility of any of its members managing on a temporary basis new town rented houses. Decisions about management are a matter for the relevant development corporations. My Department has not issued them with guidance on local authorities managing the housing either before or after the ultimate transfer of ownership. On ultimate transfer, we require prospective purchasers of new town housing, including housing associations, to be approved for the purpose by the Housing Corporation.

Interim management agreements do not affect the Government's commitment to let new town tenants choose for themselves the owners of their homes. Attempts to confuse management and ownership only cause unnecessary anxiety for the tenants.

Maidstone Borough Council

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications he has received from Maidstone borough council following his statement of 9 March relating to changes in the provisions about capital expenditure by local authorities; and what those applications concerned.

Mr. Chope: None. The council's treasurer has, however, sought clarification in relation to four schemes as to the criteria on which my right hon. Friend would issue additional capital allocations.

Local Government Finance Bill

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to publicise the provisions of the Local Government Finance Bill when it is enacted; and what discussions he has had with (a) the Central Office of Information, (b) advertising agencies and (c) local authorities and local authority associations about such publicity.

Mr. Ridley: I have decided that once the Local Government Finance Bill is enacted my Department will publish an updated version of the existing booklet, "Paying for Local Government", in order to reflect accurately the position at that time. My Department has discussed this with COI. I have taken no decisions yet on any further information which may be needed subsequently to ensure that the public are aware of their new rights and duties. I have held no discussions with advertising agencies, local authorities or their associations on these matters.

National Rivers Authority Advisory Committee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members and their backgrounds of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee, and outline its powers.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of all the members of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee other than the chairman, including their relevant backgrounds and qualifications.

Mr. Ridley: Together with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, I am pleased to announce that Peter Brandt, Professor Ronald Edwards, Hugh Fish CBE, Lord Mason of Barnsley, Dennis Mitchell and John Norris CBE have agreed to serve as members of the National Rivers Authority Advisory committee.

Under my right hon. and noble Friend, Lord Crickhowell, this committee will advise us on the implications for the water authorities of the reorganisation needed to provide a separate organisational structure for their water supply and sewerage functions, and the functions that will be performed by the new National Rivers Authority.

These appointments will provide the committee with the services of people with considerable experience of the water industry, knowledge and interest in NRA functions, and financial and organisational experience. If necessary, further appointments will be made in due course. I am confident that they will ensure that the NRA will become an effective regulatory body once the utility functions of the water authorities are transferred to the private sector.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 8 July 1988

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Wales and Chester Circuit

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Attorney-General what plans there are to alter the status of the Wales and Chester circuit; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There are no plans to alter the status of the Wales and Chester circuit.

Football Violence (Trials)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General if he now has information relating to fees claimed by prosecuting counsel and defence costs payable out of the legal aid fund for each of the trials associated with alleged football violence which have been abandoned in the current year.

The Attorney-General: The fees payable to prosecuting counsel in these cases have not yet been finally assessed. Defence costs are determined by an officer of the Crown Court upon receipt of the lawyers' claims for fees. A number of claims have been received, but not all, so these fees also have not yet been finally assessed.

PRIME MINISTER

Single Market

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's assessment of the specific (a) advantages and (b) disadvantages to the United Kingdom of the establishment of the European single market.

The Prime Minister: The establishment of the single market will bring great advantages for United Kingdom business through increased trading opportunities elsewhere in the Community. Greater competition in the United Kingdom market from firms in other member states will mean new challenges for our companies, but will also stimulate efficiency and bring benefits to consumers.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Departmental Telephone Numbers

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will expedite the revision of the Palace of Westminster directory to take account of the new telephone numbers of Government Departments, particularly the Departments of Environment and Transport.

Mr. Wakeham: The Palace of Westminster telephone directory is being reprinted at present and revised telephone numbers supplied by Government Departments will be included in the reprint. The next issue will be available in August.

As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport informed my hon. Friend in his written answer on 4 July at column 487, arrangements have been made to direct incoming telephone calls on old numbers to appropriate new numbers. The Palace of Westminster operators also have a list of the new telephone numbers and hon. Members may obtain this information by dialing 100.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many illegal immigrants were deported in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Renton: The numbers removed as illegal immigrants are published in table 23 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1987" (Cm. 415), copies of which are in the Library.

AIDS (Brixton Prison)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the 27 HIV positive cases in Her Majesty's prison Brixton in 1985-86 came to be identified as such.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: HIV antibody positive prisoners are identified at Brixton prison as at other prison service establishments, by medical inquiry and examination. Brixton reported no such cases in 1985-86.

Election Expenses

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 95, he will give the details and outcome of the four prosecutions in 1979 referred to therein.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Candidate	Description	Constituency	Result of Proceedings
Sidney Albert Chaney	National Front	Islington Central	Fined £100 and £25 costs
Thomas Leslie Keen	Campaign More Prosperous Britian	Huddersfield West/Colne Valley	Fined £60
Patrick Flint	National Front	Leeds South East	Fined £35
Samuel Frederick Wright	National Front	Wellingborough	Fined £20 and £20 costs

Special Constables

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of the special constabulary in the last financial year for which figures are available; and what percentage of total police costs for that year were attributable to the special constabulary in respect of each police force in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

Note: The information is as submitted by individual police authorities on their police grant claim forms.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last conducted a review of the recruitment, deployment, pay and conditions of special constables; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In December 1987 my right hon. Friend convened a national conference on the special constabulary. The conference was attended by senior police officers from every force in England and Wales and members of the special constabulary and other observers. All aspects of the special constabulary were discussed, with particular emphasis on how to increase its strength and improve its deployment. A report of the conference has been circulated to all forces and we are considering further action on a number of the issues raised.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the establishment of special constables in each police force in England and Wales in the latest year for which statistics are available; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what was the establishment of special constables in each police force in England and Wales in each of the years 1979 to 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no centrally approved establishment figure for special constables. Their appointment is at the discretion of individual chief officers, who are encouraged to enrol as many specials as they can usefully train and deploy. The number of special constables in each force, as at 31 December, in the years 1979 to 1987, is shown in the table:

Medomsley Prison

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Her Majesty's prison Medomsley, Consett, County Durham (a) was refurbished and (b) is expected to be reoccupied; and what are the reasons for the delay.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's prison Medomsley has not been subject to general refurbishment, but a new kitchen has recently been constructed and some additional office accommodation provided. The establishment was temporarily closed in October last year so that the staff could be deployed to areas of pressing need in other prisons. No date has yet been fixed for reoccupation of the establishment.

Category C Prisoners

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to the answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 34, what information his Department collects regarding the downgrading of category B prisoners to category C;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 34, if he will ensure that his Department in future obtains information and statistics on the numbers of prisoners downgraded from category B to category C.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: From information supplied by prison department establishments holding sentenced adult male prisoners, a central computer system, the prison index, maintains information on prisoners' current security categories. This infomation is used to compile statistics showing the distribution of prisoners by their current security categories. The prison index is not capable of analysing information relating to previous security categories which would be required to monitor the numbers of prisoners downgraded from category B to category C. Work is in hand to replace the prison index by a more modern and more powerful system which will enable this information to be extracted.

Joint Security Operations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in each of the past five years his Department has authorised joint security operations between the police and military personnel.

Mr. Hurd: The military are under a common law duty to assist the police when called upon to do so. This assistance does not necessarily require the approval of my Department, and no central records are kept of the number of occasions when military assistance is provided.

IRA and INLA

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been (a) killed and (b) injured on the mainland as a result of Irish Republican Army and Irish National Libertion Army terrorist attacks since 1969.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 1 July 1988]: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of homicides in England and Wales attributed to acts of terrorism connected with Northern Ireland since 1974 is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library (Table 4.5 of Cm. 233 gives figures for 1976-86). There were 90 such deaths in 26 incidents during the period 1972 to 1987. Information on the number of terrorist incidents causing injury is only complete since 1980. During the period 1980 to 1987 there were 10 such incidents in which some 220 people were recorded as having been injured.

Lotteries

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what impact the completion of the internal market in the European Community will have upon the ability of member countries to offer for sale tickets in a national lottery in other member states.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 28 April 1988]: There are no measures in the single market programme at present specifically relating to lotteries and, in their absence, the controls which United Kingdom law places on lotteries would not appear to be affected.

President Reagan (Visit)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the total police costs arising from the visit to London by President Reagan on 2 June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 10 June 1988]: I understand from the Metropolitan police and the City of London police that the additional costs of the visit amounted to about £7,800.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Assessment of Performance Unit

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of the assessment of performance unit and its proposed role within the development of a national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The assessment of performance unit will continue its programme of surveys of pupils' performance in language, science, maths, design and technology and foreign languages. In addition to offering insight into pupils' performance to help teachers and teacher training, data from the surveys will form part of a baseline against which to evaluate the introduction of the national curriculum in future years. On completion of the survey programme, the work of the APU will be subsumed by that of the School Examinations and Assessment Council and the National Curriculum Council.

Student Unions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the names of those organisations and individuals who have made representations to him concerning automatic membership of student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 10 June at column 691. Most of the representations received have been from members of the public including constituents' letters forwarded by hon. Members. It would not be appropriate to list the names in the Official Report.

NATIONAL FINANCE

House Prices (Inflation)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current rate of inflation in house prices.

Mr. Lilley: Department of the Environment estimates show that the prices of dwellings purchased in the United Kingdom with building society loans rose on average by 21 per cent. between the first quarter of 1987 and the first quarter of 1988.

Civil Servants

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the trend in the number of civil servants over the past five years.

Mr. Brooke: The number of civil servants at 1 April 1988 was 579,627, reflecting a reduction of 7·1 per cent. on the total for five years ago of 623,972. The detailed trend is shown in the table.

Year	Numbers at 1 April	Percentage change on previous year
1984	623,972	−3·8
1985	599,026	−0·4
1986	594,365	−0·8
1987	597,801	+0·6
1988	579,627	−3·0

CIVIL SERVICE

Departmental Staff

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what proportion of executive officer and clerical officer entrants to the Civil Service in 1987 were graduates.

Mr. Luce: The Civil Service Commission recommended for appointment to executive officer and equivalent grades 4,052 candidates in 1987 of whom 2,281 (56 per cent.) were graduates.

Figures for the number of graduates appointed as administrative officers (formerly clerical officers) are not available as recruitment is carried out locally by individual Government Departments and not by the Civil Service Commission.

THE ARTS

Expenditure

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the level of expenditure, per capita, on arts in (a) Great Britain and (b) England in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Luce: The annual grant from the Office of Arts and Libraries to the Arts Council, the British Film Institute, the Crafts Council and the National Film and Television School, per head of the whole population, amounted to the following sums in each of the last three years:

	Great Britain £	England £
1985-86	2·12	2·04
1986-87	2·76	2·76
1987-88	2·80	2·79

The information for earlier years is not readily available.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the level of expenditure, per capita, on museums in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Luce: The expenditure on museums and galleries borne on the votes of the Office of Arts and Libraries and its predecessors in each of the last 10 years per head of United Kingdom population in each of those years has been as follows:

Year	Expenditure per capita £'s
1978-79	0·80
1979-80	0·96
1980-81	1·07
1981-82	1·14
1982-83	1·34
1983-84	1·40
1984-85	1·53
1985-86	1·62
1986-87	1·85
1987-88	2·21

Arts (Housing)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the level of expenditure on housing the arts in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Luce: The information that is readily available relates to Arts Council expenditure in Great Britain over the last three years. It is as follows:

Year	£ million
1985-86	1·21
1986-87	0·91
1987-88	1·47

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inner-cities Initiative

Mr. Peter Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response he has received from private sector industry in the north-west to his inner-cities initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The private sector has responded very well to our inner-cities policies in the north-west. The Action for Cities working breakfasts held in Manchester and Liverpool attracted over 400 business men, almost one third of whom have already offered to help. Examples of the offers of help from the private sector include secondments, use of a redundant sports centre to help handicapped and able-bodied unemployed people, free consultancies and land use for investment and managed work space purposes We are also making encouraging progress in the three inner city task forces based in the north-west that are working with 23 businesses which have committed funds of almost half a million pounds.

Post Office

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of the Post Office; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I last met the chairman of the Post Office on 4 July and our discussion covered a broad range of topics on the activities and performance of the Post Office group.

Society of British Aerospace Manufacturers

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the Society of British Aerospace Manufacturers; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I last formally met representatives of the Society of British Aerospace Companies on 18 November 1987. A wide range of topics covering the aerospace industry was discussed.

Electric Plugs

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimates exist as to the number of household accidents involving personal injury that may be avoided by the fitting of electric plugs as standard by manufacturers of household electrical equipment.

Mr. Butcher: It is estimated that fitting plugs to electrical appliances as a standard requirement would have little effect on the number of household accidents.

Coral

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has about the importation of marine coral and associated products into the United Kingdom by weight and value in each year from 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is given in the table:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Consular Fees

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the imminent coming into force of section 1 of the Immigration Act, he will withdraw the Consular Fees (Amendment) Order 1988 (S.I. 1988, No. 925).

Mr. Eggar: No.

British Embassy (Islamabad)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will establish an inquiry into the administration of the British embassy in Islamabad; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: No special inquiry is planned.

In September 1988 the embassy will be visited by a team of diplomatic service inspectors as part of the normal inspection cycle of posts overseas. The inspectors will review all aspects of the mission's work, including procedures and staffing levels.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to publicise (a) the increase in visa fees which took effect on 1 June and (b) the change whereby fees for visa settlement are now paid by all applicants.

Mr. Eggar: Details of the fee increases and notice of the change to charging on a per capita basis were given in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on 7 June at column 467, copies of which were widely distributed to the press. No other publicity in this country is contemplated. However, a table of fees is exhibited by all diplomatic service posts overseas at which fee-bearing services are provided.

Colombia

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government has taken, and proposes further to take, in the light of the evidence submitted to him by Amnesty International of human rights abuses in Colombia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Amnesty International allegations concerning the human rights situation in Colombia are of considerable concern. We continue to make our desire to see an improvement clear to the Colombian Government. I understand that the Colombian Government have responded formally to the Amnesty International report. It should be remembered that the Colombians face very serious levels of terrorist violence, and have already prosecuted members of the security forces for human rights offences.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to reimburse local authorities in Scotland in respect of the shortfall in income from the community charge as a result of the exemptions for full-time students.

Mr. Lang: The distribution of revenue support grant will take into account the reduced level of community charge payable by full-time students.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of full-time students in each of (a) the regions and (b) districts of Scotland who will be eligible for exemption from 80 per cent. of the community charge.

Mr. Lang: The information will not be available until the community charge registration process is complete. The latest estimates by region, rounded to the nearest 1,000 are given below:

Region	Students
Borders	1,000
Central	5,000
Dumfries and Galloway	1,000
Fife	6,000
Grampian	11,000
Highland	1,000
Lothian	22,000
Strathclyde	40,000
Tayside	9,000
Islands Areas	[1]96,000

Mobile Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of inquiries received by his Department over the past five years on the eligibility of private companies for European regional development fund mobile infrastructure funding; what is the total number of occasions in those five years on which his Department have responded that private companies are not eligible for such funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My Department receives numerous inquiries and meets frequently various organisations on matters relating to the European regional development fund. The number of inquiries relating specifically to the eligibility of private companies for mobile infrastructure funding is not available but there have been several such inquiries since Scotland first secured funding for the Hebridean Isles ferry in 1984—the first country to do so. The regulation governing the operation of the fund provides for assistance only to public authorities or other authorities responsible in the same way as a public authority for carrying out infrastructure investments. Inquirers are informed accordingly.

Recently, and in the light of various privatisation measures, the European commission has indicated a willingness to consider applications from privatised industries. However, the criteria applied, which include a requirement for statutory or other similar control over the company, are such that it is unlikely that most privately owned companies and their investments can qualify for assistance.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether privately owned transport companies are eligible for European regional development fund mobile infrastructure funding.

Mr. Lang: The regulation governing the operation of the European regional development fund allows aid for infrastructure projects to go to public authorities or to any other organisation responsible in the same way as a public authority for carrying out infrastructure projects. It is unlikely, therefore, that most privately owned transport companies would be eligible.

Private Medical Organisations (Trainees)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many trainees on (a) YTS or (b) Manpower Services Commission schemes are currently employed in private hospitals or other private medical businesses in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: This information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the size of the fall in unemployment since June 1987, based on his Department's estimates of the labour force and of employment for this period.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment change cannot be meaningfully estimated in this way as any such comparison would be affected by a range of definitional and technical factors.

Women (Wage Rates)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average hourly rate of pay of (a) part-time and (b) full-time employed women.

Mr. Lee: The available information is published in table 178 of part F of the report on the new earnings survey 1987 for part-time female employees, and in table 1 of part A for full-time female employees. A copy of the report is in the Library.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, for both the north-west region and Great Britain as a whole, he will list in the Official Report each change to the system measuring unemployment, by date; and what effect these changes had in numerical and percentage terms on the recorded number of unemployed.

Mr. Lee: A full description of all the changes which have affected the coverage of monthly unemployment figures since 1979 was given on page 422 of the October 1986 edition of Employment Gazette. Following are the estimated average monthly effects of each change at the time it occurred expressed as a number and as a percentage of the number of unemployed people for the north-west region and Great Britain. The figures do not provide an estimate of the number of people currently affected by the changes. These effects will have varied over time depending on economic and demographic factors. The regional and national seasonally adjusted series provide a back series consistent with the current coverage of the count.

Small Businesses

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Employment if he will list the measures he has taken to encourage Government Departments to use small businesses.

Mr. Cope: This Department has taken a number of steps to encourage Government Departments to buy from small businesses, through meetings at ministerial level and with senior purchasing officials. In addition, the Department has decided to fund the recruitment of a private sector secondee to work in the central unit on purchasing to promote the opportunities available.

The Department has also taken action to assist and encourage small businesses to obtain Government contracts, primarily by improving the quality of information made available to them. We publish a booklet, "Tendering for Government Contracts", which gives guidance on what Government Departments seek to buy and the names and addresses of the relevant contacts. Departments, including the Ministry of Defence and this Department, also publish booklets providing more specific information on the purchasing opportunities within their Departments.

ENERGY

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of the total United Kingdom petrol sales in each of the past five years has been of unleaded petrol.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information on the sales of unleaded petrol prior to April 1987 is not available. From that date, sales of unleaded petrol represented 0·1 per cent. of the total United Kingdom petrol sales in 1987 and 0·3 per cent. in the first five months of 1988. Detailed figures are given in the table.

Power Stations (Sulphurisation Control)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to ensure that currently defunct electricity power stations purchased by entrepreneurs for new power generation will be made through planning controls to fit sulphurisation control equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: It is already Government policy that all new power stations and all power stations coming on stream after a period of a year without generating will have to fit emission control equipment. Her Majesty's pollution inspectorate already has the necessary powers to ensure that this is done.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how Her Majesty's Government will ensure that the future generation of electricity, when privatised, will be strictly controlled in order to avoid environmental pollution.

Mr. Parkinson: This task will be carried out by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution or, in Scotland, Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate, which has the necessary statutory powers to control air pollution. Similarly, the control authorities for solid and liquid wastes also have the necessary powers to enable them to carry out their responsibilities.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the supplementary question by the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy), Official Report, 4 July, column 712, which steps he took that led to his conclusion that reports that South African mining interests are preparing to take a substantial interest in, and influence over, a privatised electricity generating industry are pure fiction.

Mr. Parkinson: As I told the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 4 July, there is no evidence that South African mining interests wish to have a major investment in the electricity supply industry.

ENVIRONMENT

GREA (London)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the 1988-89 grant-related expenditure assessments for each of the inner London boroughs in respect of housing, recreational and personal social services.

Mr. Chope: Details of grant-related expenditure assessments for every local authority are published in "The Technical Handbook of Grant Related Expenditure 1988-89", copies of which are in the Library.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his conclusions following his consultation on capital controls on local authority expenditure.

Mr. Ridley: My proposals for a new legislative framework to regulate local authority capital expenditure and finance were published yesterday in a consultation paper, which has been sent to the local authority associations, to county, district, and borough councils in England and Wales, and to other interested bodies. I am sending a copy to my hon. Friend. Those wishing to comment on the proposals have been asked to do so by 7 October 1988.

Pharaoh's Ants

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide additional resources to the London borough of Newham to deal with outbreaks of pharaoh's ant infestation in high-rise blocks of flats.

Mrs. Roe: A hormone treatment is now available. It has been used effectively on the Ferrier estate in Greenwich without the need for additional resources from Government.

Coral

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures are currently adopted by his Department to advise traders of the requirements in appendix II of the conference on international trade in endangered species 1985, relating to hard corals.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department issues a notice to importers and exporters to advise traders of conservation controls. A revised edition issued in 1987 lists all corals subject to control following the 1985 CITES conference.

Sport and Leisure

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, under his plans to privatise the management of local authority sport and leisure facilities, local authorities will be permitted to claw back any of the profits made by the companies which are awarded contracts to manage such services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 5 July 1988]: If Parliament approves the order to apply the competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988 to the management of local authority sport and leisure facilities, any question of profit sharing will be a matter for negotiation between individual authorities and potential contractors. Authorities will not, however, be able to insist on profit sharing arrangements which would restrict, distort or prevent competition.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report tables, in the same format as table 2, table 3 of HC 177 of 1987-88, showing the core activities and performance against target of the Ordnance Survey for the period 1974-75 to 1987-88.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer Thursday 7 July 1988]: Information about Ordnance Survey finances are given in its annual reports and trading accounts, which are published.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when it is expected that the trading fund accounts for the Ordnance Survey for 1986-87 will be published.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer Thursday 7 July 1988]: The trading accounts for the Ordnance Survey for 1986-87 were ordered by the House of Commons to be printed on 16 March 1988 and are now available.

DEFENCE

Service Personnel (Radiation)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications for his Department's policy towards compensating service men for the alleged effects of radioactivity suffered during nuclear tests in the 1950s of the telegram, dated 31 July 1956, sent by Mr. Lloyd, a member of the Medical Research Council, to an official in his Department, Mr. Wheeler, stipulating that the Medical Research Council's findings on genetic effects, radioactivity and strontium levels should be interpreted as not showing any increase, rather than as showing an increase, as originally proposed.

Mr. Sainsbury: Shortly after the Medical Research Council report "Hazards to Man of Nuclear and Allied Radiations" (Cmnd. 9780) was published in June 1956, briefing material was prepared for Sir William Penney to use in Australia during press conferences etc. prior to the Buffalo tests later that year. The briefing material, which is in the Public Records Office (AVIA 65/814 enclosure 180), dealt with the effects of atomic explosions and with radioactivity in general. It also included reference to the Medical Research Council report and commented as follows:

> "Regarding the genetic effects of radiation the evidence from the bombed cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki and from those such as uranium mine workers and radiologists, whose work brings them into contact with more than the normal amounts of radioactivity, shows no increase in hereditary diseases".

The telegram of 31 July 1956, to which the hon. Member refers was from Captain Lloyd, an official in Ministry of Supply to the MofS representative Mr. Wheeler in Canberra (same Public Records Office reference enclosure 187). Its purpose was to make a number of drafting changes to the briefing document and in particular, it suggests a change of emphasis in the above quotation to better reflect the Medical Research Council report conclusions from "show no increase" to

> "has not shown an increase".

Unfortunately, the telegram appears to have contained a typographical error when quoting the original Medical Research Council document and the copy found shows an amendment in manuscript deleting "an" and substituting "no". The copy held in another Public Records Office file (AVIA 65 152 enclosure 49) does not appear to have been similarly amended. Therefore it was concluded that, although the telegram contained an error, it enabled the recipient to identify where a change was needed and he was in no danger of being misled.

In the circumstances, it is not thought that this telegram has any implications for the Department's policy on compensation of test participants which was reached after consideration of a wide range of evidence, including the Medical Research Council report as well as a considerable volume of material published since.

Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of officers qualifying at the royal military academy, Sandhurst in eash of the past five years were drawn from (a) the North of England, and (b) the South of England.

Mr. Freeman: The infomation is not readily available and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to consider the relocation of the royal military academy, Sandhurst to a new site.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave on 28 June at column 227.

Joint Security Operations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in each of the past five years military personnel have been involved in joint security operations with the civil forces.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Sheep (Monitoring)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a county by county breakdown of where the 1,380 marked sheep were remonitored between 28 September 1987 and 1 June 1988.

Mr. Grist: Of the 1,380 sheep remonitored in this period, 1,208 were in Gwynedd, 90 in Powys, 72 in Clwyd and 10 in Dyfed.

Primary Schools

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many primary schools in each Welsh county at the latest available date had (a) fewer than 10 pupils, (b) 10 to 19 pupils, (c) 20 to 29 pupils, (d) 30 to 39 pupils, (e) 40 to 49 pupils, (f) 50 to 59 pupils, (g) 60 to 99 pupils, (h) 100 to 150 pupils, (i) 151 to 199 pupils and (j) 200 or more pupils.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information in respect of January 1988 is as follows:—

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many primary schools in each Welsh county with (a) fewer than 10 pupils, (b) 10 to 19 pupils, (c) 20 to 29 pupils, (d) 30 to 39 pupils, (e) 40 to 49 pupils, (f) 50 to 59 pupils, (g) 60 to 99 pupils, (h) 100 to 150 pupils, (i) 151 to 199 pupils and (j) 200 or more pupils have closed or are due to close in each year from 1974 to 1988.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information in the form requested which distinguishes between the size of schools is not available. A comparison between the number of primary schools closed in Wales during the period 1974 to 1988 could be misleading as many closures occur as part of wider schemes of reorganisation or amalgamation which can incorporate the establishment of new schools.

The table shows the net change in the number of primary schools by local education authority for the period January 1974 to January 1988.

Non-domestic Rate

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he is able to give as to the Welsh non-domestic rate in 1990-91 on the basis of present local government expenditure plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 7 July 1988]: On the basis of current rateable values, a national non-domestic rate of 257·6p would give the same yield as that estimated to be raised from non-domestic rates in Wales in 1988-89.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Social Security Reform

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will tabulate figures for each of a single and a married pensioner, where the wife receives category B pension, assuming rents and rates as in his Department's November tax benefit model tables, and that benefit entitlement is maximised, comparing net weekly spending power under the existing system in December with spending power, assuming that his proposed 1988-89 benefit changes, with benefit rates deflated to April 1987 prices, had already taken effect, in each of the following circumstances (a) full national insurance basic pension plus additional/earnings related/occupational pension of £0, £5, £10, £20, £30, £40, and £50 a week and (b) full national basic pension plus investment income of £0, £5, £10, £20, £30, £40, and £50 a week.

Mr. Portillo: This question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Spending Power

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to the answers given to the hon. Member for Birkenhead of 19 May, *Official Report,*columns 550-52, if he will place in the Library details of the assumptions used for each of the hypothetical supplementary benefit calculations both in the original tables, Official Report, 11 March, columns 406-8, and in the revised tables, Official Report, 19 May, columns 550-52; and why revisions in these hypothetical supplementary benefit calculations were made;

(2) when he expects to be able to answer the question from the hon. Member for Birkenhead on comparisons between supplementary benefit and income support entitlements tabled for answer on 8 June.

Mr. Portillo: A note has been placed in the Library.

Maternity Services

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) which outer London health districts are self-sufficient in terms of maternity bed provision;

(2) how many maternity beds are available in each of the outer London health districts; and if he will express these figures in per capita terms.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table. Women do not necessarily have their babies in the home district but with medical advice choose the maternity unit which offers the type of care desired. Neonatal obstetric and medical factors also have bearing on the choice of maternity unit.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report, for each regional health authority in England, the number of reported cases of Alzheimer's disease in each of the last six years.

Mrs. Currie: The only information available centrally relates to admissions to National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units in England with a main diagnosis of presenile or senile dementia (ICD 290.0, 290.2, 290.3) and is shown in the table. Dementia in alzheimer's disease is included under these diagnoses.

(Data on arteriosclerotic dementia and dementia from 'other' and 'unspecified' causes (ICD 290.4, 290.8 and 290.9) are recorded separately).

The figures do not relate to individual patients as a patient can be discharged and readmitted more than once during the year.

Elderly Persons

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total expenditure by the Department on research into care for the elderly.

Mrs. Currie: In 1987-88 about £1·1 million was spent on research on the care of the elderly in the community, in hospitals and nursing homes.

Operating Theatres

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action is being taken to remedy the under-use of operating theatres; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: New data on the proportion of operations cancelled are being produced which will assist health authorities in their task of monitoring performance in this area. The management consultancy branch of the Department is carrying out a study into the management and organisation of operating theatre departments under the guidance of an independent steering group chaired by Professor Peter Gilroy Bevan. Good practice guidance will be considered in the light of its report which is expected early in 1989.

Social Fund

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when a decision on the level of the social fund for the financial year 1989-90 will be taken.

Mr. Portillo: In the autumn.

Day Care

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 15 March, Official Report, column 553, what steps he is taking to ensure that the provision of day care places is sufficient and that the provision of adult training places is sufficient, in the absence of central information on the numbers of mentally handicapped people either leaving full-time education or being discharged from hospitals and needing such care.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 12 April at column 99.

Curzon Marketing

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what system his Department normally uses to distribute literature, including leaflets, application forms etc.; on what basis he decided to retain the services of Curzon Marketing to distribute housing benefit application forms; whether he has retained private firms in the past five years to perform similar services; and which other services he plans to contract out to private companies.

Mr. Portillo: The Department uses a variety of outlets in distributing its leaflets. These include social security offices, citizen's advice bureaux, the Post Office, local authorities, hospitals and doctors and dental surgeries as well as the Department's leaflet unit at Stanmore, Middlesex and commercial mailing contractors.

The Department may use an outside mailing contractor where large amounts of material need to be sent out quickly. The Department was satisfied that Curzon had the facilities to do the work at very short notice within the time required.

Seventeen different mailing contractors have been employed to undertake this type of work since 1986.

The Department is committed to a policy of securing value for money. It keeps the costs of all its services under regular review.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many contracts have been awarded by his Department, in each of the last five years, to Curzon Marketing; how many firms tendered for the contract for distributing application forms for help with housing benefit; whether the tenders submitted by Curzon

Marketing was the lowest submitted; and if he will place a copy of the contract awarded to Curzon Marketing in the Library.

Mr. Portillo: Contracts with Curzon Marketing have been awarded through the COI and through the Department. The number of contracts awarded to Curzon Marketing in each of the last five years is:

Year	Number
1988-89	2 contracts
1987-88	7 contracts
1986-87	5 contracts
1985-86	1 contract
1984-85	0 contracts

For the housing benefit campaign Curzon Marketing were approached to see if it could handle the distribution at very short notice as an addition to work it was already doing for the Department. The extra work was not separately tendered because it was urgent. It is not departmental practice to give information which is commercially confidential, and the contract cannot therefore be placed in the Library.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many application forms necessary for those claiming help over housing benefit loss have been issued to date by Curzon Marketing.

Mr. Portillo: Up to 1 July, 800,000 copies of leaflet RR4 "Housing Benefit—New Rules" containing application forms have been sent out by Curzon Marketing.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the impact of housing benefit changes on widows; and what has been his response.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a considerable number of representations on behalf of widows and other groups. The Government responded on 27 April by announcing that the housing benefit capital limit would be raised from £6,000 to £8,000 and that transitional help would be available to those in certain vulnerable groups, including widows in receipt of a widow's pension, who had lost more than £2·50 a week in their housing benefit as a result of the changes.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the housing benefit paid to (a) a single pensioner under 79 years, (b) a single pensioner over 80 years, (c) a pensioner couple under 79 years, (d) a pensioner couple over 80 years, (e) a single person aged under 25 years, (f) a single person aged 25 to 59 years, (g) a single parent, working with one child under 11 years, (h) a single parent, working with two children over 11 years, (i) a couple, one working, without children, (j) a couple, one working, with one child under 11 years and (k) a couple, one working, with two children under 11 years where rent and rates are (i) 25 per cent. below average, (ii) average and (iii) 25 per cent. above average and gross weekly income is (x) at the level of unemployment benefit and (y) equivalent of earnings of £45, £55, £65, £75, £85, £95, £110 and £125 a week, under the current scheme and under the April 1988 changes to it; and, in each case, at what level of income entitlement to housing benefit would disappear, taking account where necessary of potential entitlement to family income supplement and family credit.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 3 December 1987]: This question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes have been made in criteria for the attendance allowance or in their interpretation; when these changes were made; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Statutory changes in the qualifying criteria for attendance allowance are listed in the table. Changes in judicial interpretation of the criteria which are of general application are published in "Reported Decisions of the Social Security Commissioner", copies of which are in the Library.

Date of change	Enactment of Statutory Instrument	The change
9 August 1972	National Insurance Act 1972	Introduced the lower rate of allowance for attendance needs by day or night (implemented in stages depending upon the disabled person's date of birth)
22 March 1979	Social Security Act 1979	Enabled people undergoing renal dialysis treatment at home to satisfy the criteria for the lower rate allowance
31 August 1987	Social Security (Attendance Allowance) Amendment Regulations 1987	Extended the lower rate allowance to people dialysing in hospital self-care units
15 March 1988	Social Security Act 1988	Amended the criterion for people in need of watching over at night because their disabilities pose a risk of substantial danger to themselves or others (in order to return the law to the position before the Court of Appeal decision in the Moran case)

AIDS

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in relation to the possible involvement of immunisation procedures in the aetiology of AIDS, whether there have been any trials in the United Kingdom involving adenovirus vaccines.

Mr. Newton: There have been no clinical trials of adenovirus vaccine in the United Kingdom.

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the value of income support for (a) a single person aged under 25 years, (b) a single person aged over 25 years, (c) a married couple, (d) a one-parent family with one child aged four years, (e) a married couple with two children aged four and six years, (f) a pensioner couple aged 65 years and (g) a disabled person with entitlement to disability premium, as a proportion of average net earnings for all males and manual male workers.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is given in the table:

Income support benefit rates—as a percentage of average earnings

	As percentage of average net earnings: All males	As percentage of average net earnings. All manual male workers
Single Person
age 16-17	11·1	13·3
age 18-24	15·0	17·8
age 25 and over	19·2	22·8
Married couple	28·4	33·5
Married couple with two children aged 4 and 6	37·3	43·4
One parent family with one child aged 4
aged 16-17	21·2	24·9
aged 18 and over	28·7	33·6
Pensioner couple aged 65	37·4	44·1
Pensioner couple aged 65 in receipt of Higher Pensioner Premium	38·7	45·7
Disabled person entitled to disability premium	26·7	31·7

Notes:

1. Net average earnings are taken to be provisional gross average earnings less tax and National Insurance contributions at the non-contracted out rate, plus child benefit where appropriate.
2. The calculations for one parent families incorporate the additional personal tax allowance in respect of a one parent family.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Advisory and Development Services

Mr. John: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any officials conducting the review into the statutory charges for advisory and development services are (a) a non-executive director of food companies and (b) otherwise formally connected with the private sector food industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 1 July 1988]: The answer to both questions is no.

Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research work his Ministry has funded at the River laboratory, Forest Stoke, Wareham, and the amount of money paid by his Ministry for each project over the last five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 July 1988.]: My Department has funded only one project at the River laboratory, Wareham over the last five years. This was concerned with salmonid—coarse fish interacations in chalk streams with funding in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 at £45,400, £47,900 and £48,000 respectively. This project ceased in 1985-86 and there has been no subsequent expenditure with the River laboratory.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Poultry Processing Premises (Millisle)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the former poultry processing premises at Abbey road, Millisle, County Down has been given change of use planning approval to be used as a prawn shelling plant.

Mr. Needham: No.

Social Fund

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of claims for maternity payments, funeral expenses, community care grants, budgeting loans and crisis loans made to the social fund in each social security office since 11 April.

Mr. Needham: The information for the period 11 April 1988 to 31 May 1988 (the latest date for which information is available) is given below:

Plastic Bullets

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total compensation paid in each year since 1972 under the criminal injuries compensation legislation to victims or the families of victims of death or injury by plastic bullets in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Executive

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answers to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East regarding Housing Executive contracts on 23 March, Official Report, column 169, and 29 April, Official Report, columns 304-6, he will indicate the reasons why the sums due to the contractors for contract D were not paid on a monthly basis as per normal contract conditions and why payment of £18,084 was delayed for 14 months after the end of the contract period; if he will show for that contract how much of the sums due at the end of each month were paid and how much not paid, or as much of such information as is available to him; and if he will show for that contract the contract price, the total actually paid to complete the contract including sums awarded at arbitration, the date of final payment and the date of practical completion.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I have been advised by the chief executive that payments were generally made in accordance with the terms of contract. In most cases payments were made monthly and in all cases payments were made within 14 days of amounts due being agreed with the contractor. No sums due were deliberately withheld and no amount of £18,084 was withheld for 14 months after the end of the contract period. Payments were made to the contractor during this period as the final account was progressively agreed. The other details requested are:

1. contract price: £125,531·85
2. total sums paid to complete the contract, including sums awarded at arbitration: £164,384
3. date of final payment: 12 May 1987
4. date of practical completion: 20 September 1983

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, further to his answers to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East regarding Housing Executive contracts on 23 March, Official Report, column

169, and 29 April, Official Report, columns 304-6, he will indicate the reasons why the sums due to the contractors for contract C were not paid on a monthly basis as per normal contract conditions and why payment of £47,585 was not paid for 16 months after the end of the contract period; if he will show for that contract how much of the sums due at the end of each month were paid, and how much not paid, or as much of such information as is available to him; and if he will show for that contract the contract price, the total sums actually paid to complete the contract, including sums awarded at arbitration, the date of final payment and the date of practical completion.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answers to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East of 29 April, Official Report, columns 304-6, if he will indicate who is responsible for the technical audit in the Housing Executive and to whom they report; whether the technical audit forms part of the general audit, published for public inspection; and when and where members of the public may inspect it.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I have been advised by the chief executive that technical audit is the responsibility of the director of technical services who reports directly to the chief executive. Technical audit does not form part of the general audit and is not available for public inspection.

Homelessness

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will identify submissions in response to the draft Housing (NI) Order which expressed concern about the indication that no more than £300,000 additional public expenditure is to be provided in respect of the new responsibilities for the homeless.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 5 July 1988]: Submissions on the draft Housing (Northern Ireland) Order received from the following 13 groups expressed concern about the indication that no more than £300,000 additional public expenditure is to be provided in respect of the new responsibilities for the homeless.

TRANSPORT

Working Hours

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report all statutory and/or voluntary restrictions on working hours, including the permitted hours of work, for (a) aircraft pilots, (b) heavy goods vehicle drivers, (c) train drivers and (d) shipping crews.

Mr. David Mitchell: The restrictions on working hours for the occupations listed are:

(a) Aircraft Pilots

The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for the regulation of aircraft pilots' working hours in accordance with the Air Navigation Order 1985.

The order requires that no member of the flight crew may fly for more than 100 hours in any consecutive 28-day period or more than 900 hours during the period of 12 months expiring at the end of the previous month.

Furthermore the order requires operators to establish a scheme for the regulation of flight times and that scheme must be approved by the Civil Aviation Authority. The authority provides guidelines to enable operators to develop acceptable schemes. The guidelines cover such matters as single or multiple crew, aeroplane or helicopter, rest periods, standby duty, days off, extended range operations by two pilots, delayed reporting times, acclimatisation to local time, and the records that must be kept.

The order also states that a person shall not act as a member of the crew of an aircraft if he knows or suspects that he is suffering from or is likely to suffer from such fatigue as may endanger the safety of the aircraft or its occupants.

(b) Heavy Goods Vehicle Drivers

Most heavy goods vehicle drivers are subject to the European Community rules on driving and rest contained in EC Regulation 3820/85. This requires 45 hours of continuous rest in a week and 11 hours continuous rest in any period of 24 hours. Driving is limited to nine hours a day (with an increase to 10 hours permitted twice in any week) and 90 hours in a fortnight.

Drivers exempt from the above rules, mainly those who carry out short-distance national haulage, are subject to the domestic rules applied by the Transport Act 1968, as modified. This limits driving to 10 hours and total work to 11 hours in any period of 24 hours.

(c) Train Drivers

There are no statutory restrictions for train drivers' hours of duty. Agreements between the railway management and the Trade Unions limit drivers to 39 hours' duty per week. Flexible rostering arrangements mean that drivers are on duty between seven to nine hours per day.

(d) Shipping Crews

The Merchant Shipping (Certification and Waterkeeping) Regulations 1982 impose a requirement that all watchkeepers should be adequately rested and fit for duty when going on watch. The new agreement between P&O European Ferries and the ratings employed on its ships operating out of Dover limits the hours that a rating can be required to work to 14 in any period of 24. At least six hours of the rest period must be consecutive. No other new agreement embodies a restriction on hours of work.

Channel Ferries (Safety)

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps, folowing the conclusions of Mr. Justice Sheen's inquiry into the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise, his Department is taking to ensure the better safety of channel ferries; how often inspections will now be carried out on such vessels; and what steps are being taken to bring those responsible for the accident to account.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer my hon. Friend to the list of recommendations and actions taken in response to the report of the court of formal investigation which I placed in the Library last month. The Department's surveyors will continue to survey all United Kingdom passenger ships annually and to conduct general inspections on a random basis throughout the year; foreign passenger vessels will be inspected regularly under port state control procedures. The question of prosecutions rests with the Director of Public Prosecutions. Two members of the crew of the Herald of Free Enterprise had their certificates suspended by decision of the court of formal investigation.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what actions have been taken to deal with the consequences of the increase in rail traffic in the London area with the opening of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail will be constructing an international passenger terminal at Waterloo to handle those trains terminating in London. It has engaged independent transport consultants to advise it of the impact on the surrounding highway network, and it is consulting London Regional Transport about the impact on the public transport system. Among the measures proposed are a reorganisation of traffic flows within the station and the construciton of additional direct access routes between the international terminal and the Underground. British Rail also plans, subject to appraisal of the necessary investment, to run through services to other destinations in the United Kingdom via the west London line, which will be improved accordingly.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail about very fast through train services from the United Kingdom to the European continent via the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is the responsibility of British Rail, in conjunction with its continental partners, to plan the pattern of rail services via the Channel tunnel, and to put forward investment proposals. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have discussed the pattern of services in general terms with the chairman from time to time. I expect to receive soon the board's report on the need for additional rail capacity in the longer term between London and the tunnel, and hope that it will be published shortly thereafter.

Rail Services (North Kent)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning British Rail commuter services to north-west Kent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received 16 letters about the reorganisation of services from north-west Kent to London following the announcement of British Rail's May 1988 timetable. Timetabling is a matter for the board, but I understand that the changes were made to reduce delays on these services by simplifying the structure of the services offered.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning British Rail services between London and Gillingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: None, since British Rail introduced its new timetable on 16 May.

Driving Tests

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average waiting time for a driving test appointment at (a) Belvedere and (b) Bexleyheath test centres.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The waiting times for Belvedere and Bexleyheath driving test centres are 16 and 15 weeks respectively. Although this represents an improvement on recent waiting times they are still too long. There is insufficient accommodation to increase the number of examiners at these centres. We are trying other ways to reduce the backlog.

Motor Accidents

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the percentage and numerical distribution of motor vehicle accidents according to major causes of accident in the last three years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The stats 19 accident report form used by the police does not record the causes of accidents.

Driver Rehabilitation Scheme, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions his Department has drawn from the Nottinghamshire driver rehabilitation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Nottinghamshire police have completed their own report on the experimental rehabilitation scheme and conclude that such schemes could make a worthwhile contribution to road safety. They have passed their report to the transport and road research laboratory for further analysis. That analysis is not yet complete. We expect to receive a report from TRRL shortly.

Speed Limits

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to enable local authorities to reduce speed limits in residential areas under their control.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local authorities may apply to the Department for authorisation of speed limits below 30 mph. These are viewed sympathetically when linked to speed—reducing engineering measures. Very few applications have been received. There are engineering techniques which effectively reduce speeds.

Traffic Calming

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department possesses on legislation in other European countries which gives local or regional governments statutory powers to enforce traffic-calming regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are aware of the broad legal framework under which traffic—calming measures are implemented in the Netherlands, West Germany, and Denmark. Officials from the Department have had discussions in those countries about legal and other aspects.

M27-M3 Link

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the inspector's report of the latest public inquiry about the final motorway link between the M27 and M3 motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The re-opened public inquiry into the Bar End to Compton section of the M3 motorway extension finished in March. We hope to receive the independent inspector's report in the autumn.

DVLC

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many persons are employed at the driver and vehicle licensing centre and at what annual cost; how many requests are received per annum as to details of the registered number of a vehicle; and in what period of time the average response for this information is made.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The driver and vehicle licensing directorate employs 5,413 staff. A total of 3,906 work at the centre. The remainder are employed in the network of vehicle registration offices located throughout Great Britain. This year's pay bill is expected to be £45·7 million.

In 1987 DVLC received 4·7 million inquiries of the vehicle record. Urgent telephone inquiries from the police and most other telephone inquiries were dealt with immediately; the average response time for written inquiries was about six days, and three to four days for inquiries received by magnetic tape.

Driving Instructors

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will in future inform all approved driving instructors of their grading after a check test.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The Department has already agreed to tell ADIs their check test grading at the end of the test.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that information relating to the grading of approved driving instructors is available to each individual driving instructor free of charge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In future an instructor will be told the check test grading at the end of each test. When the register of approved driving instructors' records are transferred to a computer, any ADI will have the right of access, under the Data Protection Act, to details of the information held, including check test grading, on payment of the requisite fee. The provision of information on request free of charge, even of check test grading only, would take considerable resources, the cost of which would have to be passed on to all ADIs in increased fees.

Balham Underground Station (Fire)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the fire at Balham underground station on Monday 4 July.

Mr. David Mitchell: At 18.12 on Monday 4 July 1988 smoke was reported in the northbound tunnel of the Northern line between Balham and Clapham. The tunnel was inspected by the station manager and the fire brigade, but the cause of the smoke could not be determined. Services were delayed for a maximum of 23 minutes.

London Transport (Fares)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the likely increase of London Transport fare levels in the next two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The level and structure of fares is a matter for the board of London Regional Transport. It is for it to make its own announcements about future fares.

Traffic Congestion (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the total annual cost arising from traffic congestion in London in each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no generally agreed basis for calculating total annual congestion costs in London. The available information about traffic volumes and speeds is published annually in a statistics bulletin entitled "London Traffic Monitoring". Copies have been placed in the Library.

Travelcard and Capitalcard

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning the future of Travelcard and Capitalcard in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Fares and ticketing are matters for the public transport operators. LRT has set out its strategy covering this and other matters in its statement of strategy for 1988-91, published on 23 June.

Demonstration Flights

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what regulations govern aircraft demonstration flights at aerodromes whose dimensions would not permit commercial operation of those flights under a one-engine-out limitation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Such flights are governed by the appropriate provisions of the Air Navigation Order 1985 —in particular articles 47 and 48.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 136

SESSION 1987–88

27th June–8th July 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
